Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

SECOND SESSION OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

VOLUME LXII—PART 6

APRIL 13 TO MAY 8, 1922

(Pages 5457–6554)

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1922

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 13, 1922.

(Legislative day of Monday, April 10, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCumber	Pomerene
Ball	Gooding	McKinley	Sheppard
Borah	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	Harreld	Moses	Spencer
Bursum	Harris	Myers	Sterling
Calder	Harrison	Nelson	Sutherland
Capper	Heflin	New	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Culberson	Kellogg	Nicholson	Trammell
Cummins	Kendrick	Norbeck	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	King	Oddie	Warren
Dillingham	Ladd	Overman	Watson, Ga.
du Pont	La Follette	Page	Weller
Edge	Lenroot	Pepper	Williams
Ernst	Lodge	Phipps	Willis
Fernald	McCormick	Poindexter

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present certain resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation providing adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War, and also resolutions relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be received and printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
In the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two.

Resolutions urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War.

Whereas national honor demands that the services of men and women who served their country during the World War should be fittingly appreciated; and

Whereas adjusted compensation should be paid to such men and women as evidence of the Nation's regard for their services: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully urges upon Congress the enactment forthwith of such legislation as will provide adjusted compensation for men and women who were in the service of the United States during the World War; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted March 15, 1922.
In senate, adopted in concurrence March 29, 1922.
A true copy.
Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
In the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two.

Order relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people.

Whereas the supreme council of the allied peace conference meeting at San Remo recognized the right of the Jewish nation to a national existence in Palestine and conferred upon Great Britain a mandate over Palestine; and

Whereas the various great nations of the world have approved the establishment of the national homeland for the Jews in Palestine; and

Whereas the people of the United States individually and through their spokesmen in Congress, and by leading men in all walks of life, have expressed their gratification at the realization of the national hopes of the Jews; and

Whereas the General Court of Massachusetts views with pleasure the progress of the Jewish people in Palestine in developing the economic resources of the country, in founding institutions of learning, and in creating a spiritual center, so that it may the better serve mankind: Therefore be it

Ordered, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges the Government of the United States of America formally to recognize the present status of the Jewish people in Palestine and thus to approve the fulfillment of its yearning desire for a national home in the land of its forefathers; and be it further Ordered, That copies of this order be sent by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts, and to the Zionist Organization of America.

In house of representatives, adopted March 29, 1922.
In senate, adopted in concurrence March 29, 922.
A true copy.
Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a resolution adopted by the directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Columbus, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring the enactment of Senate bill 3254, to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Painters' Union No. 370, of Casper, Wyo., remonstrating against the imposition of increased tariff duties on linseed oil, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 7210. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars others than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 596); and

H. R. 7827. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 597).

ELSIE HUDSON.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 248) submitted by Mr. ODDIE March 3, 1922, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Elsie Hudson, widow of J. Lloyd Hudson, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

23334

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3455) providing for the cession to the State of Virginia of sovereignty over a tract of land located at Battery Cove, near Alexandria, Va., and for the conveyance thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3456) granting a pension to Ellen Leahy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3458) to authorize the Niagara River Bridge Co. to reconstruct its present bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada, or to remove its present bridge and construct, maintain, and operate a new bridge across the said river; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3459) granting a pension to Charles Edwards (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) providing for survey of the Potomac River banks from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls with a view to possible extension of the District park system; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE IN WYOMING.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 3457) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes."

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to submit just a word in explanation of the bill which I have just introduced.

Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3, known as the Teapot Dome, is an oil and gas reserve in the State of Wyoming immediately adjoining the famous Salt Creek pool. Government experts and oil men universally regard it as one of the best oil structures in the country. It covers approximately 6,000 or 7,000 acres of land and the minimum oil content has been estimated to be 30,000,000 barrels. This tract was exempted from the provisions of the leasing act enacted on Feberuary 25, 1920, and it was generally assumed that many years would probably elapse before any attempt was made to develop it.

The naval appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, carried a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to develop the naval reserves either directly by agents and employees of the Government or indirectly by lease with private individuals. Under the authority of that act several leases have been granted upon the California petroleum reserves, where, because of private titles which had vested prior to the creation of the reserves, the oil was being extracted and it was deemed advisable, in order to protect the Government, that the leases should be granted.

In the Teapot Dome there are no producing wells. It was recently reported, however, that various private oil interests have been negotiating with the Navy Department and with the Department of the Interior, the Secretary of which, by order of the President, now has authority over the naval reserves, for leases upon the Teapot Dome. The general leasing act provides a minimum royalty of 12½ per cent upon all lands developed under this authority, but in the Salt Creek field the royalties heretofore charged have been as high as 33⅓ per cent and a similar royalty is being charged by the State of Wyoming on school lands in the Salt Creek field. A portion of these royalties, by the terms of the leasing act, is reserved for the use of the State. At the present time there is no provision of law governing royalties that may be charged on the naval reserves and no provision for the protection of the State.

The bill which I have introduced is designed to compensate the State of Wyoming in a small measure for the loss of this valuable and extensive area within her boundaries. Under the old system this land would have passed into private ownership and the State would have been vested with the authority to tax it. Under the new system by which the ownership is retained in the Federal Government the State, of course, is completely deprived of the power of taxation, although it will have the same responsibility for building roads and maintaining schools and providing all the formal functions of State and local Government for which it would have been responsible under the old rule. The same reasons therefore which prompted Congress to provide for the distribution of the royalties under the leasing act should now operate to the same effect as regards the Teapot Dome.

I have therefore introduced this bill for the purpose of protecting my State in that particular. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment proposing to pay $3,000 to Alice Potter, widow of Julian Potter, late consul to Rouen, France, being one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died as a result of illness incurred in the Consular Service, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11065, the Departments of State and Justice appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment proposing to include projects authorized at the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress in the provision of the War Department appropriation bill relative to preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized, and so forth, $42,815,661, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10871, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MCCUMBER submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 21), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 27,000 additional copies be printed, of which 10,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 15,000 for the House document room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

INTERNATIONAL REFORM BUREAU.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in the regular RECORD type, a statement from Mr. C. S. Longacre, general secretary of the Religious Liberty Association, in answer to certain statements made in regard to him in the RECORD a few days ago.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY ASSOCIATION,
Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., April 3, 1922.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR POINDEXTER: I regret exceedingly that Dr. W. F. Crafts, the superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, chose the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as the medium through which to malign and misrepresent the Seventh-day Adventist denomination, their publications, their doctrines, the Religious Liberty Association, and me in particular. Likewise, he has brought a charge against me which he claims involves the integrity of certain Congressmen who are directors of the board of the Reform Bureau. In justice to the Congressmen involved, as well as to me, I think I ought to be given the opportunity of exonerating these Congressmen in the public eye from being involved in the alleged charge. All I ask, in justice to them as well as to me, is that I be permitted to defend myself through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, since the RECORD was made the medium of an unjustifiable attack upon me relative to the uprightness of several Congressmen.

Doctor Crafts and I have been engaged in a religious controversy for some time, and it is most unfortunate that Doctor Crafts chose the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, not only to make public his views but to misrepresent the doctrines and views of another Christian organization, as he did in the RECORD of March 18, 1922. I do not believe that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should give countenance to such unsavory methods and unhallowed purposes. Since the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been employed as a medium through which to make a false and vicious attack upon a highly respectable and Christian organization, essential justice demands that the accused be allowed to make its defense through the same medium.

Doctor Crafts gave an interview to the various newspapers in which it was alleged that he stated that he expected to obtain a million dollars in a few days to aid him in putting his reform measures through Congress. The Washington Times of December 10, 1920, published the following interview from Doctor Crafts relative to the million-dollar fund, under this striking caption:

SURE OF MILLION TO DYE UNITED STATES "BLUE," CRAFTS SAYS.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, founder of the International Reform Bureau, announced to-day that within the next three years he is going to spend $1,000,000 in safeguarding prohibition, extending the "blue laws," and amending the Federal Constitution so that the United States will be designated as a "Christian Nation."

"One of my reasons," he explained, "is to prevent any further excuse for the plea that Bible readings in the schools and similar American Christian institutions are unconstitutional."

Asked where he expected to get the $1,000,000 he requires in his enlarged reform program for Christianizing and dry cleaning and dyeing "blue" the United States, he replied quite seriously and in a very matter of fact way:

"Oh, I am expecting that million almost any day now. I could have had it long before this if it were not for the fact that I am so busy with other things I had not quite got to it."

The Washington Star of December 10, 1920, likewise published the following under a somewhat similar caption:

WOULD SPEND MILLION TO GET REFORM LAWS—REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS ANNOUNCES AIMS OF INTERNATIONAL BUREAU CONFERENCE TO-DAY.

It is expected the International Reform Bureau will spend $1,000,000 within the next three years in safeguarding prohibition, extending the "blue laws," and amending the Federal Constitution, so that the United States will be designated as a "Christian Nation," according to Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent and treasurer of the bureau.

Doctor Crafts said he expected to get the money almost any time to carry on this work. He said he could have had it long before this if it were not for the fact that he was so busy with other things.

In connection with these interviews given the newspapers, Doctor Crafts is alleged as having said that if the Republican Congress did not pass the bills which he was sponsoring in Congress he was going to notify "the God-fearing people back home which Representatives have been derelict." (Washington Herald, December 8, 1920.)

Upon the strength of these newspaper reports of Doctor Crafts's interviews and statements made to the public in lectures I published the following statement in the Liberty Magazine of the third quarter of 1921, which statement Doctor Crafts quoted in his letter printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 18, 1922:

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, the superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, who styles himself a "professional reformer" and "Christian lobbyist" at Washington, according to published reports of the Washington papers, recently threatened every Congressman with political beheadal by the churches, whose animosity he would stir up by a slush fund of a million dollars which was at his command if Congress did not pass his pet Sunday bills which were then pending.

Concerning this million-dollar fund referred to above, based on Doctor Crafts's interview to the newspapers, he takes exception to it because I called it a slush fund and said he had it "at his command," whereas it was still prospective and he was "expecting" it. But Doctor Crafts told the newspapers that he was "expecting that million almost any day now."

Such language could not mean anything else but that he had it "at his command," according to newspaper reports. Moreover, I did not involve a single Congressman's integrity, either in the receiving or dispensing of this large sum of money. I stated expressly that according to newspaper reports Doctor Crafts himself was going to use this money for propaganda work in "the churches, whose animosity he would stir up" by the means of this large fund that was "at his command." If a Congressman wants to be included in this statement, he will have to put himself there by his own choice. I certainly did not include him. Neither did the newspapers or I claim that the money was to be used by Doctor Crafts for any other purpose than propaganda work among the churches. But we were all agreed, who made comments on this fund, that it was an exceedingly large sum of money for one man to spend, especially when some of it was to be utilized to notify the folks back home which of the Congressmen were "derelict."

I called this fund a "slush fund" because of its vastness, and explained my meaning in the Liberty Magazine as follows:

When we called this large sum of money a "slush fund" we did not mean to imply that Doctor Crafts obtained it or was going to use it in a corrupt way, but that it was too much money for one person to spend to put reform measures through Congress, and, as the Washington papers alleged, to notifying "the God-fearing people back home which Representatives have been derelict." We used the term in the same sense as a prominent United States Senator used it recently when he charged another Senator with securing his election by means of a "slush fund." He said he did not intend to go behind the returns and intimate that the money was obtained or used by the Senator in a corrupt way, but that such a large sum was too much money to spend for the purpose to which it was devoted in a political campaign. (See Liberty, first quarter, 1922.)

All these facts were well known to Doctor Crafts before he sent his letter to Senator MYERS to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in which he insists in putting a contrary construction upon my words and explanations.

Doctor Crafts further states in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I—joined in the nation-wide cry that a Puritan "blue law" was pending in Congress for the whole country when "no national Sunday law, drastic or otherwise, has been introduced by anyone in Congress in the quarter century of the reform bureau's history."

In this Doctor Crafts grossly misrepresents us of the opposition to the compulsory Sunday observance bills proposed to Congress. During the last 25 years more than 70 Sunday bills have been introduced into Congress at the instigation of religious societies for the District of Columbia, and on July 13, 1921, after several futile attempts during 1920, a national Sunday law bill of the most drastic character was introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and printed in full in connection with a lengthy petition from the Methodist Church South, praying for its passage. Petitions and resolutions were coming from all parts of the country asking Congress to pass this proposed national Sunday law. It was this proposed bill that we were opposing, and yet Doctor Crafts says there was no national Sunday issue before the Nation. Doctor Crafts himself sponsored a national Sunday law bill and carried on a vigorous campaign in its behalf during the Fiftieth and Fifty-first sessions of Congress. The bill was so drastic that no person or corporation was permitted to perform "any secular work, labor, or business," works of necessity and mercy only excepted on Sunday, all "amusement and recreation" was prohibited "in any Territory, District, vessel, or place subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States," and section 2 of this national Sunday bill provided "that no mails or mail matter shall hereafter be transported in time of peace over any land postal route" "during any part of the first day of the week"; likewise "the prosecution of commerce between the States" was prohibited on the first day of the week as not being in harmony with "its observance as a day of religious worship."

It was purely a religious measure, and placed on a religious basis, as the title of the bill stated that its purpose was "to promote its observance as a day of religious worship." We were not only opposing their proposed religious measures in Congress but the future aims of the religious organizations which are seeking to legalize the obligations of the Christian religion. Doctor Crafts admits that the pending Sunday legislation is merely the entering wedge for more stringent legislation which is to follow.

Doctor Crafts asserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I was the "chaplain for the motley crowd of bootleggers, prize fighters, gamblers, and Sunday profiteers," and that the Religious Liberty Association was in "alliance" with this "selfish" and "motley crowd."

This is not the first time that Doctor Crafts has made this false charge in print not only against me but against the denomination which I represent. He has been repeatedly informed of the falsity and injustice of this charge, and yet he insists on making it in print and from the platform whenever it suits his purpose to malign and misrepresent us before the public. He knows, as everyone else does who knows us, that we are a strictly temperance people, abstaining both from the use of liquor and tobacco, and that we would not tolerate for any consideration any of this "motley crowd" in church fellowship. The fact that some of these folks are opposed to compulsory Sunday observance laws and come to hear me lecture, and sign the petitions protesting against their enactment, is no more justification to put me in the same class than if a lot of robbers came to hear Doctor Crafts lecture against the use of opium and signed his petition, and as a consequence I should call him the "chaplain of this motley crowd." Doctor Crafts finds fault in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because Seventh-day Adventists publish a book entitled "'Bible Readings,' whose sectarian purpose is disguised," because they put the imprint of their publishing house upon the book instead of the denominational name. There are hundreds of books published by the Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists that only bear the publisher's imprint, but he says not a word to condemn them.

He asserts in the RECORD that "Seventh-day Adventists have just sent out 1,000,000 copies of an extra edition of the Liberty Magazine," and that "in each of these magazines is a printed petition to Congress that confuses the ignorant." We wish to inform Doctor Crafts that judges of the highest courts in the States, hundreds of lawyers, newspaper and magazine editors, deans of universities and professors in colleges, professional men in every walk of life, including hundreds of clergymen of every faith, have not only placed their names upon the petitions but have called for the petitions protesting against these obnoxious Sunday bills which are now pending in Congress.

Doctor Crafts wants to know what the difference is between "threatening Congress with 'a million-dollar slush fund'" and "flooding Congress with a million of such disguised sectarian petitions."

There is a world of difference between a church organization as such spending $1,000,000 to induce Congress to enact religious obligations into civil law and to enforce them at the point of the policeman's baton and between citizens as such sending in petitions to Congressmen asking them to keep their hands off of religion by law and to remain loyal to the constitutional guaranties of civil and religious liberty as conceived by the founders of this Republic. The church has no business as such in politics. We should not send our petitions to Congress as Presbyterians, Methodists, or Adventists, but as citizens. Doctor Crafts ridicules us in the RECORD because we assume that if Congress compels people to observe Sunday that Congress "must ere long compel Sunday worship under penalty of death," but that the existing Sunday laws in the States have no such effect now. But we can not forget the past. The Puritans, when they were in full power in New England, executed the death penalty for the violation of any one of 13 religious obligations, of which a compulsory Sunday observance law was simply one.

What good men did before they are likely to do again under similar conditions when they are clothed with the power. Hundreds of Seventh-day Adventists have had to spend months and years in solitary confinement in prisons and in the chain gangs in the United States during recent years as the result of religious prejudice and persecution under the existing Sunday laws in the various States. We are not dealing with a theory but with actual experiences.

The writer frequently received letters from preachers and religious zealots stating that he ought to be "hung," "lynched," and "exiled" for opposing the Sunday law measures. With Madison we hold that the only way of avoiding the evil consequences of religious legislation is by denying the principles. A legal religion has all the possibilities of an inferno couched in its very incipiency. We deny the first step in that direction because it embraces the last step.

Doctor Crafts claims in the RECORD that we slur the United States Government in representing it by "a horned hog," and that it is to become a persecuting power. Doctor Crafts has been repeatedly informed that we never represented the United States Government by "a horned hog," as he asserts. We symbolize the United States as John the Revelator did in the latter part of the thirteenth chapter of Revelation by a two-horned beast having the characteristics of a lamb and a lion, and not as "a two-horned hog," as Doctor Crafts charges in the RECORD. England is politically represented by a lion, Russia by a bear, and the United States by a bird of prey—the American eagle. But the Bible has symbols of its own to represent nations. God symbolized ancient Babylon by a lion, Medo-Persia by a bear, Greece by a leopard, and the Roman Empire by a fierce-looking dragon. But God represented the United States by a beast having the characteristics of a lamb. Dr. De Witt Talmage agreed that this third beast of Revelation xiii represented the United States. No more dignified symbol was ever employed by inspiration to represent a nation.

We believe that the United States Government is the noblest creation of man—a gem of gems among the nations of earth, and a star of the first magnitude. The principles upon which the American Republic was founded were divinely ordained as conceived by its founders. The total separation of church and state, the guaranties of religious freedom, the inherent rights of the conscience of the individual, and the inalienable rights of all men, are the principles which have made this Nation the greatest and grandest of all nations. The principles of civil and religious liberty as conceived by Washington, Jefferson, and Madison are our principles. We believe in American democracy and ideals as set forth by the founders of our glorious Republic, and we are opposed to any movement that seeks to pervert and override the American guaranties of human rights. What we do believe and teach relative to the United States in prophecy is that the time will come that the latter part of the thirteenth chapter of Revelation, referred to by Doctor Crafts, will be fulfilled in the United States, and that religious organizations will arise in this country seeking to overthrow the guaranties of human liberty and the free exercise of the conscience, and that these oppressive and intolerant religious societies will combine, federate, and consolidate themselves into a powerful ecclesiastical machine to bring power and influence to bear upon our political institutions for the purpose of legalizing religious obligations under the most drastic penalties.

Unless present-day tendencies in America are checked along this line it will not be long till legislation will be enacted at the dictation of religious organizations, and this prophecy of the religious organizations in America will be fulfilled. We believe that this explanation of our true position is due the readers of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in lieu of the misrepresentations which were printed.

Yours for liberty, truth, and equal justice,

C. S. LONGACRE,
General Secretary Religious Liberty Association.

THE HAWAIIAN SITUATION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, ex-Senator Phelan, from the State of California, has just returned from a trip around the world, stopping en route in Hawaii. He has committed to paper some studies he made as to conditions in the Hawaiian Islands. I ask unanimous consent that his statement be printed in the RECORD in the regular RECORD type and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

THE HAWAIIAN SITUATION.

[By Hon. James D. Phelan.]

The conditions in the Territory of Hawaii require Federal attention. The "gentlemen's agreement"—that mongrel thing, neither treaty nor law—which was intended to save California without offending Japan, left Hawaii unprotected. There was no restriction put upon immigration there.

Hawaii was abandoned to the Japanese by the blundering policy of our Government. How far the sugar planters may be responsible for this is another question. They wanted labor. They spent millions in immigration enterprises, seeking relief from Portugal, the Azores, the Philippines, and Porto Rico. Some immigrants proved of no value; others fled to the continental United States, where the European workers were welcome. Finally the Japanese, beginning in 1885, were permitted to come, and now, by immigration and birth, compose about one-half the entire population of this American Territory. The Chinese are barred by the exclusion law.

Briefly, the question of Hawaii is: Of what value are the islands to the United States, and to what extent do the Japanese depreciate their value?

Hawaii is an indispensable base for American naval operations. The menace in the Pacific is from Japan, ambitious and aggressive. It is inconsistent with our national interests to harbor in the islands a people, now composing one-half their entire population, who owe loyalty and military service to Japan and can not be Americanized.

In the second place, the production of wealth in American control is highly desirable for the encouragement of our commerce. The surplus products of our fields and industries find in Hawaii a natural market. Should control pass to the Japanese the military and commercial situation would reach a critical stage. Therefore, as a precaution, if not a cure, the American planters should be protected against absorption by Japanese. Out of 45,000 agricultural workers required there is now a labor shortage of 14,500. The planters can not fill the gap. The Japanese, who struck when they were getting $3 per day—wages and bonus—plus house, garden, medical attendance, free water and free firewood, led the planters to believe that the unexpected move was designed to embarrass them to the point of surrender, because at about the same time Japanese, or persons representing them, according to Walter F. Dillingham, official representative of the Territory, made offers to purchase plantations outright, and so end all trouble.

In California, farmers under such pressure sold their lands. The Hawaiian planters decided to fight. Now, it appears to me that this is not solely a planters' fight. It is a fight for an American-controlled Hawaii. It is a comparatively easy matter for these aliens to capture the soil if the islanders are indifferent. Aliens may acquire land, privately owned, in the Territories of the United States, but not public land; so the door is open, as usual, and that is the only "open-door" policy that is pleasing to Japan.

The planters ask that the restrictions of the immigration laws be relaxed in favor of Hawaii for five years in order to fill the labor deficiency from sources other than Japan. If they can not get help, they are dependent on Japanese immigration. Field labor there repels and does not hold the second generation of Japanese. Many experiments have been tried to induce the agricultural settlement of the islands by, for instance, the Portuguese, but so long as they are free to leave they desert the islands.

A permanent solution of the problem might be found in such a system, inaugurated and maintained by the Territory, as the "land settlement board" plan in California—borrowed in turn from Australia—by putting desirable settlers on the soil under attractive conditions of land purchase and long payments, or by fixing wages at a basic rate, as was done in Hawaii during the war, and a bonus, determined by the market price of sugar. This would take time, but I believe it would serve the best interests of the Territory to tax itself and vigorously bring it about.

The Japanese, with all the influence and power of their Government, are making a firm stand. They have a close association which imposes taxes on its members—$1,000,000 was raised during the strike—and their consul directs every move. It is Japan governing a Japanese province under the Stars and Stripes. They have extensive propaganda. Although the Japanese are the deadliest enemies to American labor, on account of their skill, industry, low standards, and general adaptability, white labor leaders in the islands took Japanese money to go to Washington to save Hawaii for the Japanese.

There is little doubt but that the planters, frightened at the aggressive stand taken by the Japanese, want to introduce Chinese as a quick and available remedy. They say very frankly that they can not hold out. They have no other labor. As the Japanese made unreasonable demands, which were rejected, and the strike was finally broken, and then only on the motion of a special commissioner from Japan, they justly fear their existence depends on the will of Japan.

Can America tolerate such a condition in a country necessary for the national defense and splendidly contributing to its commerce and wealth?

Our Government moves slowly. With vigor, a land settlement by desirable immigrants might be essayed and a Federal commission might be appointed, with a man like Doctor Elwood at its head to put such settlers on the land after purchasing the plantations. But Doctor Mead is sorely needed in California. Congress has full jurisdiction over Territories, and can change their form of government. Inevitably in a few years Hawaii will lose its American institutions of its own motion in order to avoid the political control of native-born Japanese.

Why not now take up the two questions in a big way? Why temporize? The expedient proposed to gain time, namely, to admit a limited number of Chinese for five years, might give our Government a chance to turn around, like the strategic move of a general confronted with stubborn facts and an agile enemy. It would be distinctly distasteful to the Japanese, because they can not meet Chinese competition at home or abroad. The Chinese wants are few, their industry well known, their skill in agriculture unquestioned. They would be able to replace the Japanese or economically destroy them, as the Vedalia cardinalis devoured the pests in the California orchards.

Furthermore, the Chinese make a good and acceptable blend with the native Hawaiian population. They add something to the strain which results advantageously, unlike the Eurasian combination. The Chinese have no powerful and aggressive Government behind them, and they can be required to leave at the expiration of their time should our Government in its wisdom decide to reorganize Hawaii.

Until the pressure of population fills up the waste places of continental United States and we secure for ourselves a homogeneous and indissoluble union of minds and hearts by restricted immigration and the domestic development of patriotic purposes I fear the people of this country will be slow, too slow, to grasp with prophetic vision the imminence of danger and the need of action. The vice of the United States is living only from day to day. Since it is our habit to move slowly, because there is no leadership under the congressional system, let us inquire in what order we should proceed. If we had a parliamentary system, the premier would propose a measure and press it with the weight of the Government to a speedy conclusion. It would win or he would lose and be compelled at once to appeal to the country on that issue. We dawdle; we palaver with diplomatists who take easy advantage of the national habit of putting things off, which invariably increases difficulties and multiplies probelms.

Look at unhappy California. The Federal Government refused to recognize the Japanese menace until to-day. Now there are 100,000 reasons urged by Japan why we should do nothing. The rights of resident Japanese—100,000 in one State and 350,000 in the United States—unassimilable, indigestible, creating economic disturbance and labor distress, are pressing for consideration. They steal in between the meshes of the law and breed with alarming rapidity.

Let us assume that all are agreed on a rigorous exclusion policy. We still have the problem. We must scatter the Japanese in California to save the rural population. I see but two ways of doing it: By firmly denying them naturalization and land ownership—which we do now—and so cause them to seek other fields; and by effecting at the same time land settlement on a generous scale under State auspices, so as to secure a desirable population, American and clearly, potentially American, which will be loyal to the country in peace and war.

The Japanese born on the soil are American citizens by the Constitution. As a matter of fact, Japan claims and holds them to a strict allegiance to herself. In the Hawaiian trouble last year, the first opportunity for observation, the native Japanese, who professed American predilections, took orders from Japan through the "Imperium in Imperio" presided over by the consular service. A Japanese born on the soil before he attains 17 years of age can theoretically renounce his Japanese citizenship provided Japan consents. That is the joker. Japan rarely asked, never consents.

If the native Japanese were not ineradicably Japanese, without our power biologically to assimilate so as to maintain the standards of our civilization, we might tolerate a temporary evil. "The melting pot," however, rebels. It is not temporary. We can not, side by side, have two contending races without perpetuating a race problem, and of this have we not had enough? The Civil War is a monument to nonassimilability. For this reason the Constitution should be amended so that not all persons, but only those granted the precious privilege by Congress, should become citizens by birth. It is treating too lightly a great inheritance. Shall one patriotic society—like the American Legion, which has already expressed itself on the Japanese question—take the leadership of this movement? Prohibition and woman's suffrage organizations have shown the way to constitutional reform.

Because they are born in the sugar plantations of Hawaii a brood of Japanese, formidable in numbers, are now free to come to continental United States, where they can own and lease land and lay deep the foundation of an alien colony, already a menace. So, too, the equally large brood generating day by day in the Golden State, swarming it and overwhelming white civilization, brings in a yellow tide. These are two alarming breeding grounds endangering the whole country.

Unless we check the fecundity of the Japanese in America—continental and insular—the danger will grow daily; but that we can not do. More brides are coming in than before the alleged restrictions imposed by Japan. Japan apparently encourages in every way, as by the extension of the period of time within which a returned subject is exposed to military duty at home, the building up of its colonial empire by births. Steamship rates are so made for the round trip on their own ships that the expense of a bride is no greater than by the former photograph marriage. Our "gentleman's agreement" permits the laborer to go to Japan and return with a wife. Our national policy of preserving our population and our institutions should be sternly declared, and to effect it a new leadership should demand these changes:

(1) The termination of the treaty of 1911 (six months' notice is required).

(2) The passage of an exclusion law like the one now applying to Chinese, which would end the so-called "gentlemen's agreement."

(3) An amendment to the Federal Constitution, which now unhappily gives citizenship to all persons born on the soil.

(4) Universal disarmament or, as an alternative, the maintenance of the American Navy at its highest efficiency.

JAMES D. PHELAN.

HONOLULU, October 18, 1921.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, on yesterday afternoon, in order to avoid a roll call, I asked that the amendment which is found on page 26, line 8, of the pending bill be passed over until to-day. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] expressed a desire to be heard on the amendment, which is the one pertaining to the free distribution of seeds. I think, in view of the practical promise then made, that I should now ask that we recur to the amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment referred to by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations which was passed over is on page 26, line 8, to strike out the clause beginning in line 8, relative to the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, down to and including line 22, on page 28.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, it had been my hope that following the call for a quorum the Senator from Oregon [Mr.

McNARY] would assure the calling of the roll a second time in order that there might be some Senators on the other side present who would care to-day to join Governor Cox in the avowal of intention to bring the United States into the League of Nations. Those who read the newspapers during the morning will have noted that yesterday Governor Cox again declared his belief that the United States ought to subscribe to the covenant of the league and ought to assume the responsibilities of membership therein.

It is true that Governor Cox adverted to what he termed the sins of omission or commission of the Republican administration and the Republican majority in Congress. We are very ready to discuss them; doubtless we shall discuss them here and elsewhere before the election. If you please, sir, we are as ready as the Senators on the other side of the Chamber to debate the domestic issues.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMICK. In a moment. The Senator from Mississippi, who just rose, will bear me out when I say that here and elsewhere I have discussed the record of the Republican administration and majority in Congress, as I have the record of the last administration and the preceding Democratic majority; but I seek to-day some single Democratic Senator who will join the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in avowing his agreement with Governor Cox to demand that the United States enter the League of Nations.

It may be that the Senator from Mississippi, as secure as the Senator from Texas in the devotion of his constituents to himself and to his party, may join Governor Cox; but I listen for the voice of some Democratic Senator from a State which sometimes may cast its electoral vote for a Republican President, or which at some time may elect a Republican Senator; I wait to hear a call that America enter the league from a Democratic Senator representing a truly free constituency, one which may voice its judgment upon the issue of the League of Nations. Is there no such Democratic Senator who will declare again that the United States should go to Geneva, there to petition for admission to the league?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield now before he takes his seat?

Mr. McCORMICK. Very readily.

Mr. HARRISON. There was an election in the State of the Senator from Illinois day before yesterday.

Mr. McCORMICK. That was a primary election.

Mr. HARRISON. And I understand that one of the Representatives, who happens to be a member of the present Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and a great personal and political ally of the Senator from Illinois, and who was indorsed in a speech by the Senator from Illinois, as well as by the present administration, was defeated. I am curious to know if, in the primary in which the friend and political ally of the Senator from Illinois, and I might say a most estimable gentleman, went down by quite a large majority, and succumbed to one who was running on an anti-administration ticket, the Senator's friend indorsed the stand of the Senator from Illinois when the Senator from Illinois voted for the four-power pact?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is not familiar with political conditions in Illinois. He is as abysmally ignorant of them as am I of political conditions in Mississippi. My able friends who served in the other House of Congress, and who were defeated in the recent primary, were neither of them my political allies, nor in any primary have they been actively associated with me.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator from Illinois has not answered my question.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Representative in question indorse the stand of the Senator from Illinois when the Senator from Illinois voted for the four-power pact?

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no idea what position that gentleman took in the primary. I have said to the Senator from Mississippi that neither of my friends who were defeated for Congress in that primary have been actively associated with me in any primary contests in Illinois.

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps the Senator's friends in Illinois realize that the Senator from Illinois really was not so strong for the four-power pact as his vote indicated, anyway.

Mr. McCORMICK. Perhaps there are Senators on the other side of the Chamber who are not as strong for the League of Nations this year as their votes last year indicated. The number of Laodiceans yonder increased with the years, it would seem.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, is the question now pending the amendment to strike out the appropriation which provides for the free distribution of seed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on pages 26, 27, and 28.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Illinois in his speech the other day, in which he attempted to determine the campaign issues for the coming year, quoted somewhat liberally from an address delivered by Governor Cox at the Jefferson day banquet in New York. I think in justice to Governor Cox, because of the frequent allusions to the address, it should appear in the RECORD. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the address be inserted in the RECORD and printed in 8-point type.

Mr. McCORMICK. This is the address in full, I trust.

Mr. KING. It is the address in full, and I am sure that the Senator, after having read it, will feel like deleting some of his remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the speech referred to will be placed in the RECORD.

The speech referred to is as follows:

COX CONDEMNS LACK OF LEADERSHIP IN NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Former Governor Cox's address in full follows:

"Just as the campaign was closing in 1920 I said to a New York audience that the then approaching result of the ballots would bring definite economic results, either to our benefit or injury. In short, if America expressed a mandate for international cooperation, exchange would be stabilized, spur would be given to credits, and we would enter upon a prosperity without precedent. If we by our ballots established selfishness as our creed, and isolation as our policy, a blight would fall upon industry everywhere. The observation was respectfully made to sundry interests that their real grievance was taxation, and that they seemed to be resolved upon an enterprise that would multiply their troubles. Their taxes have been reduced, but in the very way predicted—through the curtailment of their profits. It required no gift of prophecy to foresee what would happen. It was apparent to every person not blinded by prejudice. The individual who acts from an impulse born of anger always finds in time that his vision was clouded and his reason arrested. It must in fairness be admitted now that in the face of unparalleled emergency, when the most rational thought of the Nation was required, we witnessed the spectacle of suffrage expression without regard to the interests of humanity. There was not enough thought of the future and what was to be done for the common good. There was too much thought of the past and punishment for fancied wrongs. In the calm review of history the period and events in question will be referred to as 'the madness of 1920.'

"If there is anything in the theory that adversity, national or otherwise, brings the reflection of fair analysis and honest conviction, then we will find at least one compensation from our harrowing economic experiences. The theory that a serious depression in our business affairs was an inevitable aftermath of the war is an unadulterated humbug. The desolation in Europe naturally brought the need of every article that enters into commerce. America had reached an unprecedented peak in productivity, agricultural and industrial. Returning soldiers would have met all shortage in labor. The rebuilding of Europe required years of American products.

"Credit is based upon two things: Gold, and the presumption of industry and integrity. We had the gold, Europe was anxious to go to work. The initiative was upon us. Gold in itself means nothing. To it must be joined progress, enterprise, and appreciation of the fact that the same human industry that produces it occasionally needs the cooperation of credit. If the American bankers do not already know that they have lost to English financiers the opportunity for world leadership, the revelation will soon come.

"If we had lifted our voice for international cooperation, we would to-day be prosperous. Overhanging inventories that led to bankruptcy would have been absorbed in trade. Every dollar's worth of our surplus agricultural products would have been bought and foreclosure and disaster would not now be outstanding elements in farm life. Some farmers have survived, and the mere circumstance of their survival is cited by propagandists as an evidence of returning prosperity.

"As one surveys conditions at Washington he finds little ground for hope of a stable prosperity. There is no attempt made to meet the nation-wide charge of broken promises. Extensive default in performance usually denotes bankruptcy in the resource of plan and purpose. The philosophy of the ne'er-do-well that something, somehow, will turn up seems all possessing. In short, the evident hope is that the ingenious American people will work themselves out of existing plight, and the administration can then take credit for it. The burdens of taxation remain; there seems to be a hopeless confusion of policies as to a tariff system; the reorganization of Government bureaus is yet in the nebulous state of uncertainty, the probabilities being that the reorganizers on the pay roll outnumber the employees that have been taken off. The dollar sign still hangs over the Senate door, as the password to those who are willing to join NEWBERRY in doing emergency jobs about the place. Nothing has been evolved to ascertain what is the matter with the railroads. The single claim that wage and coal costs form the incubus will not suffice. There are fundamental disorders; there is too wide a zone between the division superintendent and the chairman of the board. Bankers' committees have their functions, but it does not consist in running the railroads. Industry advances in method and efficiency; the railroads have not moved a peg forward in 20 years. If the railroads could buy what they need, business would improve. Every day they drift nearer to the danger of public acceptance of the idea that Government ownership is the only panacea. Congress has run amuck, and, holding at bay the executive branch of the Government, it thinks only of the feast of spoils that it has compelled the White House to deliver through a disgraceful invasion of the merit system. Meanwhile the American people ask themselves how far back through the ways and the days of old they must go to reach the promised land of normalcy.

"The average person of the average community believes there is something radically wrong in Washington, and that it consists chiefly in a lack in leadership. There is no captain of the ship. Groups move along their statutory and constitutional grooves, but there is never cooperation in effort without leadership. The Presidents in our time whose names are associated with progress and achievement outlined policy, established it in public confidence, and through the purely constitutional processes of a democracy in government their concept became statute law and an agency for good. Roosevelt's fame will consist largely of his foresight, courage, and leadership. When the burdens of the greatest war of all time fell upon our country, when victory depended upon the assembling of individual effort, when the ship of state had to hold true to course, regardless of the portents of many a threatening day and night, it rode through to glorious triumph because Woodrow Wilson was on watch on the bridge.

"While there is much regret throughout the country over the aimless way in which things are drifting, it is not fair to criticize the President of the United States. He is simply keeping his contract with the people. He was open and frank in expressing his opinion as to what the function of the Executive is under our charter of government. He clearly indicated what his relation to the Congress and our affairs would be. The campaign waged by his party, through platform and speech, was largely directed against the alleged autocratic policies of Mr. Wilson. In marking the distinction which both he and his party made as between what had been and what was to be in this regard the Republican candidate specifically promised what he would do. He has kept the faith. He doubtlessly believes his performance is in precise harmony with what he accepted as a mandate adopted by 7,000,000 plurality.

"While our business adversity has been occasioned by our not going into the League of Nations, it is not our purpose to go into any discussion of the Lodge conspiracy. Instead let us turn to what the league, in face of senatorial sneers, has accomplished, and it is time, certainly, that our people know something about the very obvious attempt to embarrass, if not destroy, the league. In order to appraise the work of the league there should be created a mental background as to what the conditions were in Europe when the first assembly met in 1920 at Geneva, Switzerland. The war had awakened hatreds that had slumbered for centuries. Old frontiers, which had been enforced by might, were broken up; newly created governments were in their swaddling clothes; railroads which belonged in whole or in part to governments as they existed prior to the war included extensive trackage and terminals on soil subject to a new authority. Circulating media were presented as legal tender in territories no longer under control of the governments that had issued them. Foolish embargoes and repressive restrictions were being enforced against the tide of travel across many frontiers; minority peoples were caught up in lands alien to them; certain districts were wholly detached from any central government; prisoners of war in untold thousands were unable to reach their homes; typhus and other contagious diseases had broken out. In fact, conditions generally were in such confusion as to discourage anyone save an enthusiast for the great cause of peace which had taken hold of the best thought of Europe. The league, as the only working central body, became the trustee of a considerable part of Europe, and to it were consigned interests that had to be held sacred if trouble were to be avoided. Twenty-one slumbering wars were going on. There is now but one in all Europe. The secretariat became a useful administrative agency at once. The personnel of its sectional heads embraces the following nationals: Norwegian, English, Dutch, French, Italian, Swiss, and Polish. In the face of enormous difficulties, moved by the fine idealism possessing the movement, the branches of the league have achieved a measure of success that seems to be well known except in our own country.

"In 1920 the Polish Government requested the league to arbitrate the existing troubles with Lithuania. A commission was dispatched to the scene of the controversy. Order now prevails. Representatives from the two governments entered into an agreement last January before the council of the league to abstain from hostilities. During 1921 trouble arose between Albania and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State. Troops had advanced into disputed territory. Misunderstanding grew out of indefinitely formed frontiers. The council of the league intervened. Soldiers were withdrawn, the new boundaries are fixed, and peace prevails. The settlement of the Aaland Islands controversy was an affair of such world-wide interest that nothing need be said of it save that under the kindly offices of the league a dispute prolonged through many years came to an end, not only because the league approached the task without prejudice but both parties in interest had confidence that under the league agreements would be respected.

"Upper Silesia seemed to present the hardest of all the European problems. The allied powers wrestled with it in vain. No agreement could be reached. There were important economic and political questions involved. Finally the allied powers, with American Ambassador George Harvey present as observer, decided to turn the question over to the league for solution. The league respected the provisions of the Versailles treaty and held to the just principle of establishing frontiers on the results of the plebiscite. Its recommendation was accepted by the principal allied powers and the conference of ambassadors. Former Swiss President Calonder has conducted for the league these negotiations between Germany and Poland. The utmost spirit of conciliation has prevailed between these two countries in forming working agreements during the necessary period of transition. Disorder has ceased in Upper Silesia, and there is every reason to believe that the decision of the league will be the base of a permanent peace.

"The covenant carried more than a declaration of principle in the matter of reduced armaments. With the United States out of the league, there was little hope of progress in the reduction of naval armaments. The results of the Washington conference, in so far as they touch this subject, will be helpful to the purposes of the league. Land disarmament, however, is not so much affected by our nonmembership. The second assembly of the league requested the temporary mixed convention to draw up a general plan of disarmament following a survey that is now under way. This plan will doubtless be submitted to the next meeting of the assembly in September. An international conference on the private manufacture of arms is to be held before the next assembly.

"The two perplexing tasks, administration of the Saar Basin and the protection of the free city of Danzig, are in the hands of the league. Over the Saar Basin, a governing commission under control of the league presides. On it sit a Belgian, Dane, Frenchman, and Canadian. The social, economic, and political results of its work have been eminently satisfactory. In Danzig the high commissioner appointed by the league settles disputes between the city and Poland. The free city shows signs of development, and Poland is afforded an outlet to the sea. For generations this situation was the origin of recurring troubles.

"No greater test of the administrative efficiency of the league could have been imposed than the protection of minorities. This term applies to groups of persons differing in race, religion, or language from the majority of the inhabitants of a country. The extent of the racial admixture following the war and the establishment of new frontiers can scarcely be approximated. When the treaty of Versailles was concluded the commission on new States was requested to draft treaties with the European countries within whose borders minorities were isolated in the midst of majorities alien to them. The first treaty was made with Poland. It carried very essential changes in the forms and practices that had previously prevailed and which had proved inefficient. Under the new system all guaranties are intrusted to the league. Ten such treaties were made, some of them with the so-called enemy countries. Finland, on receiving the award of the Aaland Islands, gave guaranties to the population for the preservation of the language, culture, and local Swedish traditions. The regulation of the reciprocal and voluntary emigration between Greece and Bulgaria was another trying assignment. In no instance, so far as known, has the league failed to maintain harmonious compliance with these treaty arrangements.

"A conspicuous feature of the league is the protection it gives to the smaller nations. Indeed, from his first contact with the terms of peace, President Wilson stressed the absolute necessity of protecting the small States. Recently, Mr. Huber, the Swiss member of the International Court of Justice, in an address at Berne, said that if the league ever came to grief, it would be unfortunate for all its members but a catastrophe for the small States. In harmony with the principle of protecting the weak, the plan was evolved to control the mandated territories. The covenant of the league describes them as 'those colonies and territories which, as a consequence of the late war, have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world.' The care of such people is intrusted to certain powers, acting, however, for the League of Nations.

"The financial conference at Brussels, convened by the league, marked the beginning of a program of financial reconstruction. Out of it came the adoption by European States of budgetary reforms devised by fiscal experts of the league. Definite plans involving carefully worked out details for international cooperation were presented. One of them, called the ter Meulen scheme from its author, a member of the economic and financial committee of the league, was later adopted for the financial reconstruction of Austria. It is safe to predict that if the approaching Genoa conference attempts the beginning of a concerted fiscal program it will follow the principle, if not the form, of the ter Meulen plan.

"The reopening of the lanes of traffic and the reestablishment of contacts wiped away by the war was the achievement of the Paris and Barcelona conferences conducted by the league. Recovery of the exchanges, a necessary prelude to business revival, was prevented by new frontiers, conflicting legislation, and needless formality. Complete liberty of transit, of interstate transport, and of navigation, as well as the removal of annoying taxes and duties, were stipulated in the final convention.

"The league recognized the modern and progressive principle that a central agency must interest itself in welfare work when communities and even States themselves are unable to meet a situation of common menace. During the war there was little semblance of government in many parts of Europe. The massing of large bodies of troops, the too-frequent disregard for sanitary regulations, and the final state of impoverishment brought widespread sickness, the worst form of which was typhus. Certainly if civilization were to be restored in devastated areas the population had first to be preserved. The league appealed to the world for financial aid. It established contact with the two Red Cross organizations, and in brief time established its first line of defense against the advance of the epidemic. A perplexing area was the zone lying between the lines of ethnological Poland and ethnological Russia. Naturally there was considerable delicacy in this situation, but full cooperation came from Poland, and contact was actually established with parts of Russia, where surveys were made and invaluable information gained. The health organization of the league is proving one of the most effective instrumentalities for good that the world has ever known. It not only is playing the good Samaritan and establishing hope and vitality where desolation was well-nigh complete, but it is paving the way for the economic forces within the league.

"The immoral traffic in women and children impressed itself as a threatening institution on the impressions of civilization some 20 years ago. It had been a practice of the ages, but to the modern sense it finally became abhorrent. Conventions were held in 1904 and 1910 for the specific purpose of imposing restraint and punishment, but nothing worth while was accomplished. Soon after this the war came on, and poverty gave unprecedented opportunity for a renewal of the traffic, but on a very enlarged scale of operations. The league called a conference in which 34 nations participated. The survey which had preceded the meeting revealed the most shocking facts. In central Europe women and girls, threatened with starvation, fell an easy prey to the nefarious business. Into large centers of population many were transported. Over 300,000 had been taken from Greece alone. The conference revealed a universal moral awakening. The work began where the conventions of 1904 and 1910 had ended. The good was taken from the prior plans, and additions which experience suggested were made. The most efficient agencies have been created to stamp out the evil.

"Nothing has cast a more baneful influence over civilization than the use of opium. The league in a common-sense analysis of conditions reached the conclusion that control of the source of supply to the actual legitimate world demand for the drug was the way to approach the problem. A comprehensive survey, which obviously is the first logical step, is under way.

"When the war closed there were hundreds of thousands of prisoners of war interned in different countries. The local population was chiefly concerned about its own subsistence and many of the governments were unable to provide the means to bring back their own soldiers that had been interned. In Siberia some detention camps suffered a 50 per cent loss from starvation. The league appointed Doctor Nansen, the Arctic explorer, its high commissioner to undertake the task of repatriation. He commanded the confidence necessary to essential contacts. He gained the cordial cooperation of the soviet government of Russia, as well as of Germany, Austria, and all the so-called enemy countries. At the end of 1921 he had returned over 400,000 men to their homes and reported the work completed. He is now engaged in relieving the vast numbers of civilian refugees who have been pressed by circumstances into alien lands.

"The league has created and actually elected the judges of the international court of justice, the dream of international lawyers for a century past. The covenant of the league provided for the establishment of such a tribunal. At The Hague conferences the enterprise had been discussed. In 1907 Elihu Root, in his instructions to the American delegates to the conference, urged them to use every possible endeavor to create such a court, and thus 'establish a world-wide justice based upon law.' They formally presented the proposal, which was debated, and the conference sought to adopt it. It failed because no agreement could be reached as to the method of selecting the judges. The division came between representatives of the large and the small nations. There was a fear that so many powers could not harmoniously and equitably choose a small number of judges. For more than 10 years nothing was done. Moved by the provisions of article 14 of the covenant, the council of the league again set in motion this important enterprise. The ablest international lawyers of many countries were requested by the league to confer and submit a plan of organization, among them the Hon. Elihu Root. In the summer of 1920 the meeting was held. The old bugaboo over the method of electing the judges of the court appeared at once. Then it was that some one observed that the underlying genius of the scheme of the league itself was the creation of the council controlled by the large powers and the assembly controlled by the small powers; therefore the problem's solution was to be found in permitting both the council and the assembly voting as separate bodies to choose the judges. The merit of the suggestion was so obvious that it was adopted. The candidates to be voted for were to be formally placed in nomination by the delegates of the old Hague court of arbitration, each group being privileged to suggest the names of four men, two only of whom could be of the group's nationality. The council and the assembly from the nominations, 89 in number, elected the 11 judges of the court. It required but a few ballots and was practically concluded in one day.

"Recognizing that the war was over, and that amicable relations had been established through treaties, the league sought to temper bitterness of the past through cooperative labors for the common good. It admitted to membership 13 neutral nations that had not joined the Allies in war, as well as two ex-enemy countries—Austria and Bulgaria—all for the purpose of establishing a new world relation. It admitted Germany to membership of the international labor office. In the Brussels financial conference a German delegate, Herr Bergman, arose to address the first international audience in six years. Germany participated in the Barcelona conference. In the conference for the suppression of the traffic in women and children, all four ex-enemy powers participated. On the advisory committee for the control of the opium traffic, a German member has been appointed. When Germany recognized the justice of the principle of publicity of treaties and voluntarily sent in for registration more treaties than any nation except Great Britain and France, she was accorded every facility and courtesy. In the recent conference for the internationalization of the very conflicting standards of antitoxic sera for diseases, such as diphtheria, pneumonia, etc., Germany was given representation and her scientists are now carrying on investigations in accord with the league's program. In short, in economic, scientific, and humanitarian activities the league, with thought of future peace, rather than past conflicts, is healing the breach that divided the world's national and racial units.

"These are the conspicuous achievements of the League of Nations.

"Is there any valid reason why it should not have the moral support of every agency of civilization? Can any Government afford, in the judgment of history, yea, more, in national conscience, to deny assistance? Finally, if any Government has treated the league and its works with scant courtesy, if not with discourtesy, ought not the veil be lifted and the facts be given? Let us in this thought submit a record of the attitude of our own Government under the present administration.

"During the early months of 1921, the secretary general of the league sent to the Secretary of State at Washington communications of special importance. Information concerning all the large general conferences of the league was sent to the American Government, as a matter of course, as it was sent to all Governments represented in the league. In the early months of the present administration, the general attitude was maintained in the Department of State that the United States did not 'recognize' the league, and could not therefore have any communication with league officials. This led to a most awkward situation which may best be described with reference to particular subjects:

"1. Mandates: On February 21, 1921, Secretary Colby informed the council of the league that the American Government would insist on having a voice in the disposition of the mandated territories and would refuse to recognize any mandates which it had not approved. On March 1, 1921, the council replied that it would postpone consideration of the mandates until its next meeting to which a representative of the United States was invited. This note was received in Washington in the first days of March, 1921, but when the council met late in June it had received no reply from the United States. Nor has such a communication ever been received, though in August, 1921, the American Government sent a communication concerning the mandates to the British, French, Italian, and Japanese Governments.

"2. White-slave conference: When the first assembly of the league voted to hold this conference it directed that invitations be sent to all Governments which had ratified or adhered to either of the white-slave traffic conventions of 1904 and 1910. On February 27, 1921, such an invitation was sent to the American Government by the secretary general of the league, by registered mail, inviting the United States to be represented at the conference in Geneva on June 30, 1921. In February, also, a questionnaire on the subject was sent to the Secretary of State at Washington. No reply was made to these communications. In early June it was learned that the State Department had stated officially that the United States had not been invited to the conference. On or about June 13 the secretary general of the league sent a cable to the Secretary of State, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, informing him of the February communications. On June 25, 1921, the American consul at Geneva visited the secretary general and informed him that the invitation to the white-slave conference had been misplaced but later located in the archives of the Department of State. The invitation, however, was not directly accepted or declined.

"The United States was not represented at the conference and failed to comply with any of the requests for information, though Mr. Bascom Johnson, of the American Social Hygiene Association, was present during some of the sessions of the conference.

"Speaking of the American consul in Switzerland reminds us that he has been asked on occasions by our State Department to call on the secretary general and deliver a message by word of mouth. For instance, on June 30 he called on the secretary general and read the following cablegram signed by Mr. Hughes:

"'Please inform the secretary general orally and unofficially that his notes of the 18th of November and May 22 have been received, but as this Government has no relations with the League of Nations no reply will be sent to them.'

"This form, beyond question, is a precedent in diplomatic affairs.

"Within the last few days Secretary Hughes advised the league, doubtless by oral consular message, that the United States could not cooperate in the white-slave movement because of state relations, but that congressional action was sympathetic with the cause. If it is an affair of the States, why is the Federal authority taking cognizance of it?

"3. Opium: The opium convention of 1912 provided that certain information should be exchanged by the signatory powers, through the medium of the Government of the Netherlands. The Dutch Government requested that it be relieved of the responsibility and that the league undertake it. To this the league agreed, and the various signatories to The Hague opium convention gave their assent, with the exception of the United States. In the summer of 1921 the American Government objected to the centralization of this purely administrative work in the offices of the league which had organized the opium commission to handle it. The American objection was put on technical grounds. No change in the opium convention was proposed—only a change in the administration which would have more efficiency in the exchange of documents and information.

"4. International Health Organization: The Rome convention of 1907 set up an international hygiene office at Paris, controlled by a committee on which the United States is represented. For lack of money and other reasons it has not been a great success. The league proposed to organize much more extensive machinery. A committee was set up by the council of the league. Various organizations were asked to name members of it, among them the committee chosen by the Rome convention of 1907. Because of the opposition of the United States representative on the old committee it refused to name delegates. Thus for many months, while typhus and other diseases were raging in eastern Europe, the league found it impossible to set up machinery to deal with the problem effectively. The league organization has finally been organized independently. Recently (1922) a backhanded formula has been found when Dr. Rupert Blue has been taking part in some of its work as an American acting 'unofficially.'

"5. Financial relief to Austria: Reference has been made to the ter Meulen plan for the rehabilitation of Austria. It was proposed that creditor governments agree to suspend their claims for 25 years. This was early in 1921. Clearly, cooperation of all these creditors was essential. The United States is the largest creditor. Seventeen Governments agreed. The United States paid no attention to the matter until two weeks ago, when the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate presented it to that body, and the long-delayed action was taken. A European financial authority, in commenting on the subject, February, 1922, said: 'All the Governments concerned, with only two or three provisional exceptions, have agreed, but amongst those which have not given a reply is Austria's most important creditor, and it is not a member of the league. The scheme can not be put into final execution until this creditor has given definite assent.' Austria was starving. Important agencies of civilization devised a method of relief, but the United States was dumb to appeal, and for more than a year held the whole project in suspense because it was created by the league.

"6. International Emigration Commission: This commission was set up by the international labor office of the league in 1921. As one of the important immigration countries the United States was invited to be represented on the commission. The Department of Labor was inclined to make an appointment, and the Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New York was named to attend the commission's opening meeting in July, 1921, even going as far as London. At the last minute, however, he failed to appear and no communication concerning the incident was received from the American Government.

"7. Permanent court of international justice: In many respects this is the most unfortunate episode which these remarkable developments involve. No objection to this court is of record from any jurist, international lawyer, or government on earth. For years the plan was discussed. It was recognized as an international necessity. It fit into the plan of the League of Nations and thus happily blended the idealism upon which The Hague project was based, with the practical principles of the league. As John Bassett Moore, now a member of the court, aptly put it, 'Although constituted under a statute prepared by the council and passed by the assembly of the League of Nations, it represents the fruition of efforts with which the international activities of the United States has been closely and distinctively identified.' Commenting further upon it, he said: 'It is only when the minds of men can be brought into a common accord that peace is definitely assured. To this end the permanent court of international justice has been ordained in an effort to create an institution which should embody the highest human ideal, that of peace through justice, and particularly justice based on law.'

"Mr. Harding in the campaign of 1920 had much to say about it, particularly when pressed for specifications of his plan for an association of nations.

"In many speeches he said: 'We can safely submit our interests to the opinions of an international court of justice without yielding our national rights or sovereignty.'

"Now what has happened? When the time came to prepare for the election of judges the secretary general of the League of Nations, under date of June 4, 1921, notified the American delegates to The Hague to submit their recommendations in keeping with the method which Mr. Root himself helped devise.

In compliance with diplomatic usage, the notice was sent to the Secretary of State for reference to the delegates, who were Messrs. Root, Gray, Moore, and Strauss. The secretary general of the league did not receive a reply from our Secretary of State. But on July 27, 1921, seven weeks later, Mr. Root is known to have written a friend in England that he had not received the invitation to nominate. This information reached Geneva August 11 or 12, 1921. On the same day direct cable invitations were addressed by the secretary general to Messrs. Root, Gray, Moore, and Strauss. Ten days later Mr. Root replied that the letter of invitation sent to the Secretary of State June 4 had then—about August 20—been received. The list of nominations was closed about the middle of August. The American delegates made no nominations. Four Americans, however, had been nominated by other countries and John Bassett Moore was elected. Our Government has no connection whatsoever with the court. We can become a member of the court without joining the league. By accepting the statute of the court we would enjoy status and privilege equal to what is accorded to others. Mr. Moore recently said:

"'The court, if it is to fulfill its high mission, must have the support of the Governments of the world and of public opinion, being in this respect like all human institutions.'

"Other countries have agreed to submit their disputes, but Uncle Sam is still a hermit. The court against which no man has raised his voice is rejected by our Government because the League of Nations had a hand in its beginning and retains a certain administrative relation to it. The league is the thing that affrights! It disturbs the even tenor of the administration as a hobgoblin distresses a sleeping child. It matters not what the international project is nor the virtue it possesses, it is tabooed if the League of Nations has anything to do with it.

"This is not statesmanship; it is fanaticism!

"Day by day its effects are fastening themselves upon the impressions of our people. They are beginning to realize that under modern conditions certain elements in our economic life are moved by prevailing forces elsewhere, as the tides and streams of the ocean are influenced by the processes of nature. The Republican administration is opposing laws over which man has no control. It permits this Republic to remain in the world view a selfish, greedy people, strapped to our money bags and unaffected by the distress of others.

"These intolerable conditions can not endure. Policies opposed to the general welfare and to our moral, religious, and economic tenets must yield to the controlling will of an intelligent people. As we foregather to-night as disciples of the creed of Jefferson, Jackson, and Wilson let us resolve to hold the line. No great cause was ever won in a single battle. Our principles are right, and they must and will prevail."

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. I will take but a moment. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah when we may expect a speech on the subject of the League of Nations from some of his colleagues?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can understand the anxiety of the leader upon the other side—the political leader, of course—the distinguished Senator from Illinois, to divert attention from the wretched fiasco of the Republican administration during the past year. The Senator is to lead the gallant hosts of the Republican Party in the coming election. He has no slogan; he has no principles which will appeal to the people; he can write no platform which will commend itself to the judgment of the American people. He has no record of achievements to bring to the attention of the country. Failure and disaster have followed the Republican administration. It is not to be wondered at that the shrewd and able political leader should be concerned about issues, and should, like a perturbed angler fishing in muddy waters, seek to get some sort of a bite. Let me say to the Senator, however, that he need not be disquieted about the attitude of the American people upon the League of Nations. I do not pretend to speak for the Democratic Party; I often vote against many of its representatives in the Senate; but I can assure the Senator from Illinois that the overwhelming majority of the American people are in favor of an association of nations, and that sooner or later this Nation will join with other nations in a world association; the American people will not be satisfied with the wretched four-power pact into which the Senator and other Republicans have led this country. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind the galleries of the rule of the Senate which requires that the galleries shall remain silent.

Mr. McCORMICK. I understand the Senator has not yet said that the people would enter the League of Nations.

Mr. HEFLIN. I decline to yield to the Senator from Illinois for the purpose of interrupting the applause in the galleries.

The Senator from Illinois challenges the Democrats; he wants them to fight a duel with him upon the question of the League of Nations. Heretofore when a party has been challenged he has been allowed to name the time and place and the character of weapon to be used, but the Senator from Illinois wants to name the time and the place and designate the character of weapon which shall be used, even by his opponent.

Mr. President, the pending question is one which has been up for consideration many and many a time in this Chamber.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is not going to discuss the question pending before the Senate, is he?

Mr. HEFLIN. I intend to discuss the question of seed distribution.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not suppose the Senator would so far forget himself as to discuss the question that is pending before the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the question is so vital to the welfare of the masses of the people that I must call the attention of the Senate to it this morning. For a long time we have had statesmen in the other branch of Congress and in this who have sought to strike out the seed-distribution provision. I have never understood exactly why, Mr. President. The people get great benefit from the free distribution of seed. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on yesterday said that the fight against it was inaugurated and carried on by the great seed houses of America, and that must be true.

When I was a Member of the other branch of Congress I distributed the seed, as did other Members. I received scores and scores of letters telling me how valuable they were; how much they were appreciated; how they had introduced a new and improved kind of seed in various localities. I submit, Mr. President, that is a very beneficial thing to thousands of American people.

A year ago the Senate passed upon the same question; we had a roll call upon it, and by a vote of 55 to 22 the Senate declined to strike out the seed provision.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Alabama whether that is the vote instructing the conferees or the vote directly on the item itself?

Mr. HEFLIN. This was a vote, I believe, instructing the conferees to let this provision remain in the bill. It is the same thing. Now, the motion here is to strike it out; and I submit to my good friend, the able Senator from Oregon, that we are losing time when we strike it out. We never will get this measure through the other branch of Congress with free seed stricken from it. I think they will compel it to be put back in conference; but why should the Senate go on record as favoring the proposition of denying this little handful of seed to the people who now so much appreciate them?

A few days ago I voted for a provision here to appropriate money to buy seed wheat for distressed farmers out in the great Northwest. The Government has expended a few million dollars for this purpose. These people had to have the seed wheat in order to make a wheat crop. If the Government could do that, I submit to my friends on the other side that in distressing times like these, when times are hard everywhere, especially out in the rural districts of the country, down in the South and out all over the West, Senators should not withhold these little packages of seed that will go out to these people and serve them so well.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I remind the Senator that the Senate voted also for seed wheat for the distressed people of Russia.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank my friend for the suggestion, Mr. President. I saw the Senate go upon record as appropriating money to buy seed to be used in the soil of Russia, thousands of miles away, and I see here a provision to take away from the people right here at home a small pittance which will send a few seed to the citizens of our own country. I saw the Senate appropriate the other day several hundred thousand dollars for the pneumatic-tube service of one city in this country, the city of New York. I believe that the amount carried in that bill was three times the amount that will be appropriated here for the distribution of free seed all over the United States. Only a few hundred people at best will be benefited by the pneumatic-tube service in New York, while in this free-seed distribution hundreds of thousands of people will be benefited.

I just wanted to bring these few things to the attention of Senators, and beg them, in the face of them, not to vote to strike out this free-seed distribution provision.

Mr. President, a lot of people are dissatisfied at the way in which the Government is being conducted—very much dissatisfied—and you had better let this little seed package go, because it does show that you are doling out a little gift to them, reminding them that you have not entirely forgotten them. I beg Senators to let these seed continue to go at least until prosperity shall come again. Do not add to the troubles the people already have, to their distress and misfortune, by taking away about the only thing that they now get at the hands of the Government, thousands of them—a little package of seed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DIAL and Mr. HEFLIN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to inquire how the question is stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on pages 26, 27, and 28.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. That amendment is to strike out the provision?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To strike out the provision. Those voting "yea" will vote to strike it out; those voting "nay" will vote to retain it. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCNARY (when Mr. STANFIELD'S name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] on account of official business, and to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I am compelled to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. UNDERWOOD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is unavoidably absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I ask that this notice may continue throughout the day. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Transferring my general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; but I understand that that Senator, if present, would vote as I intend to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I have voted, and I will therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I understand that he has not voted, so I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with that Senator. I am unable to obtain a transfer and therefore am compelled to withdraw my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea," as I heretofore have done.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] is paired with his colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Ball	Fernald	Moses	Poindexter
Borah	Hale	Myers	Townsend
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Keyes	Newberry	Warren
Curtis	Lenroot	Norris	Willis
Dillingham	Lodge	Page
du Pont	McCormick	Pepper
Edge	McNary	Phipps

NAYS—24.

Ashurst	Harris	Nicholson	Sterling
Broussard	Harrison	Oddie	Sutherland
Bursum	Heflin	Overman	Swanson
Culberson	Kendrick	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Ladd	Reed	Weller
Gooding	La Follette	Sheppard	Williams

NOT VOTING—43.

Brandegee	Gerry	McLean	Smith
Cameron	Glass	New	Smoot
Caraway	Harreld	Norbeck	Spencer
Colt	Hitchcock	Owen	Stanfield
Crow	Johnson	Pittman	Stanley
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Trammell
Elkins	Kellogg	Rawson	Underwood
Ernst	King	Robinson	Wadsworth
Fletcher	McCumber	Shields	Walsh, Mont.
France	McKellar	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Simmons

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when this question was before the Senate on yesterday it was passed over at the request of the committee, probably because there was a quorum lacking. I consented to that, but stated at the time that I did not want it to come up in my absence. I was detained this morning at one of the departments and arrived in the Senate a few moments late. The vote was then proceeding, and I could not make the statement I am now making. I know that the vote came on through a misunderstanding, the Senator having the bill in charge thinking he had informed me yesterday that it would come on at 12 o'clock, whereas my understanding was that the Senate would reconvene at 12 o'clock and that this question would not be called up in my absence. For that reason I shall ask for a separate vote in the Senate on this question, and at that time I hope to submit some observations which may possibly have some effect on the vote.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I regret the misunderstanding. It was my intention to convey the information to the Senator from Missouri that I would ask for a recess until 12 o'clock today, at which time we would revert to the seed item, and, to show my good faith, I sent out after the Senate met and had a search made for the Senator. I am very glad he has retained the right to bring this question up in the Senate, where he will have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. REED. It was purely a misapprehension, and there was no bad faith, of course.

The Assistant Secretary read the next paragraph, covering salaries of the Forest Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether the item with respect to county agents has been reached; and if not, whether the Senator expects to dispose of it in the next hour?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the item this year in the pending bill carries $500,000 less than the amount in last year's bill.

Mr. KING. For county agents?

Mr. McNARY. For all work of that character. I am told there will be an effort made to increase the item $500,000, which is supplemental to the Smith-Lever Act, but inasmuch as the Smith-Lever Act reaches the maximum provision this year, the amount available for the year 1923 is the same as is that available this year, even though there appears to be a decrease of $500,000.

Mr. KING. This is the point to which I want to call attention. I have received and have in my possession scores of letters protesting against the activities—the misguided activities, as it is alleged—of the county agents, in that they devote their time to the criticism of private business organizations; that they go throughout the country delivering talks—"lectures," as they are denominated—averring that they are acting under instructions of the Agriculture Department, in which lectures they criticize private enterprises, men who are engaged in the coal business, in the agricultural implement business, in the banking business, in the seed and grain business, generally private enterprise, and inculcate the thought that the Federal Government should take charge of the marketing of farm products and that the Federal Government should exercise a sort of paternalistic control over at least a large part of the business activities of the country.

I make no comment upon these letters, a large number of which I have here upon my desk. I also have clippings from newspapers corroborating these statements. When that item is reached I shall be glad to have the views of the Senator as to whether, if this is a fact, there should not be some legislation which will confine these county agents to their legitimate functions.

I am making no complaint about the county agents as a class. I have no doubt some of them are doing fine work, though I have many complaints about the supreme and colossal ignorance of a large number of them. They have no scientific education. They seem to be out rather to antagonize business and to create discontent among the farmers than to act in conformity with law and to do the work which is authorized by law to be done by them. May I inquire whether the committee's attention was called to these numerous complaints about the transcending of authority by the county agents?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that I have heard from no lips other than his own any complaint against the county agents. The record abounds with statements of the good work of the county agents. I know of no department of the Government more popular, that is bringing a greater response from the farming community, that seems to be more strongly intrenched in the hearts of the farmers than the county agents, and I am amazed, I am even shocked, to hear from the Senator from Utah that they are engaged in work along political lines or any other outside of that which is peculiarly prescribed by law.

Mr. KING. I did not use the word "political." I stated it was charged that they are engaged in activities not consistent with their work. I should be very glad if the Senator would come to my desk and read a score or more of letters from reputable men, from Montana on the west to some of the New England States on the east.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator the general character of the complaints against the county agents?

Mr. KING. I can take the time now to read from the letters——

Mr. McNARY. I assume the Senator is familiar with the correspondence.

Mr. KING. I stated a moment ago what they are. The complaints are that the county agents go around delivering lectures criticizing private enterprise and private activity, denouncing those engaged in the coal business for their activities, their charges, and their extortion; and doubtless there have been some of the coal dealers who should be denounced. I make no comment one way or the other; I am merely stating the fact. They are criticizing men who are engaged in the grain business, men who have built up business enterprises for many, many years, and generally denounce and criticize the economic system, stating that they represent the Agricultural Department in seeking to organize the farmers into groups and organizations for the handling of their supplies and products, for buying and selling, and so forth. I make no comment on these charges. I make no criticism of the alleged propaganda. I am merely calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that criticisms have come to me from a large number of persons of the character and along the lines I have indicated. As to whether these criticisms are just or well founded, I express no opinion.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator from Utah desire to dispense with this splendid service on account of the indiscretions of a dozen or more agents?

Mr. KING. No; I made no such suggestion at all. I was wondering if the attention of the committee had been called to it, and if it be a fact that there is any considerable activity of the character indicated by the letters; then it occurred to me that it might be wise to add a proviso to the bill that the county agents should perform the work for which they were employed rather than to engage in propaganda or preachments destructive of the business of private persons.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would let us know about how extensive these criticisms are, and whether they are coming from one section or from all sections of the country.

Mr. KING. I just stated that I have letters from Montana and from as far east as New England, as I recall.

Mr. NORRIS. A good many of them?

Mr. KING. Yes; quite a number.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not suppose anyone connected with the Government in any capacity would stand for these Government agents doing things which are improper, and some of the things the Senator alleges would manifestly be improper. I think the Senator must realize that among such a vast number of persons it will always be found that there will be some who are not up to standard and some who ought to be discharged. I have had opportunities to see the work of these county agents in a somewhat extended way, and I have found that, as a rule, they are a very fine class of people and well educated. The Senator mentioned lack of education as one of the things he desired to call attention to, that they were not scientific. Those with whom I have come in contact were well educated.

Mr. KING. Within the past five minutes, here in the Chamber, a Senator told me that the county agent in his county was wholly ignorant and incompetent.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt there are such, and they ought to be discharged, and I presume they will be. They will be weeded out. I think as a whole, however, they are pretty high-class people.

Mr. KING. I was just giving my information. I am making no criticism at all, but I felt it was my duty to call the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge and the members of the committee to these numerous complaints. I shall be very glad to show some of these letters to the Senator, or to present them more in detail when we reach this item.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 36, after line 17, to insert:

For personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, made necessary by the requirements of the Federal water power act, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, at the beginning of line 3, to increase the appropriation for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, from "$400,000" to "$425,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 22, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Forest Service from "$4,072,282" to "$4,109,282."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 10, to increase the total appropriation for the Forest Service from "$6,537,302" to "$6,574,302."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, at the end of line 21, to strike out "$70,400" and insert "$75,400," so as to make the paragraph read:

For conducting the investigations contemplated by the act of May 15, 1862, relating to the application of chemistry to agriculture; for the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof, including investigations of the physiological effects of such products on the human organism, $75,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, at the end of line 11, to increase the appropriation for the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and sugar and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups by the utilization of new agricultural sources from "$10,000" to "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 7, to increase the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Chemistry, from "$944,561" to "$959,561."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry from "$1,267,631" to "$1,282,631."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 3, to increase the appropriation for investigation of soils, in cooperation with other branches of the Department of Agriculture, other departments of the Government, State agricultural experiment stations, and other State institutions, and for indicating upon maps and plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations, from "$168,200" to "$178,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 10, to increase the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Soils, from "$292,535" to "$302,535."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Soils from "$371,775" to "$381,775."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 13, to increase the appropriation for investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts from "$168,500" to "$178,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 13, after the word "Board," to strike out "$64,000" and insert "$71,500"; and in line 14, after the word "sum," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For investigations of insects affecting citrus and other tropical and subtropical plants, and for investigations and control of the Mediterranean and other fruit flies, in cooperation with the Federal Horticultural Board, $71,500, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available for investigations of the camphor scale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 25, to increase the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Entomology, from "$832,510" to "$850,010."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 5, to reduce the appropriation to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the spread of the European corn borer, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect throughout the United States, etc., from "$275,000" to "$200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 12, to reduce the total appropriation for the Bureau of Entomology from "$1,835,580" to "$1,778,080."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Bureau of Biological Survey," on page 48, at the end of line 18, to strike out "two $1,500" and to insert "two at $1,500 each," so as to read:

Biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000; chief clerk and executive assistant, $1,800; administrative assistant, $2,250; executive assistant, $1,800; executive clerk, $1,980; clerks—4 of class 4, 8 of class 3, 2 at $1,500 each, 16 of class 2, 1 $1,260; 16 of class 1, 2 at $1,100 each, 1 $1,080, 2 at $1,000 each; preparators—1 $1,200, 1 $900; photographer, $1,300; game warden, $1,200; messenger, $720; messenger boys—1 $600, 2 at $480 each; laborer, $720; 3 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $91,290.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 19, page 54.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] I ask that the subject "States Relations Service," beginning on page 54, be passed over for the present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope we can get the Senator from Utah into the Chamber. I desire to offer an amendment to that part of the bill. I have an important conference to attend later in the afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. I will try to ascertain the whereabouts of the Senator from Utah and get him into the Chamber as soon as possible.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me offer my amendment and let it be pending.

Mr. McNARY. I think it would be well for the Senator to do that.

Mr. HARRISON. I will offer the amendment, then, and let it be pending. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHORTRIDGE in the chair). The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 57, line 25, the last line on the page, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000."

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator from Oregon desires to postpone consideration of the amendment until the Senator from Utah is present?

Mr. McNARY. I would like to pass it over temporarily, in view of a promise I made to the Senator from Utah that it would not be called until he was at least notified or was in the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 65, at the end of line 23, to strike out "$471,200" and to insert "$477,200," so as to make the paragraph read:

For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products and the purchasing of farm supplies, including the demonstration and promotion of the use of uniform standards of classification of American farm products throughout the world, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the department, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and food products, $477,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, at the end of line 5, to strike out "$357,400" and to insert "$405,000"; and, at the end of line 7, to strike out "importers, exporters," so as to make the paragraph read:

For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and live-stock estimates, acreage, yield, grades, stock, and value of farm crops, and numbers, grades, and value of live stock and live-stock products on farms, in cooperation with the States Relations Service and other Federal, State, and local agencies, $405,000: Provided, That not less than $65,000 shall be used for collecting and disseminating to American producers and other interested persons information relative to the world supply of and need for American agricultural products, marketing methods, conditions, prices, and other factors, a knowledge of which is necessary to the advantageous disposition of such products in foreign countries, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, including the purchase of such books and periodicals as may be necessary in connection with this work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. On page 67, line 19, I move to strike out the figures "$385,000" and to insert "$405,000." I do this for the purpose of having the matter go to conference——

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator should defer offering his amendment until the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 67, line 20, to increase the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, from "$1,716,580" to "$1,770,180."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, at the end of line 24, to increase the total appropriations for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics from "$3,532,043" to "$3,585,643."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, under the heading "Federal Horticultural Board," line 6, after the figures "$1,440," to insert the word "each," so as to read "three at $1,440 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, at the end of line 2, to increase the appropriation for the acquisition of additional lands at headwaters of navigable streams, etc., from "$50,000" to "$75,000."

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to amend the committee amendment on page 74, line 2, by striking out the figures "$75,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$575,000."

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator from North Carolina, perhaps, had better defer his amendment. An agreement was had on yesterday that committee amendments should first be disposed of.

Mr. OVERMAN. The reason I offer my amendment is that it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. That is true. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the committee amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, every dollar which it is proposed to appropriate by my amendment is needed and will be expended in pursuance of law. In committee I proposed the amendment which I have now offered, but the committee by a narrow margin voted it down. All of the members of the committee were in favor of the principle involved, and were in favor of the appropriation, but they voted it down by a narrow margin on the ground that for the present this work should be delayed. I do not see why the appropriation for this great purpose should be delayed any more than appropriations for national parks or any other object should be delayed.

Mr. President, I am not going to argue this question now at any length, although it is very important. The House of Representatives now have before it a bill which has been reported favorably by the Agricultural Committee of that body, and which is on their calendar, appropriating $1,000,000 for this purpose, whereas the amendment offered by me proposes an appropriation of only $500,000.

We are informed by the commission, on which the Senate is represented by two Senators and the House of Representatives by two Members of that body, and of which the Secretary of Agriculture is also a member, that the appropriation is absolutely needed in order that contracts which have been made may be completed. Options have been obtained on land at a very low figure, and if the appropriation provided by my amendment is not made, the options will expire and the Government will have to pay twice as much for the land as they can get it for now under the options.

Representatives were here from Pennsylvania, from North Carolina, from West Virginia, and all over the Appalachian region. Everybody, I think, is in favor of this project. We have appropriated every year from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 ever since the original act was passed. Now, it is proposed practically to leave out the appropriation for the purchase of the lands, and to provide only a sufficient sum to pay for the administrative expenses.

I think the work which is being done in acquiring the forest lands is an excellent work. It is conservation; everybody says it is right; the work ought to be carried on, and yet it is proposed to let it wait for a year.

The work which is being done along this line is for the purpose of conserving the water powers of the country and to protect flow of water in the navigable streams. I think it can not be denied that that is a good work and one that should proceed, as the Senators on the commission recommend, as the department recommend, and as the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, recommends. They say that a million dollars should be provided. Forestry associations all over the country have indorsed it, and have asked us to appropriate for the purpose from one million to two million dollars, while the amendment which I have offered merely provides an appropriation of $500,000. I hope it may be adopted.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, does the Senator think $500,000 will be a sufficient amount to carry on this work?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, Mr. President, it is not nearly enough to carry it on; it will only enable the department to complete some contracts which have been entered into and to pay for land on which they have options. If those options should expire, there is no telling what will have to be paid for the land.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is necessary to have $500,000 in order to carry on the work already mapped out?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Agricultural Committee said we ought to have $1,000,000; the commission in charge of the work say there ought to be appropriated $2,000,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the nature of the work? I understand from what has been stated by the Senator that the Department of Agriculture proposes to purchase land in order to add to the area of national forests.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; to increase the acreage of the forest lands in order to protect the headwaters of streams and to conserve water power. It is in conformity with the act passed by Congress, as will be seen from the bill, on March 1, 1911, which is known as the Weeks Act. Under the act we have been purchasing land in the Appalachian Mountains from Pennsylvania southward in order to protect the headwaters of streams.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senators who come from the States in the Appalachian region feel that the forests there ought to be extended, I see no objection to the amendment, but the national forests in Arizona are large enough.

Mr. OVERMAN. This item merely relates to the Appalachian region.

Mr. ASHURST. In Arizona already our forests are too vast in extent.

Mr. KEYES. Mr. President, I have a copy of a letter written under date of January 21 from John W. Weeks, chairman of the National Forest Reservation Commission, to the Director of the Budget. It bears so directly upon the proposed amendment that I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should be very glad to have the letter read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

(Members: Hon. John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, chairman; Hon. Albert B. Fall, Secretary of the Interior; Hon. Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture; Hon. HENRY W. KEYES, New Hampshire, United States Senate; Hon. JOHN R. SHIELDS, Tennessee, United States Senate; Hon. WILLIS C. HAWLEY, Oregon, House of Representatives; Hon. GORDON LEE, Georgia, House of Representatives.)

NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1922.

The DIRECTOR OF THE BUDGET,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The estimates of appropriations required for the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, as approved by the Bureau of the Budget, include (Budget, p. 279) an item of $50,000 for the acquisition of additional forest lands under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911. The appropriation for the same purpose during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, was $1,000,000. From the note appended to this item, as proposed for the ensuing fiscal year, it is evident that the very great reduction from the current appropriation contemplates the complete suspension or postponement of purchases of forest lands and is intended to provide solely for maintaining a small nucleus of the experts previously employed by the Forest Service on this work with a view to the resumption of purchases at some later day.

The activity covered by this item has been carried on continuously by the Government since the passage of the Weeks Act in 1911. It has reflected a very active and widespread public sentiment in favor of extension of the national forests for the dual purpose of affording protection to the watersheds of important navigable streams and increasing the production of timber to supply the economic needs of the country. Every close student of the timber-supply situation in the United States and the degree to which the denudation of our forest lands has been carried is convinced that a rational extension of public forest ownership is one of the essential remedies which must be applied, particularly in view of the clear responsibility resting upon the Federal Government to maintain the navigability of important streams by insuring the continuous forestation of their upper watersheds.

When this work was initiated in 1911 it was with the deliberate purpose of acquiring ultimately not less than 5,000,000 acres of forest lands on the watersheds of important rivers in the Eastern States. Moderate appropriations have been made available continuously by Congress since the passage of the Weeks Act, and the examination and purchase of lands has up to the present time gone forward gradually but without a single break in the continuity of the work.

The character of the activities required in making this Federal policy effective is such that a steady and continuous functioning of the executive agencies involved at a gradual rate is imperative. Large areas of forest land can not be surveyed, appraised, and bought in haste if the work is to be done efficiently and the Government is to obtain full value for the sums expended. On the contrary, there must be a sustained and continuous process of examining and weighing the merits of different tracts of land and building up the Government's holdings slowly with the regard for efficiency in the conduct and negotiations and in the determination of the values obtained. In other words, to carry out the Federal policy of extending national forests over the most important watersheds of navigable streams, to which I regard the Government as definitely committed, it is my conviction that provision must be made currently for the continuation of this work on a reasonable scale without a break. There has been no break hitherto in the conduct of this work, and I would regard such an interruption as the reduction in this item would require as extremely unfortunate to the public interests.

It should also be borne in mind that expenditures for this purpose are in reality investments in public property, investments as to whose ultimate return, both in revenue and in public benefit, I have not the slightest doubt. Under the operation of the Weeks Act to date 2,047,718 acres of forest land have been purchased at a cost, including examinations of titles, land survey, and all overhead expenses, of $5.99 per acre. Many individual tracts included in these purchases have more than doubled in value since the Government acquired them. This area is now returning in revenue to the Treasury in excess of $100,000 per annum from the conservative and carefully regulated use of its timber and other resources. A very conservative appraisal of the land acquired up to the present time indicates that the demonstrable value of the land and timber is in excess of $19,000,000, or an increase over the cost of acquisition of more than $7,000,000.

Furthermore, the existing economic situation makes the present time probably the most favorable for the effective expenditure of Government funds in pursuance of this policy that has ever existed since that policy was adopted. Forest lands, particularly cut-over forest lands of the character whose acquisition is most desirable to accomplish the purposes of the Weeks Act, are now available at exceedingly low prices owing to the desire of many owners to convert such forms of property into cash.

At the meeting of the National Forest Reservation Commission in December, 1921, the purchase of 135,000 acres of land in a considerable number of different tracts was approved at an average price of $3.33 per acre. Considering the character of the timber and young growth on these areas, as well as their public value for watershed protection, this was the most advantageous list of purchases that has probably ever been passed upon by the commission. The Forest Service has today pending offers in localities previously approved by the commission as desirable for purchase under this law, which aggregate 837,000 acres, obtainable at terms probably equally as advantageous as the purchases approved by the commission in December.

Because I am convinced that as a public investment reasonable appropriations can be very effectively expended at the present time for this purpose, and because, in my judgment, the policy which the Nation has adopted can only be carried out efficiently by continuous and uninterrupted effort on a moderate scale, I believe that some provision for continuing the purchases should be made during the ensuing fiscal year. You understand thoroughly my position in the matter of economy; and I regard it as thoroughly consistent with that position to urge that the Bureau of the Budget approve a supplemental estimate of not less than $500,000 for the item in question. Such a fund, while entailing a reduction from the scale of the present work, would enable it to go forward and would permit the Government to take advantage of the most favorable offers now in hand.

Respectfully,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for a division. I should like to see how many Senators vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina requests a division.

The question being put, on a division the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, economy is, and should be, our national watchword. I believe in it, but not to the extent of injuring efficiency or limiting service that will benefit the entire population. The Department of Agriculture should have adequate support—greater than ever before in the history of the country—because it has a larger job to handle, more problems to meet, and faces a critical situation in which to meet them.

The Department of Agriculture has a man-sized job on its hands in helping to get agriculture on its feet, in working out farming economies, in supplying the Nation with agricultural and marketing information, and in encouraging greater and more efficient production of crops and live stock, which will redound to the benefit not only of the farmers but of the entire citizenship.

To accomplish this work the department needs liberal funds. On a job so important, so vital to the Nation, it is a mistake to be anything but liberal with finances. There are times when the spending of money makes possible great future economies. I think that is true of money appropriated for the Department of Agriculture to-day. Congress can best economize by being liberal, and making possible the giving of a broader service to agriculture.

Mr. President, for many years the United States Government has been content to let agriculture take care of itself. There has been no national policy of a constructive nature. Farmers have gone on producing under many handicaps that might easily have been removed. The result has been disaster that in the last two years has overtaken the farmers, caused billions of dollars in losses by shrinkage in the value of farm products, and has been seriously detrimental to business throughout the land. Agriculture has been brought to a point where its future is in peril, where it is bound to go backward unless real relief is forthcoming.

The need of a constructive national program looking to the rehabilitation of agriculture is imperative. I think that fact is appreciated by business men as well as by farmers. It is generally accepted that prosperity must come first to the farms before it can prevail in the city. Evils that have grown up must be corrected before agriculture can function in a normal and profitable way.

A vigorous, strong, and properly supported Department of Agriculture will be a vital factor in working out and putting into effect a constructive national agricultural program. It is the logical machinery to handle that work, because it knows what must be done and the best way to get it done.

Mr. President, the unfavorable conditions under which agriculture has been struggling have wrought serious changes in it. The hazards of the business have driven out owners and brought in tenants. Tenancy is increasing every year, and this is a menace to the Nation, because it means, in the final analysis, that soil rapidly is being depleted, and little is being done on many acres to build up fertility. The average renter is not a soil improver.

In 1920, renters operated 37 per cent of the farm lands of the United States. That area was 42 per cent of the improved farm acreage and 44 per cent of the total valuation of the land, both improved and unimproved. Tenant farmers rent land equal to the combined area of Texas, Illinois, Iowa, Arkansas, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Florida. Tenant farmers operate more than 265,000,000 acres.

Farms are growing larger. The number of renters has not increased so far as the number of acres they lease. While the proportion of rented farms increased 3 per cent between 1910 and 1920, the increase in acres rented during the same period has been 20 per cent.

Young farmers, on whom the future of the industry depends, are quitting the soil because operating it no longer is as profitable as many lines of employment in the city. It is a shame that the greatest industry in the United States should be in such a plight. It is near a disgrace that a Government should allow such a condition to persist, to the injury of every citizen. There is no excuse for its existence except national neglect, caused, I believe, rather by ignorance than by intent.

Some phases of this situation are familiar to business men. The depression of the last few years got them to look for causes, and they discovered that the real cause of depression was the way in which the farmer was made to stand the brunt of it all. Prices of his products were the first to be smashed down to below even the pre-war average. Farmers were deflated in a hurry, and so crudely that in many cases the punctures were so big that they could not be patched up. In a few months farm wealth figures in billions was written down to millions, and then business yelled because the farmers would not buy. They could not buy. Between the market manipulators who smashed prices and the banks which withheld credit and forced the liquidation of obligations, the farmer was helpless. He did not control his market. He had to take what was offered for the things he had to sell. With creditors pressing, the farmer was forced to liquidate what he could turn, even at a sacrifice. The industry was thrown into confusion from end to end. It is still suffering from the effects of a system that will permit the perpetration of such a national wrong. The farmer was helpless, and all the wolves were free to prey upon him.

Mr. President, agriculture would not have been injured so much if the same policy of forced deflation had been applied to every other industry; but while the price of the farmer's products dropped like a plummet, prices of other commodities decreased only slightly, if at all. The cost of living and operating a farm remained virtually unchanged, but the revenue from that operation was more than cut in two. The farmer did not get out of the market; he was put out—kicked out, in fact.

The consumer did not profit from the plague of deflation visited upon the farmer. He continued to pay as much for food, and any decreases were mighty slow in coming. For a year or more somebody was holding up the consumer of the Nation, robbing the farmer and the city man at the same time, and apparently they have gotten away with it. There were billions in that loot that should have been spent for food and clothing and farm equipment. If it had gone to the farmers and to the consumers business would not have gone through the depression that has caused such serious losses.

But I am happy to say, Mr. President, that the number of business men in this country who realize that the farmer has not had a square deal, and that he must have a square deal before the Nation can be truly prosperous, is increasing rapidly. They realize that action taken to benefit the farmers is not in any sense class promotion. Their analysis has told them, as it has told those closely in touch with agriculture, that the business of farming is fundamental and must be given as much thought and assistance as have been accorded to other industries which it actually overshadows in magnitude.

Agriculture is the greatest industry in the United States. It is an $80,000,000,000 affair. Once it gave the Nation $22,000,000,000 in new wealth every year, and supplied 50 per cent of its bank deposits. It will do the same and more if it is given a square deal to-day; but if it is to flourish it must be encouraged and safeguarded.

The time is past when the Nation should tolerate those whose greed insists on making the farmers the goats—men who would bleed farmers white in order to amass fortunes to hide away in tax-exempt securities. The wolves already have been permitted to run free too long. Market gamblers have had their day and have robbed right and left with impunity. I hope that particular book of wrong has finally been closed.

Mr. President, it is up to Congress and the Government to assist in working out a national program which will give the farmer a larger share of the fruits of his labor and a chance to have something to say about the price he receives for his products. Cooperative marketing should be encouraged. Better credit facilities must be established to enable the farmer successfully to operate with his slow turnover. He must have, and rightfully can demand, as good financing as other industries and businesses receive. That is only fair. To-day the farmer very largely gets credit in a haphazard, unsystematic way, after other industry has been served. He gets the crumbs, if there are any, from the financial table. In the last few years even the crumbs had been cleaned up before the farmer had a chance at them.

Certain things of an emergency nature have been attempted and accomplished, and they are helping relieve the agricultural situation. Immediate relief of intolerable conditions was sought. The worst injuries were treated. Much still remains to be done.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that this corrective legislation has been sponsored and promoted by the agricultural bloc. Congress has realized the grave importance of doing something constructive to aid agriculture and has passed several valuable acts. The billion-dollar War Finance Corporation to handle agricultural credit more effectively is one. The Capper-Tincher future trading bill to regulate the grain exchanges is another. Then there is the packer control bill, the agricultural emergency tariff bill, the Kenyon bill increasing interest rates on bonds of the farm-loan banks from 5 to 5½ per cent, and the Curtis bill authorizing the appropriation of $25,000,000 as a revolving fund for the Federal farm loan banks. One of the most important enactments was the passage of the measure permitting farmers to market their products cooperatively. That measure gives the farmer the opportunity to help himself in overcoming and removing many of the evils that have grown up in the marketing of agricultural products. It will tend to reduce the great spread between the prices the producer receives and the price the consumer pays for the products.

The farm bloc favors a liberal but sane appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, so that it may function efficiently and conduct its activities on a scale in conformity with the size and importance of the industry it serves.

The farm bloc believes railway freight rates are too high and must come down.

The farm bloc would restore to State railway commissions much of the power taken away from them by an unwarrantable interpretation of the transportation act by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Another measure favored by the farm bloc which will contribute to a permanent and prosperous system of agriculture is the development of the Muscle Shoals project. We should resume work immediately on the Government's great fertilizer and power plants on the Tennessee River. The Nation's fertilizer bill is now about $250,000,000 annually. I believe it is possible to reduce this one-half if we carry out the Muscle Shoals program.

The farm bloc is supporting the Capper-French truth-in-fabric bill to compel makers of clothing to brand their goods so that the buyer will know the amount of pure wool and the amount of shoddy in it.

First in its program, the farm bloc holds credit reform. It realizes that agriculture is at the mercy of those who control credit, and that many who exert that control are not particularly in sympathy with agriculture. The farm bloc knows that farmers have suffered and many have been ruined financially by lack of credit.

The farm bloc is seeking to evolve a credit plan which will give relief to agriculture, which will make more money for financing the slow turnover of the farms, which will give the farmer another opportunity to go ahead with his work with a decent chance to make good. If that is accomplished, it will mean cheaper food, more work, reopened factories and mills, and a return of good times.

Senator McNARY's bill extending the operation of the War Finance Corporation until July 1, 1923, should be promptly passed by this Congress.

The activities of the Farm Loan Board must be enlarged and extended. The 12 farm land banks now have applications for loans amounting to more than $150,000,000, but the funds available are wholly inadequate to take care of the pressing needs of the farmers.

Another obvious need in the way of further legislation for the encouragement of agriculture is a law that will make the Federal Reserve Board more responsive to the farmer's credit needs. This is best met, in the judgment of many, by the bill which already has passed this body and is pending in the House, providing for the recognition of agriculture in the appointment of members of the board. This bill makes but a single change in the existing law, inserting the word "agricultural," so that when appointing members of the Federal Reserve Board the President "shall have due regard to a fair representation of the different agricultural, commercial, industrial, and geographic divisions of the country." A studied effort has been made to have this legislation appear to be class legislation, but such a conclusion can be reached only as a result of a complete failure to comprehend its import. Agriculture is our greatest industry. Surely an effort to have it given only the same consideration that is given to commercial and industrial divisions in our Nation can not truthfully be defined as an attempt to obtain class legislation. When the dependence of other industries on agriculture is more clearly understood I look for the prompt enactment of the bill by the House. Only the fear that the President might appoint to this position a man ill-fitted for the place can justify further opposition to this measure; and surely that is a far-fetched assumption, as has been so well said by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace.

Mr. President, the charge has been made that the farm bloc seeks class legislation, and that its aim is to profit agriculture, no matter at what cost to other industry. The men who make that charge lose sight of the fundamental fact that agriculture is basic, that what contributes to its prosperity and well-being unquestionably benefits all industry. When agriculture is profitable the Nation is prosperous.

It is not class legislation to demand that agriculture have as good credit facilities as any other business; that farmers be encouraged to work together to improve their marketing condition; that the market gamblers and speculators and the selfish class which has grafted off of the farmers for many years be unmasked and controlled.

The farm bloc does not recognize the right of any class to have an advantage at the expense of another group or of the population as a whole. The interests which oppose it fight the farm bloc because it does not tolerate their pet piracies. Vested interests have been bloodsucking the farmer long enough.

The purposes of the farm bloc are economic, not political. It is striving for a more sensible program of national development in which agriculture will occupy its rightful position and be accorded the interest it deserves. Its aim is to bring about a better understanding and greater cooperation among all worthy elements of the population, to the end that all may be aided; and it will fight, and fight hard, to accomplish that aim.

Mr. President, I know that Congress and the administration are in sympathy with the needs of agriculture, that they are anxious to promote the welfare of the farmers of the country, and that they have their feet solidly on the ground. That is why so much already has been accomplished, and why so much more will be done. We have an able and efficient Secretary of Agriculture. His department is doing great work for the upbuilding of the agricultural interests of this country. A liberal policy toward this department will serve to make more valuable and serviceable the legislation already enacted, and to safeguard the improvement in agricultural conditions that has been accomplished.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent to recur to the item on page 20, making an appropriation of $175,000, of which $50,000 shall be immediately available, for the eradication of the white-pine blister.

Mr. President, first of all, I want to say that I have been very greatly interested in the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. He is not only a very able Senator but a very conscientious man, and whenever he speaks he has something to say to the Senate. I, of course, can not take to myself any of the credit for the passage of this legislation, because I did not happen to belong to the bloc. Although a farmer, I have never studied law, and I do not belong to any bloc or to any class, but I simply try to do my duty as a Senator, and whenever legislation which is beneficial to the farmer is up for consideration, I am sure it has my indorsement and approval.

Yesterday I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] explaining the spores and fungi which appear on the barberry bush in many of the Central Western States, and which are so destructive to the cereal crops which are raised there. I favored an increase in the appropriation for the eradication of that pest, not that it affects my State at all, or even New England, as very little wheat, barley, or cereals of any kind are raised in New England, although I know it is not intended to overlook my State, the most easterly in the Union, because we do raise great quantities of potatoes down there.

What I wish to call the Senate's attention to at this time is the fact that while the wheat and barley and oat crops are crops which are raised yearly, the crop which I want protected when once destroyed it takes at least 75 years to reproduce. The same condition exists with the pine tree in my State that exists with the wheat in the States of the central West. Their's is a black rust, which appears on the stem of the wheat, as I understand it, which comes from spores which multiply on the barberry bush. In Maine the white-pine blister, which is such a pest to us, comes from the currant or gooseberry bush. It is not to-day so extensive but that I believe with a fair amount of exertion and a proper appropriation it might be entirely exterminated.

I believe in a spirit of fairness, and whenever any State of this Union can be benefited by an appropriation of the Federal Government, wherever that State is, in whatever section of the country, whenever it appeals to me that it is an advantage, it has my approval. I am not so much of a partisan as a great many, and I am not so particular about political divisions.

An appropriation for any section of this great country which may be benefited by such appropriation, whether the East or the West or the South or the North, has my approval, and I am going to ask for an amendment to this particular appropriation carrying $175,000, and ask Senators from all the States of the Union to view this precisely as they view the situation in their own States regarding their own crops.

The State of Maine, as Senators know, is called the "Dirigo" State. We have 23,000,000,000 feet of spruce growing on the soil of Maine and an equal amount of pine trees. This promises to be a very serious matter. The lumbermen of my State have already taken precautions and are trying to stamp out the pest, and I believe with a sufficient appropriation at this time, or a small increase in this amount, it may be entirely exterminated. Therefore I move that this amount be increased from $175,000 to $250,000, and I hope the Senator having the bill in charge will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that by the consent agreement committee amendments are to be taken up and disposed of before individual amendments are entertained.

Mr. FERNALD. Then I withhold the amendment for the present, Mr. President.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, with regard to the appropriation for the Appalachian Forest, I desire to say that a great work is being done there and a large quantity of land can be acquired very cheaply. Unless we do something to protect our streams a great number of them will soon fill up with sand and silt.

I remember that when in 1908 we had a great flood in the South, the Pacolet River, which rises in this forest, rose 40 feet within one hour. That sounds upreasonable and it is hard to believe, but on that stream there were several very large cotton mills, and at that time several of those mills were literally washed away. In the case of two of the largest mills in the South not only the machinery but the buildings themselves were washed down the streams.

Mr. OVERMAN. And tenant houses were washed away.

Mr. DIAL. A great number of tenant houses were washed away. I remember very vividly about that time, because I was interested in a property half the value of which was destroyed during that flood.

In my country the old people speak of the "August freshet." That means the freshet of 1854. The streams were higher then than at any time on record before this last flood. After that, when engineers were developing water power, they would lay out their plants having in view a stream reaching the height reached by the streams in that year. During the last flood, of which I have just spoken, the streams in that section rose 10 feet higher than in 1854.

For these reasons I must commend the Senate for adopting that amendment. Money could not be spent to any better purpose.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 11, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That at any time during the fiscal year 1922 or thereafter, when the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that the interests of the Government will be subserved thereby, he is hereby authorized to appraise the buildings, animals, machinery, and all other property of whatever nature or kind appertaining to the experimental farm of the Department of Agriculture, situated at or near New Iberia, La., and to sell the same at public or private sale, at such price or prices, on such terms, and in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of the Government, and in consummation thereof to execute such instruments of conveyance as may be requisite, the proceeds from such sale to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 9, after the word "except," to strike out "one person at a rate of $6,500 per annum" and to insert "three persons at a rate of $6,500 per annum each," so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the packers and stockyards act, approved August 15, 1921, $410,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum except three persons at a rate of $6,500 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, at the end of line 19, to increase the total appropriation for the Department of Agriculture from "$35,692,233" to "$35,808,533."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Are we considering only committee amendments at this juncture?

Mr. McNARY. I think that concludes the committee amendments. A few moments ago I asked that the States Relations Service items, beginning on page 54, be passed over for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has proposed an amendment to that part of the bill, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 57, line 25, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000," so as to read:

For cooperative agricultural extension work, to be allotted, paid, and expended in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same supervision as the additional appropriations made by the act of May 8, 1914 (38 Stat. L. p. 372), entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," $1,500,000, etc.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not take up much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of this amendment, and before I begin I want to allude to the manner in which this bill was originally framed and the suggestions or estimates made by the Budget Director.

The original estimate of the Agricultural Department was, I think, for $3,000,000 more than the amount which was submitted by the Director of the Budget. In other words, when the Department of Agriculture submitted the estimates for the appropriations for that department to the Director of the Budget it was cut practically $3,000,000.

I want to state the manner in which it was cut, and if such procedure and policy is to be followed by the Budget Bureau the American people will not stand for the continuation of that bureau. Everything the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] said in his speech a few moments ago is true touching the importance of agriculture and the necessity for appropriations therefor.

When the Secretary of War submitted his estimate for the Army to the Director of the Budget I am informed that the estimate remained intact and that it was submitted to Congress in practically the same amount that was originally submitted to the Director of the Budget by the War Department. That is for the Army, and I do not know as to the Navy. But the Agricultural Department estimate is cut $3,000,000 by the estimate of the Budget. How was it done? When it was submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Director of the Budget he did not look it over himself. If he had we might have had some respect for the estimate contained in his report. He placed it in the hands of one of the employees of the Budget Bureau, a person whose name I do not now recall, who was formerly the manager of the La Salle Hotel, in the city of Chicago, a person who, so far as the record discloses, never farmed in his life or had any knowledge of agriculture—a very estimable gentleman, perhaps, and very competent, perhaps; but he, the ex-manager of the La Salle Hotel, an employee in the Bureau of the Budget, was placed in charge and control of the estimates submitted by the Department of Agriculture to the Bureau of the Budget, and he cut that estimate $750,000. In cutting it, however, he did consult with certain officials of the Department of Agriculture. To that extent he is to be complimented.

The estimate then went for the signature of the Director of the Budget, and he refused to sign it. He said the amount had not been cut sufficiently, and he designated another person, an employee of the Budget Bureau, to take the estimate and make further reductions, giving him instructions to cut it practically $2,000,000 more. The Director of the Budget, Mr. Dawes, designated an Army officer, a graduate of West Point, a general, I believe, who knew nothing about agriculture, and, I suppose, never worked a day on a farm in his life. This general, this Army officer, this employee of the Budget Bureau, without knowledge of agriculture and without conference, I might say, with the employees or heads of the bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, took the estimate and cut it another $2,000,000. The question was put to Doctor Ball and to the Secretary of Agriculture whether, in making the reduction of practically $3,000,000 of the original estimate submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Director of the Budget, such items were taken into consideration showing the needs of some to be decreased and others to be eliminated. They said no; that they just took the whole bill and slashed it to the amount of $2,000,000.

That is the way the Director of the Budget is performing, and those who are interested in agriculture in America, who have heard the praises of certain gentlemen in this Chamber and elsewhere respecting the Budget Bureau, should know that when it comes to appropriating money for the Agriculture Department an Army officer, without knowledge of agriculture, is designated by the Director of the Budget to slice it without respect to the needs and exigencies of the hour.

So while the Army bill, so far as the Budget Bureau is concerned, is submitted in practically the same figure as requested by the Secretary of War, the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture is treated differently, and the Director of the Budget cuts it $3,000,000 below the estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture. Of course, agriculture is not getting a fair deal. It can not get a fair deal under such circumstances as that. If they were going to cut these estimates, why did not this Army officer, representing General Dawes, talk with the Secretary of Agriculture or Doctor Ball or the other gentlemen in the Department of Agriculture who are informed as to the condition and the needs of agriculture?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does not the director himself think that they grow wheat in the stock or grain exchanges?

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps so. The impression has gone abroad that the Director of the Budget, General Dawes, a splendid man, a fine business fellow, straight and honest so far as I know, efficient and courageous and competent, looks over these estimates when they come to him. He never sees them; but under the system that is now practiced some employee in his bureau, without knowledge of the particular subject matter, is designated to go over them and cut them without respect to the needs of the department involved.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the river and harbor bill was cut by Mr. Dawes's authority or his demand to, I think, $13,000,000. The information I have is that when he was called upon to explain that he said the figure had been arrived at by taking the appropriations of last year and of the year before. He did not know that last year when the $15,000,000 appropriation was made—I think that was the figure, but I am speaking from memory—there was unexpended and on hand a very large amount of money, and again I am speaking from recollection, but I think it was something like $40,000,000, and that that was the reason why the appropriation last year was made so small, because of the large amount of unexpended balance being on hand.

So without any information of that character he proceeded to say that we needed only $13,000,000 this year, although in fact, if I have the figures correctly in my mind, we actually had last year something like $65,000,000, counting the unexpended balance.

That is the way business is being done by one man and his cohorts who are undertaking to supervise the business that belongs to the Congress. I wish to repeat now what I intend to repeat on every occasion, that I voted against the Budget scheme.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator for what he has said touching the action of the director with reference to rivers and harbors. It is quite true that he took into consideration moneys that had not been expended, but which had been appropriated and for which contracts had been made, and which had to be spent on the particular projects, and that work had merely been delayed because of the war and conditions arising out of the war.

It reminds me of what happened to the rivers and harbors estimate under the system of the Director of the Budget. The estimate of the War Department for rivers and harbors for the coming year was $42,000,000. That estimate is made by a board composed of men who are trained, who have specialized in river and harbor improvements. They know the conditions of the country as no other class of men in the country know them, and yet notwithstanding their estimate was $42,000,000, General Dawes, I presume, did not like it—I have no idea that he knew anything about it—and some employee in the bureau cut it to $13,000,000. Then the River and Harbor Committee of the House, realizing that the conditions of the country would not stand for such treatment as that, knowing that the rivers and harbors had filled up during the years of inadequate appropriations for river and harbor improvement, and that that applied to every port throughout the country and every river in America, called in General Dawes and the friends of river and harbor improvements over there and had a conference with him. When it was brought to his attention, he did raise the estimate from $13,000,000 to $27,000,000, but the House thought when a few days ago the river and harbor appropriation bill was before it for consideration that the board of Army engineers knew more about the needs and conditions of the rivers and harbors than General Dawes; so notwithstanding the fact that he had raised his estimate from the original $13,000,000 to $27,600,000, the House by an overwhelming majority, on the recommendation and under the whip and spur of the River and Harbor Committee of the House, increased the amount of Dawes's estimate and made an appropriation of $42,000,000 as requested by the board of Army engineers. I congratulate the House of Representatives on their action. They showed an independence of action and courage which it would be well for the Senate to emulate.

If the Director of the Budget continues to designate some employee in his bureau to cut estimates without respect to the needs of the country, not only will the Congress lose respect for his estimates but the American people will rise up and demand a repeal of the Budget law. Representatives in Congress, both in the House and in the Senate, are those under our Constitution to make appropriations to care for the needs of the country, and we should not delegate that authority to any one person.

However, that is aside from what I had risen to say. The amendment I have proposed covers the item on page 57, and I respectfully ask the attention of the Senate to the item. There is no more important proposition embraced in the bill than the item to which I am now calling attention. It is to care for the cooperative agricultural extension work throughout the United States. It applies no more to Mississippi than it does to Maine, no more to Nebraska than it does to Minnesota. It covers every part of the country.

The appropriation in this paragraph carried in the bill is $1,000,000. The estimate of General Dawes, notwithstanding he had cut the total amount carried by the bill practically $3,000,000, was $1,500,000 for this item, but the House did not give the $1,500,000 requested both by the Secretary of Agriculture in his estimate and by General Dawes in his estimate. They reduced it to $1,000,000. The Senate committee followed suit on a very close division in the committee, I think, and the bill only carries $1,000,000, $500,000 less than the estimate of General Dawes and $500,000 less than the estimate of the Department of Agriculture.

Why was the million and a half dollars requested? It was because the Smith-Lever agricultural extension bill, which was passed in 1914, provided for an initial appropriation to cooperate with the States in the matter of agricultural extension and cooperative work, which amount was to be increased approximately $500,000 each year for a certain number of years. This coming year is the last year that the increase is to be allowed. If we had appropriated $1,500,000 in the pending bill for the coming year, we should have fulfilled our part of the contract under the Smith-Lever law, but the Congress, if it should follow the recommendation of the committee, would not be complying with the requirements of the Smith-Lever law, because to do so it should appropriate $1,500,000.

I know what moved the Senate committee in not recommending an appropriation of $1,500,000 for this purpose. It was because Doctor Ball, representing the Agricultural Department, said that this was the same amount which was appropriated last year, and that if we appropriated the same amount this year as was appropriated last year, namely, $1,000,000, it would not affect the organization and would not cause a dislocation of the work. Of course not. The same amount of money being appropriated, it would take care of the same conditions, but when Congress inaugurated the plan provided in the Smith-Lever law the amount of the appropriation was to be increased year by year until this year at the rate of $500,000 annually.

There are approximately 700 agricultural counties in the United States to-day where this work is not being carried on and into which no appropriation out of the Federal Treasury goes to cooperate with the efforts of the States. How can those 700 agricultural counties be expected to receive the benefits of the act if we are not going to increase the amount according to the provisions of the Smith-Lever Act as originally passed? I submit that we ought to keep faith with the Congress of 1914 when it passed that act and grant this increase of $500,000.

I am not combating the proposition that the amount recommended by the committee is the same as that for last year, and that there will be no disorganization of the work if my amendment shall not be adopted, but if the Senate shall adopt the amendment it will enable the Agricultural Department to extend this desirable service into some of the 700 remaining agricultural countries throughout the country which do not now enjoy its benefits.

Mr. President, I saw this body and also the House of Representatives vote to appropriate millions of dollars to send seed to Russia. It was done as a humanitarian act. There are counties to-day in the United States, not alone in the South or West but they may be found in the North and in the East perhaps, where the farmer has been hard hit; where his taxes are heavier than they have been for years previous; where he has poorer crops than he had had for years past; where he needs help more than he has needed it for a long time. There are counties in my State—and I take it that we are no worse off in Mississippi than in other States—where the taxes are now so heavy that the people believe they must do away with the county agent who is provided for under the act; they believe they had better save a little because of the depressed conditions prevailing in the country to-day.

If such a condition exists in certain counties, why should not the Federal Government go to their relief and pay a little more to the county demonstration agent than it has heretofore paid, allowing the counties to pay a little less than they have previously paid? That will help the taxpayers to some extent, and you know they need it in some places.

Whenever we stop this work we hurt agriculture. So I submit that here an opportunity is offered to render some real aid and benefit to the agricultural interests of the country. The additional appropriation is needed; it merely carries out the purposes of the original act. I know of no action we could take which would result in more substantial benefit to the farmers at this time than to increase the appropriation for the cooperative extension work. It is the appropriation which provides for the county agents to go around to inform the farmers as to new, modern, and up-to-date methods of farming. Before the inauguration of this system, in certain sections of the country—and I know that this statement applies to my section—hogs formerly died by the thousands, but the county agents informed the farmers how to treat hog cholera and thereby saved thousands, yea millions, of dollars to those farmers. It was through the influence and advice of the county agents in one county in my State that a little red-headed, freckle-faced boy on some piney woods land was enabled to raise some 237 bushels of corn on 1 acre of ground.

It is under this appropriation that money has been furnished to send the lady demonstration agents around to teach the little girls how to can fruits and vegetables and to help in the solution of the problem of the high cost of living. So I submit that we should keep this service in a highly organized condition and appropriate every cent that is needed in order to carry on the work and still further to build it up where it is not now organized and in operation.

Mr. President, I hope that the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], in charge of the bill, will agree to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the committee considered this matter very carefully, and there was no effort upon the part of anyone to interfere with the agricultural extension work. As the Senator from Mississippi realizes, no one appreciates more than the members of the committee the great work which the Agricultural Extension Service is doing; but I think the RECORD might properly show the reason for the action of the committee.

There has been no sum of money deducted from the total to be used for this work. As suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, under the so-called Smith-Lever Act the maximum appropriation is reached this year, the annual increase having been $500,000. The Senate committee realizing that fact, omitted the $500,000 from the item which the Senator from Mississippi desires increased. The item to which he has asked to add $500,000 is supplementary only to the Smith-Lever Act, and was put on during the time of the war in order to induce increased production of farm products. It was for the purpose of stimulating production, and a million and a half dollars were appropriated. Inasmuch, however, as the appropriations under the Smith-Lever Act have increased so greatly until this year—referring to the fiscal year 1923—$500,000 being added to the amount heretofore appropriated in any one year, the committee thought that by decreasing the appropriation under the supplementary act $500,000, the same amount as heretofore would be available for the work; in fact, the service will have the same amount for next year. Acting upon that theory, the department itself not insisting upon an increase, but being satisfied with the appropriation provided by the bill, which will enable this splendid work they are now doing to proceed, the committee did not believe that there should be added the amount of money which has been suggested by the Senator from Mississippi.

That was the reason of the action of the committee; that is the reason the Senator in charge of the bill at this time does not feel that he can accept the amendment, because it is thought that all the money necessary will have been appropriated if the amounts as reported by the committee are voted into the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator in charge of the bill to concede that under the Smith-Lever Act the appropriations were to increase from year to year until they reached a maximum of $1,500,000 this year? Is that correct?

Mr. McNARY. Oh, no; they reached a maximum in 1920 of $4,580,000 under the Smith-Lever Act. The $500,000 to which I refer is a part of the $4,580,000. The act referred to on page 57, the appropriation under which it is the desire of the Senator from Mississippi to increase, is supplementary to the Smith-Lever Act. For the fiscal year 1924 the Smith-Lever Act will carry the same amount as it does this year, and then if it is desired further to carry on this work in cooperation with the colleges of the State $500,000 may properly be added to the general fund used for that purpose.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator concede the point that there are 700 colleges in the United States where this work has not been carried or tendered or offered?

Mr. McNARY. No; the Senator from Oregon does not concede that. The testimony before the Senate committee and the House committee shows that there are over 2,070 counties in the number of the 2,700 counties which have availed themselves of this appropriation. I think the department is willing and has funds sufficient to extend the work if the States and counties will cooperate, and the failure to extend it is due to the negligence of the counties rather than to the inertia of the department or the lack of funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my general pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut. I am unable to obtain a transfer and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. May I inquire whether he has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KING. I am unable to secure a transfer, and I am therefore compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announced the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Ashurst	Harris	Norbeck	Swanson
Culberson	Harrison	Norris	Trammell
Cummins	Heflin	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Johnson	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	Rawson	Weller
Fletcher	Kendrick	Reed	Williams
Gerry	Ladd	Sheppard
Harreld	La Follette	Simmons

NAYS—28.

Ball	Hale	McNary	Pepper
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Phipps
Bursum	Kellogg	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Keyes	New	Sutherland
Capper	Lenroot	Newberry	Townsend
Curtis	Lodge	Oddie	Warren
Ernst	McCormick	Page	Willis

NOT VOTING—38.

Brandegee	France	Myers	Smoot
Broussard	Frelinghuysen	Nicholson	Stanfield
Cameron	Glass	Owen	Stanley
Caraway	Gooding	Pittman	Sterling
Colt	Hitchcock	Poindexter	Underwood
Crow	King	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
du Pont	McKellar	Shields	Watson, Ind.
Edge	McKinley	Shortridge
Elkins	McLean	Smith

So Mr. HARRISON'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether the committee amendments have all been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask attention to——

Mr. MCNARY. Will the Senator yield until the committee can offer an amendment or two?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

Mr. MCNARY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 61, line 17, after the sum "$175,000," it is proposed to insert:

payable out of the administrative fund provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 68, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$175,000," and in lieu thereof to insert:

$146,540: Provided, That any moneys received from or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of practical forms of the official cotton standards and condemned as unsuitable for such use may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for the purchase of other cotton for such use.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 83, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

That hereafter the maximum salary of any scientific investigator or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriation of the Department of Agriculture shall not exceed the rate of $6,500 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1923 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000, except the following: Not more than 8 in excess of $5,000, but not in excess of $5,500 each, and not more than 3 in excess of $5,500 each.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator to explain the purpose of this amendment. If we are advancing these 2,000 scientists, so-called, to $6,500 per annum, I see no reason why in every other department where there are men of special attainment, expert bookkeepers, lawyers of skill and ability, and men of many other professions which will suggest themselves readily to the Senator, we will not have to increase their compensation. It seems to me the Senator is establishing a precedent now the result of which will be that the salaries to be paid to employees of the United States will be doubled, and in many instances trebled, so that in the end the aggregate will be tens if not hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, replying to the Senator from Utah, I have offered this amendment after the matter was considered thoroughly by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The present limitation of $4,500 on scientists is so small that a great many of them are taken into private enterprises. Endowed universities and State institutions pay a great deal more than $6,500, and it is impossible for the department, after very many years of care and good treatment of these scientists, to keep them in this departmental work, which is very important to the agricultural interests of the country.

It was thought that if the number of men enumerated in the amendment should receive a salary higher than $4,500, it would encourage them to remain in the department, doing the great work they are doing for agriculture, instead of becoming connected with private concerns and the endowed universities of the country. It will not increase the total of the appropriation. It gives a wider discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture to pay larger salaries to these men, who are so essential to the great research work upon which the whole superstructure of agriculture rests.

I may add that it is the hope and belief of the Secretary of Agriculture that it will work a great economy; that a few fairly highly paid scientists working in laboratories and doing research work will accomplish very much more than a few mediocre men receiving $4,500, who, when they do become efficient, are taken away by private institutions.

Mr. KING. Under the amendment, how many would be transferred to the $6,500 category?

Mr. MCNARY. The amendment in itself simply gives a latitude and a discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture to pay that salary when he thinks it essential for the good of the department.

Mr. KING. Is there any limitation upon the number?

Mr. MCNARY. There is a limitation in the amendment which I have offered. I think there are 11 authorized, altogether.

Mr. KING. Are there any now receiving $6,500?

Mr. MCNARY. None whatsoever.

Mr. KING. There are approximately 2,000 scientists, I am advised, in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MCNARY. Yes; doing various work in the different bureaus along scientific lines—research work.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator taken into account the psychology of this proceeding? It is obvious, it seems to me, that if we give some $6,500, it would lead to discontent. Others will say that their services are just as good as those of the men who are receiving $6,500, and the importunities will be so great for increases that the end will only be reached when all get $6,500, and when that time comes resentments will arise in other departments. Men in other departments who occupy positions calling for ability will insist that they are just as good as men in the Agriculture Department, and they will insist upon increases in compensation.

Mr. MCNARY. If we are going to let the measure of our generosity be discontent, I suppose it would affect every individual, from chair-warmer up, in all the departments of the Government; but the Senator must understand that men who devote their lives to scientific research, issuing pamphlets, making discoveries of insecticides, studying insects and fungi and the great destruction they are bringing about in the country generally, and all the diseases by which hogs and live stock generally are affected, are worth more than $4,500 a year, and will not remain in public employ on such a meager salary. In order to encourage those men to do this work, it is thought wise that the Secretary of Agriculture, in a few instances where they do work commensurate with the salary, shall have the opportunity of increasing their salaries from $4,500 to $6,500, with the conservative limitation set forth in the amendment.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether this becomes a general statute, or is it to be limited to this one year?

Mr. MCNARY. It is limited to the scientific work in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not answer my question. It was my fault in not making myself clear. Is it the purpose of the Senator to make this a general law, which will be carried into the future, or does the provision expire by limitation at the end of the year?

Mr. MCNARY. It is attached to the present appropriation bill, and it will expire at the end of the fiscal year 1923. I may express the hope that it will be continued indefinitely. I should like to see it become a fixed statute.

Mr. KING. That is a matter to be considered later. I am not sure that the Senator from Oregon is right that it will expire by limitation. On reading the amendment, I think the Senator is wrong, if he will pardon me. It provides that hereafter the maximum salaries of any scientific investigator or other employee shall not exceed such and such a salary. So it is a fixed statute, and would become a part of the permanent law. I raise a point of order against the proposed amendment. It is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and is therefore obnoxious to the rule which forbids general legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think the point of order is well taken. It is not new or general legislation. In very many appropriation bills providing funds for the administration of the Department of Agriculture limitations of this character have been carried.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been reported by a standing committee.

Mr. McNARY. It has been reported by the standing committee to which the legislation was referred, and reported by the department, and is contained in the official estimate of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. CURTIS. If the provision makes it permanent law, it does not make any difference whether it was estimated for or not; it is subject to a point of order as general legislation.

Mr. KING. If that were not true, you might increase the number of employees, as this does; you might change entirely the statutory salaries provided by general law, and introduce all forms and sorts of new legislation general in character, as this is.

Mr. McNARY. I will modify the amendment offered a few moments ago by striking out the words "that hereafter" and inserting the following words "during the fiscal year 1923."

Mr. CURTIS. That makes it all right.

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think that my adroit and learned friend has met the point of order which I suggested, and the amendment as modified is not obnoxious to the rule to which I called attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I respectfully direct attention to page 80 of the bill, line 13. I will read the whole paragraph, which commences on page 79, line 22. It reads as follows:

ERADICATION OF THE PARLATORIA DATE SCALE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the existence of the Parlatoria date scale in California, Arizona, or any other State, and to provide means for the extermination of this insect in California, Arizona, or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, $13,000.

I seek to increase the amount from $13,000 to $15,000. At the appropriate time I shall move to strike out the "$13,000" and to insert "$15,000." I do not deem it necessary or advisable for me to traverse here the ground I went over in such infinite detail in 1921, but I will take time briefly to say that in Arizona and California, in Texas and New Mexico, there has grown up a date culture which is astonishing in its extent. Many millions of dollars are invested in that date culture. I have spoken about these dates before, and Senators are familiar with their character, how delicate they are, and how much extreme care must be employed in their culture.

The Federal Government has spent a vast sum of money in establishing this date culture. These dates are capturing the markets everywhere, but this insect, Parlatoria, has attacked the dates, and last year the sum of $15,000 was found adequate to combat this insect and save the date crop. I am advised by the Bureau of Plant Industry that a like sum, $15,000, would be necessary this year, and without further argument I ask to have read a memorandum regarding the eradication of the Parlatoria date scale, which says much more succinctly than I could what ought to be said upon the subject. I ask that the Secretary read the memorandum, because it constitutes all I could or would desire to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the memorandum.

The reading clerk read as follows:

MEMORANDUM REGARDING ERADICATION OF PARLATORIA SCALE IN THE DATE PALM.

Date culture is one of the most promising new fruit culture recently introduced into the hot, irrigated valleys of the Southwestern States. The first successful production of the Deglet Noor date was made in Arizona in 1910 by the University of Arizona. The Deglet Noor palm was introduced into the Southwest in 1900 and up to 1910 none of the fruit had been ripened. The methods first worked out in Arizona were then modified and applied to California, with the result that a flourishing date industry has developed in the Coachella Valley, where the climatic and soil conditions seem admirably adapted to this very profitable new fruit culture.

It was soon found by entomologists that all date palms were attacked by two dangerous insects, and that one of these—the Parlatoria—was so destructive as practically to render date culture impossible. It was found that the date palm could not be grown successfully in this country in the presence of this scale. The young palms, it is true, could be fumigated, but the older trees could not be treated without very heavy expense. Here again the University of Arizona led the way in discovering a new method for eradicating this scale pest on the observations made in San Francisco after the great fire, where it was observed that dates and other palm trees that had been burned to a crisp afterwards sprouted out and made a healthy new top. This drastic method of burning the top and the charring of the whole trunk was then applied to the cooperative date orchard at Tempe, Ariz., and the Parlatoria scale was destroyed here completely for the first time in history, some 12 years ago.

Owing to the very heavy importations of date palms made from 1911 to 1915 this Parlatoria scale was reintroduced into many orchards in Arizona and California, and as the trees get older the eradication of this scale has become increasingly difficult. In the meantime the date industry is showing more and more promise, and large investments are being made in California and Arizona, and it is highly probable that the date industry will very shortly be extended into southern Texas as well. So threatening were the conditions that an appropriation of $15,000 was carried in the last appropriation bill for the eradication of the Parlatoria date scale, and the work of eradication was carried on during the past year in a very vigorous way. In the meantime, however, more than 10,000 additional date offshots have been imported since this appropriation became available on March 3, 1921, and it has been found that the work of completely eradicating this scale from the 10 or 12 older date plantations which are now infested is proving to be very costly. Originally more than 100 date plantations were infested with this scale. At present there are not over 10 per cent of these plantations showing infestation by this insect. It is of the utmost importance to clean up these remaining plantations and to so treat the new importations that they will be completely cleaned before the offshoots they produce will be distributed to the growers. It is a matter of the utmost importance, therefore, that this work be continued at full energy until the last Parlatoria date scale in the United States is killed. Only in this way can the date industry be considered a safe and sound investment. Already $10,000,000 are invested in this industry, and there is every reason to expect the investments to increase rapidly in the near future until from thirty to fifty millions are invested in this new fruit culture.

The expenditure of the small amount of money necessary to safeguard this great industry is bound to revert to the United States Treasury ten or twenty fold in the income-tax returns from the large date plantations now being set out. The experience with cotton boll weevil, gypsy moth, and white-pine blister, together with other dangerous diseases, shows only too clearly how important it is to safeguard new crops from dangerous insect enemies or diseases. In the present case methods worked out in this country have been applied successfully and can unquestionably be utilized to the effect of completing the eradication of this dangerous scale and thereby pave the way for the establishment of a profitable new industry which can be carried out in regions not especially suitable for ordinary fruit culture. In other words, the date industry does not displace other profitable fruit industries but creates a new fruit industry where none now exists. It is obvious that such a result is bound to be perceived sooner or later in the income-tax returns.

Mr. ASHURST. In line 3, on page 80, I move to strike out the numerals "$13,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$15,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the proviso in line 6, page 66, in the item providing for the publication of certain statistics. The proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That not less than $65,000 shall be used for collecting and disseminating to American producers—

And so forth. I think, in view of the fact that the Department of Commerce carries on the same work, the language ought to be "not more than $65,000," especially in view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture estimated for $65,000 for the work. I move, therefore, to amend by striking out the word "less" and inserting the word "more," in line 6.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 66, line 6, strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more," so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That not more than $65,000 shall be used for collecting and disseminating to American producers—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 35, line 19, I move to substitute a colon for the semicolon following the numerals in that line, and to add the following proviso:

Provided, That $15,000 of this amount shall be used for the investigation by the Forest Products Laboratory, United States Department of Agriculture, of flax straw as a source of supply for the manufacture of pulp and paper.

The amendment which I propose does not increase the appropriation. It simply insures that $15,000 of the lump sum of $340,000 shall be utilized for carrying forward experiments which are now under way giving great promise of our being able to utilize the vast amount of flax straw that is wasted in the country, running up into something like 1,500,000 tons annually, for the manufacture of pulp and paper. I simply desire to make certain that at least $15,000 of the sum shall be utilized for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 39, line 19, after the numerals "$340,000" and before the semicolon, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That $15,000 of this amount shall be used for the investigation by the Forest Products Laboratory, United States Department of Agriculture, of flax straw as a source of supply for the manufacture of pulp and paper.

Mr. MCNARY. The bureau in estimating this amount set aside $15,000 for the work suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, and the proposed amendment makes it more certain. I think it is a proper amendment, and I am willing to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 75, in line 16, after the words "may be made," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof:

$12,500, of which the Secretary is authorized to use not exceeding $3,000 for the purpose of building a cottage for the herdsman, and additional sheds, stalls, and pens for the protection and care of said animals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MCNARY. I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if this is an estimate submitted by the Department of Agriculture or the Director of the Budget?

Mr. HARRELD. It is a matter recommended by the Director of the Budget. It was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget exactly in the words of the amendment which I have offered. For some reason the amount was reduced by the committee. I did not know it until a few days ago when my attention was called to it. I naturally thought, after it had been passed upon by the Budget, that there would be no further trouble about it. I should like to inquire if anyone knows the reason why it was changed? This experiment station, I may say, has been in existence for a great many years. They were asking for a larger appropriation than this and the Bureau of the Budget reduced it to this amount.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma, if the experiment station has been in existence, as just stated by him, for many years, why it has not been found necessary in the past to erect buildings for the purpose contemplated in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. HARRELD. This is the first time any appropriation has been recommended to build the herdsman's cottage, but it is needed very badly. They have not any place for him to live, and the present condition interferes with the proper management of the experiment station.

Mr. KING. If he has gotten along thus far without any difficulty, will the Senator explain the necessity for increasing the appropriation now?

Mr. HARRELD. The experiment station has been in existence several years, but during the war all requests for an appropriation for this house were refused, of course, because the money was not available for that purpose. Lack of it handicaps and interferes very materially with the proper conduct of the experiment station. I have here, in the form of an editorial published in a Woodward (Okla.) paper, a very graphic description of conditions there, if any Senator wishes to see it.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRELD. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. The House committee cut the item for the reason that the experimental farm, so far as it has to do with the matter of experiments, has only one man employed, and they thought that $6,500 was a sufficient amount of money to be used for that purpose. The record shows that there are only 13 Holstein cows at this place, with the one man.

I think it is the idea of the Secretary of Agriculture within the next two or three years to reorganize the whole scheme of farm demonstration work as it is being conducted and abolish a good many of the experimental farms. In view of that state of mind on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture and the department, I think it would be absurd at this time to expend more money in the erection of a home or to grant an increase in the salary of a man who has to look after only 13 Holstein cows. That is the reason why the House committee did not appropriate an amount of money equal to that estimated for by the Director of the Budget, and the Senate committee did not feel justified in changing the amount appropriated by the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say——

Mr. HARRELD. Let me answer the Senator from Oregon first. The station not only is experimenting in dairying but it is experimenting in all kinds of fruit and shade trees. They have there now about 60 varieties of fruits, shade trees, Kafir corn, and so forth, with which they are experimenting. The work of the station has been vastly beneficial to the farmers of that section of the country. It is not limited to dairy experiments at all.

It is an experiment station that cost the Government $15,000 in the beginning. They paid $15,000 for the land on which it is located, and this is the first time I ever heard any talk about doing away with it. It has always been intended that it should be improved from time to time. The only reason why the building in question has not been erected before is because, as I said, the conditions during the war were such that no appropriation could be had for that purpose. I have never heard a word expressing any thought of doing away with it in any sense whatever.

Mr. MCNARY. I think I am quite correct when I restate——

Mr. HARRELD. May I say further that the question of the building was brought out before the Bureau of the Budget, and they recommended the sum which I have set forth in the amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. I may say to the Senator from Oklahoma that this legislative body is not going to be governed by the Director of the Budget. That might as well be understood now as at any time.

Mr. HARRELD. Its views ought to be persuasive at least.

Mr. MCNARY. They may be to the Senator from Oklahoma, but they are not persuasive to the Senator from Oregon.

Furthermore, this little farm consists of only 160 acres, 13 Holstein cows, and a foreman. They talk about a chicken project, but there are no chickens on the place, and the increase here for which the Senator is asking is to provide a poultryman, without poultry.

Mr. KING. I suggest that they raise some goats; but doubtless they expect Congress and the people to be made the goats.

Mr. HARRELD. No. In that district we do not need any Republican votes; we have plenty of them.

Mr. KING. I said "goats."

Mr. HARRELD. I thought the Senator from Utah said "votes."

Mr. KING. No. I said it was desired to make goats of Congress and of the people.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, this is not a matter of light concern. I never before heard any talk of doing away with this station. It was intended that it should be added to and built up. I was surprised to find that the recommendation of the Budget Bureau had been turned down by the committee. I should like the committee to let this matter go into the bill, so as to get it before the conference committee in that way. Will the Senator from Oregon agree to that?

Mr. MCNARY. I have made no promises of that kind, and I do not believe in the practice. If the Senator desires to do so, he may move his amendment.

Mr. HARRELD. Then, Mr. President, I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. I ask for a division on the amendment.

The question being put on a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRELD. I may want a vote on the amendment when the bill gets into the Senate, and I reserve the right to have a separate vote on it in the Senate.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 58, line 8, after the word "agents," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the appropriation made in this paragraph shall not be available for the payment of salaries of county agents whose services are not wholly given to the work authorized herein.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and is not estimated for by the department or by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think it is, but I will modify the amendment so as to read:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation authorized in this paragraph shall be devoted to the payment of the salaries of county agents unless they give their entire time to the work for which they are employed.

It is a limitation to the same extent as the amendment which the Senator offered a few moments ago. Undoubtedly a limitation may be attached to an appropriation without the amendment being subject to a point of order.

Mr. McNARY. It is a modification of the existing law, and I can not see where the language now suggested by the Senator from Utah in any way changes the amendment or makes it more amenable to the rule.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator does he believe that county agents should devote their time to other employment?

Mr. McNARY. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Does not the existing law, in spirit if not in letter, restrict them to the work for which they are employed?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, I do not believe that county agents should devote a part of their time to other employment. I do not believe that even the Senator, perhaps, should practice law for private emolument while he is a Member of this body; but I would not vote for an amendment going to that extent. I do not see why we should pick out this particular class of Government employees and say to them, "You have got to work eight hours a day and you can not talk or think about anything else but your duties," and let the rest of the country, including the Members of this body, talk all the time about all the foolish things that enter their heads.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Oregon need not get indignant and resentful over an amendment which it seems to me he should gladly accept. If county agents or other employees of the Government give their time to other service, then they should be restrained. It seems to me perfectly plain that county agents should not be engaged in work, while being paid by the Government, for other persons or for themselves. The amendment seeks to cure what I am told has become a common practice with some agents of organizing trade-business associations and attempting to destroy legitimate private enterprises and companies dealing in agricultural and other products. I have a large number of letters here complaining about the activities of, and propaganda alleged to have been carried on by, county agents. It is charged in these letters that some of these agents devote a portion of their time in denouncing private enterprise, in seeking to injure or destroy the business of men engaged in legitimate business activities; that they utilize their positions as county agents to further enterprises in which agriculturists are interested; and that they become members of organizations and employ their official position to advance such organizations and destroy business concerns which have been built up by hard work and honest, competitive service. Numerous complaints were brought to my attention and I wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture. In his reply he said:

> During the recent severe economic depression in agriculture the farmers have been very insistent that the county agents should help them in marketing, and undoubtedly in a number of cases these agents have gone further than they ought in dealing with such matters. Whenever cases have been brought to the attention of the department in which it was shown that county agents had overstepped the bounds of propriety in this regard an effort has been made to keep their work within proper limits.

Let me call attention to a few letters containing complaints. I select them at random from perhaps 30 which I have here. In a letter written in November, from San Francisco, the writer says:

> Inclosed please find letter which was sent to the Los Angeles Milling Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by the California Farm Bureau Exchange. In the second paragraph they claim that their organization is nation-wide in its scope and is fostered by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Accompanying that is a statement which seems to indicate the use by the county agent of his position to work against private enterprises.

I have a letter here from Oklahoma which states, under date of August, 1921:

> Inclosed please find clipping from the Miami District News, of Miami, Okla. Miami is the county seat of our county. The paper is dated August 2, 1921.
>
> You can see from this article that our county agent is meddling with the grain business in this locality. We have understood that he has been receiving export bids on wheat and that the farmers of Miami have loaded out a few cars through him.

Then there are a number of clippings from newspapers showing that work along that line was being done by the county agents. The complaint is that the agent uses his position as a Government official to injure the business of merchants and dealers in agricultural products.

I also have a letter from Grand Island, Nebr., dated July 7, 1921, from which I quote as follows:

> We wish to call your attention to the inclosed clipping from the Omaha World-Herald of July 6 on which you will note the agent in that territory is traveling with Mr. Dewald in the interest of securing new members for the United States Grain Growers (Inc.). We are also inclosing a clipping from the Grand Island (Nebr.) Independent of July 6 giving reply to questionnaire—

And so forth.

The writer then passes to another matter. His letter refers, however, to clippings from a newspaper supporting his statements.

I have here a letter from Illinois, signed by a county agent, asking for quotations on wheat, and so forth, showing that he is engaged in soliciting or finding purchasers.

I have a letter from Drexel, Mo., inclosing a circular, signed by Mr. Miller, the county agent, referring to coal prices, and so forth.

I have also a communication from Lansing, Mich., inclosing another letter calling attention to the county agent who, the writer states, is getting "very active in trying to engineer the farmer's business for him."

Here is a letter from Illinois calling attention to the fact that "farm bureaus in several States are going outside of their authority in promoting business." It incloses a clipping from the Chicago Tribune in support of this statement.

A letter from Great Falls, Mont., contains this statement:

> It is quite generally known that the county agents have been active in ordering and selling hay, feed oats, seed oats, seed wheat, etc., in direct opposition to the regular trade in this and adjacent counties. * * *
>
> We are attaching a bulletin issued under date of April 21 by the county agent here, in which you will note he has advertised as on hand seed oats, Marquis wheat, flax, alfalfa hay, etc. All of these commodities can be purchased from local dealers. In addition to advertising in their bulletins, they have inserted advertisements in the local papers as well.

The letter incloses a bulletin emanating from the county agent. In the bulletin the following appears:

> The car of Victory oats shipped in from Canada was ordered out very rapidly. There is still a limited supply of both Victory and Banner, and orders will be received only subject to supply on hand. The reputation of the Victory oats is such that everyone should seed it if only enough for a couple of acres in order to get a start with this oat.
>
> We have listed at the office a quantity of Marquis seed wheat, Swedish select oats, seed flax, and some alfalfa hay in carload lots.
>
> The office has a supply of garden seed for free distribution to be sent out on request.
>
> Very truly yours, F. E. MACSPADDEN, > County Agent.

I have a letter here from Port Huron, Mich., in which the writer, speaking of the county agents, says:

> There is a good deal of propaganda being published in the smaller county papers throughout the State, and I am attaching herewith an article which was printed in the Huron Times-Herald of the issue of May 14.

The clipping is attached, but I will not take the time to read it.

A letter from Adrian, Mich., states:

> The market was represented in this county in the month of February by W. C. Cribbs, marketing expert of the Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., who, in conjunction with the county agent, held farmers' meetings throughout the county in schoolhouses, grange halls, etc., and I am told by some farmer friends that the burden of his talks seems to be largely attempting to break down the confidence between the farmer and the so-called middleman, including coal dealers, agricultural implement concerns, elevators, etc.

He says:

> As we wrote you previously, we offer a protest against the activities of any branch of the United States Government or State government which attempts to bring in disrepute one class of citizenship in favor of another, and this is exactly what this gentleman tried to do in this county and succeeded partially in doing.

I have here a letter from Huntingdon, Pa., signed by the county agent, in which he says that he has five carloads of baled timothy hay for sale, and quotes the price for hay of various grades, and signs himself as "county agent."

Here is a letter from Missouri in which it is stated:

> Inclosed herewith find a clipping from the Johnson County Farm Bureau News, May 20, 1921, edited by County Agent Clough, which gives further information on the activities in this county. * * * have just learned through the secretary of Johnson County Farm Bureau that the county agent here is paid by the Federal Government and State government and by private subscriptions. We certainly expect to fight to the very utmost in any legitimate way we can the use of our tax money to ruin our own business.

Mr. President, these are a few out of a large number of letters I have which would seem to indicate that county agents were exceeding their authority and were using their positions and their offices to attack business houses and persons who are engaged in private enterprise. My understanding is that these county agents are Government officials. It occurs to me that they should confine their labors while paid by the Government to their statutory duties. They should not use their positions to carry on business or to engage in competitive business with private concerns. They are to aid in farm demonstration and to carry to the farmers scientific information. Some of the letters contain protests against their attempts to undermine legitimate private enterprise and to attack persons who are engaged not only in agriculture but in the coal business and in other lines of industry.

It seems to me that the amendment which I have offered ought to be accepted by the Senator. The letter from Secretary Wallace seems to indicate that some agents transcended their authority. When attention was called to that fact doubtless they desisted, and the Secretary says that "every effort will be made to confine them to the work for which they are employed." If enacting this amendment will aid the Secretary, the Senator ought to be glad to accept it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Utah think that we should select county agents, as against all other employees, for the purpose of gagging them and restricting their statements and their political opinions?

Mr. KING. Oh, it is not that at all.

Mr. McNARY. If legislation of this kind is going to be enacted it should be general in its character, and I think it should be made to apply first to this body.

Mr. KING. The Senator may offer such an amendment if he desires to extend its operation; but I ask the Senator again if he agrees with the statement made by the Secretary of Agriculture which I read a moment ago, to the effect that where cases have been brought to the attention of the department in which it was shown that county agents have overstepped the bounds, and so forth, efforts have been made to keep their work within proper limits; and does he agree with the statement that undoubtedly in a number of cases these agents have gone further than they ought to in dealing with such matters? If that is true, what objection can there be to a restriction in the appropriation that will confine these county agents to the scope of their authority, as evidently desired by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah knows that that is a condition which we wish existed in all the departments—that the employees would faithfully perform the duties imposed upon them. I quite agree that if there are any who are going beyond the proper line of their work and causing any social disturbances or interfering or obtruding their opinions in political matters, it is the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture or the employers of these men to caution them about it or to recall them from their work. The objection I have is to singling out these county agents, who perhaps in many instances are not paid as much as they should be, and applying this rule to them, when it ought to be made general if it is to be made at all.

Mr. KING. I want the Senator to distinctly remember that I have not used the word "political" at all. I have not even suggested it. The complaints that have been made in the numerous letters which I have before me do not relate in the slightest degree to political activities or alleged political activities; and the matters to which the Secretary of Agriculture refers, where agents have transgressed, referred to no political activity, but undoubtedly referred to activities of the character described in these letters, in which the agents were assailing private enterprises, among them being houses that were engaged in buying and selling grain and which had built up a business and acquired a standing and had a large clientele.

I have no personal knowledge of these matters, but have received complaints, oral and written, from various parts of the Union, from California to Michigan, and I think I have here a number of letters on the subject from New England States. As I say, I have no knowledge of the matter myself.

Mr. LADD and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. The Senator from North Dakota rose first, and, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, I will yield first to him.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I think perhaps I have had a reasonable amount of experience in association with county agent work in this country. I have had associated with me for a number of years not far from 100 county agents and county workers and their assistants. I know that occasionally one of them goes wrong and makes mistakes; I know that occasionally one of them becomes too zealous; but the director of the extension department of the institution usually calls those men into conference and the matters are adjusted. I think it would be unfair and unjust to the county agents of this county and to those associated with the agricultural colleges to single out that one group and make an example of them at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it would not be wrong or unjust, assuming that in that field of Federal service are the only ones who are violating, to put it mildly, what might be called the proprieties, if Congress should insist that such procedure should cease, if any employees of the Government are going beyond their authority they should be restrained.

It is the duty of Congress to prescribe the duties of Government employees. If the duties of county agents are not sufficiently defined, then Congress or the Secretary of Agriculture should clearly point out their duties. There can be nothing improper for Congress to restrict or narrow the field of activity of officials. This is a bill dealing with agriculture. If it appears when the naval bill or any other appropriation bill is before us that some officials provided for in such bills are exceeding their authority, then we could with propriety limit the scope of their work. It would be no reflection upon such employees.

I am sure the Senator from North Dakota would not indorse the acts of which complaint is made in the letters to which I have called attention.

Mr. LADD. I concur fully with what the Senator has stated, and do not approve of any action on the part of the county agents that would lead to any difficulties along those lines; but the county agent is not alone a Federal employee. He is employed jointly by the Federal authorities, by the State authorities, and by the county authorities or by the farm bureau, with funds raised by the farmers themselves, each usually bearing one-third of the expense in North Dakota. Sometimes those men have been asked by the farmers to become the organizers of a group of men that shall enable them to sell their products directly through cooperation—as, for instance, in the case of the sweet-clover seed of North Dakota. Through the action of the county agent in putting the farmers in touch with parties who would buy the seed, the farmers were able to obtain double the price that they usually received, with no additional expense to the users of the seed. In the case of the wool in North Dakota the farmers of the counties asked the county agents to take charge of the matter and enable them to secure a better price for their wool. They formed a large wool pool and secured a much better price than the farmers were able to secure before. They made an arrangement with a large woolen mill to convert some of the low-grade wool into blankets, whereby the farmers secured twice or more the price that they otherwise would have received for that wool. I have one of the blankets, that I was glad to purchase from them for one-half the price that I would have paid in the market.

I know that there were those who criticized those county agents for assisting the farmers in this cooperative work. I know of another instance where the county agent, at the request of the farmers, bought several carloads of coal at a considerable saving.

The dealers in coal were somewhat solicitous as to what might follow, and they did not like the proceeding, and criticized the county agent for having assisted the farmers in purchasing this coal; but I think the time has come when cooperative organizations and cooperative movements led by the farmers' agents are going to have a larger share than in the past in the work of selling and buying for the farmer. Ninety per cent of the county agents in North Dakota are college graduates. The majority of them were trained at the institution in the State and know the conditions; and I believe, trained as they are, that they are in a position to lead the farmers in the right direction in cooperative work, and will save them large sums of money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he sees no difference between woolmen and agriculturists forming legitimate and proper organizations for the sale of their products and employing such agents as they desire, and the Government of the United States creating offices and filling them with men who go out and engage in organizing agriculturists and others and aid them in conducting business and in so doing attack and destroy legitimate enterprises?

Mr. LADD. I do not think the Senator quite understood the function which the agent served in that connection. He was simply the means of organizing the farmers, bringing them together, and finding a channel through which they could sell, and so informing the parties. I feel also, as far as that is concerned, that the Federal Government and the Department of Agriculture could not be engaged in a better business than in assisting the farmers to form cooperative organizations at this time. I think it would be money well spent on the part of the Government to enable the farmers to form cooperative organizations that should enable them to get better markets and to receive better returns for their products, and I think it is a perfectly proper and legitimate function of the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there will be many persons who will not concur in all of the views of the Senator. I may not have fully understood him; indeed, I was unable to hear all that the Senator said. There should be no opposition to the view that agriculturists be permitted to work together for the purpose of finding markets for their products. For years I have urged the woolmen and the farmers to organize for the purpose of selling their products. I am opposed to monopolies and conspiracies to destroy competition, whether such monopolies or conspiracies are formed by manufacturers or woolmen or farmers. But there is a broad field for legitimate and proper cooperation in marketing farm products.

I doubt, however, the authority of the Federal Government to tax the people to pay the salaries of officeholders to go into the States and engage in business or direct the people in their private concerns. What right has Congress to create offices in order to send an army throughout the land to show bankers how to organize and run their business, or merchants how to buy and sell and keep their books, or builders how to erect buildings, or manufacturers how to build factories and operate their plants? We have proceeded upon the theory that the General Government can collect scientific data relating to agriculture and then carry it to the farmers.

But the Senator, if I understand him, contends that the General Government should go further. Is there no limit to the power of Congress? May it run the farms and the herds for the owners of the same? Is it a government function to help the sheepmen and the merchants carry on their business? Should the Government become a parent to and take charge of the people?

Mr. President, this is not a socialistic State, nor is it a paternalistic Government. It is a Republic. The American people in the early days of the Republic looked with distrust upon a bureaucratic or paternalistic Government. They believed in their own capacity to govern themselves. They wanted no heavy hand of bureaucracy laid upon them.

We are fast departing from the spirit and practice of the fathers, and the people are being taught that it is the duty of the Government to "take care of the people." We need more democracy, more individual effort, more personal freedom. It will be a backward step when the American people feel that they are the wards of the Government and must be supported by it. The farmers of the United States are brave and courageous. They are not supplicants for help from the Federal Government. All that they ask is a square deal. They want no special privileges, nor do they want special privileges granted to others.

As stated, I am in favor, and have been for years, of woolmen and producers of agricultural crops taking steps to find markets for their products, even though in so doing they wipe out the middlemen. There is no doubt but that the farmers and other producers have obtained in the past too little for their labor; the profits have been made by the middlemen. The woolmen of the West, who run the risks, who furnish the capital and produce the wool, have been compelled to sell in a restricted market in Philadelphia and in Boston, and the wool buyers and brokers have grown immensely rich at the expense of the woolgrowers; and the farmers have been robbed and plundered by middlemen, and I am glad to see the farmers organizing for the purpose of marketing their products.

When we can get rid of the parasites in our economic life, of the unnecessary factors and agencies in all branches of business found between the producer and the consumer, the better it will be for the social and the political organism.

Mr. President, I have called attention to these numerous letters, and if the Senator in charge of this bill does not feel that there should be any proper restriction upon these employees of the Government, but believes that it should be left to discipline, which may be applied by the Secretary of Agriculture, I shall not press the amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a point of order was made that this is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wanted to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Utah, because I think these county agents are doing a great work and I fear that if his amendment should become the law any of these big concerns who buy products from the farmer, when they caught the county agents carrying valuable information to the farmer, telling the farmer how to get a better price for his product, would say, "We will have you removed from office if you don't stop that. You are violating the restrictions thrown around you and you can not give this information and aid to the farmers." Thus they would work great injury to the farmer. I am satisfied the Senator from Utah did not mean that his amendment should go that far, but I fear that it would. These county agents ought to be free to give all kinds of information in line with their work to the farmers in the counties that they serve. The speculators in farm products want to close the mouths of our county agents and prevent them from giving aid to farmers in the matter of marketing their crops.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, a few moments ago I called attention to a provision in the bill relating to the white-pine blister and moved to amend, on line 15, page 20, by increasing the appropriation for the purpose of exterminating the white-pine blister from the country from $175,000 to $250,000.

On yesterday I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on an amendment for the extermination or eradication of the black rust, the appropriation for which was increased from $200,000 to $500,000, that affects the wheat fields of his section of the country and of the Middle West and South. He made a clear and scientific statement of the way that black rust was produced from the little spores on the barberry bush and how they multiplied by millions and millions, until eventually they destroyed the crops of many of the Middle and Central Western States.

Absolutely the same thing takes place with regard to a little spore which is resulting in the destruction of our pine forests, largely in the State of Maine but covering New England and possibly some of the other Northern States. We have what is called the white-pine blister. It comes from a little spore on the currant or gooseberry bush. Up to this time it has not proven so very formidable, and I believe that with a proper and vigorous enforcement against this little animal it may be entirely exterminated; but if we work along, as they have in the West, with a small appropriation, doing a little each year, it is money entirely wasted. There ought to be sufficient vigor used in the extermination of these spores to completely exterminate them, and I believe it can be done.

The farmers in the Middle Western States raise cereal crops, which are produced from year to year, but in our State we have but the one crop, our white-pine trees, the life of which covers a period of 75 years, and when a tree is once destroyed a new one can not be produced to take its place in a lifetime. One-third of our State of Maine is now in one big forest, and always will be, because it is so stony and abrupt and mountainous that the soil can never be cultivated.

My desire is to increase this amount to such an extent that we may go to work and exterminate these little spores in the next two or three years. It means a tremendous amount to my State. As I stated a few moments ago, we have 23,000,000,000 feet of spruce growing on the soil of Maine to-day, and probably an equal amount of pine timber. One-fifth of all the paper manufactured in this State comes from wood grown on the soil of Maine, and when those woods are once destroyed they are gone forever. This increase is, I believe, more important, more imperative, than even the increase in the appropriation for the destruction of the little germ which produces the black rust in the wheat fields.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Upon whose lands is the timber to which the Senator is now referring?

Mr. FERNALD. On private lands, largely, although the Government still owns a great many acres of land in that State.

Mr. KING. There is a large amount of timber in Maine owned by private individuals from which they are deriving a great deal of profit. Their profit may be diminished if this blister of which the Senator speaks develops and kills some of the trees. Does not the Senator think they ought to be sufficiently interested in their own property to get rid of those blisters without coming to Congress?

Mr. FERNALD. I want to reply to the Senator, because it is so easy to reply to him. The owners of the timberlands, in their organizations, by contribution of private capital, and with the aid of the Government, are using every effort possible now, and I believe it will be possible to exterminate this trouble entirely from our State. I was very glad yesterday to vote for the increased appropriation asked by the Senator from Nebraska. That, as I understand, covered about 13 States of the Middle West. It is a splendid and generous thing for every Senator here to aid and assist every State in this Union, wherever it can be done. My friends from the cotton districts of the South have had $300,000,000 passed down to them in 16 States. New England has not had to ask for anything of that kind. Maine has not come in for any particular appropriation or assistance up to this time, but this matter is of such importance to our State that it almost means the life and death of our timberlands down there, and I am asking only that this appropriation be increased from $150,000 to $250,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator what the department recommended?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know what they have recommended.

Mr. LENROOT. They were given what they recommended.

Mr. McNARY. Last year $100,000 was appropriated by the Congress for this purpose. During the year a deficiency item of $150,000 was carried. This year the original estimate of the department was $100,000, but due to an outbreak in the Great Lakes country a second estimate was submitted, which increased the amount $75,000, making it a total of $175,000. That was allowed by the House, and that sum was accepted by the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. And carried in the bill?

Mr. McNARY. And carried in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the Senator from Maine will realize that the department has not the force and has not the facilities to utilize money beyond a certain amount which they estimate, and there would be no use in appropriating more.

Mr. FERNALD. The men who ought to attend to this are right there in the forests to-day. There is no question about getting the help necessary to perform the work there. It has to be done by men in the forests, and it is only necessary to determine the number of bushes in each county and town in the State, and have them pulled up and destroyed. That is all that is required. There is no particular scientific research work necessary. Everybody knows what ought to be done and has to be done, and the only thing that can be done is to exterminate this pest.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to say to the Senator that in this appropriation the department has adopted the policy in all States east of the Mississippi River of requiring dollar for dollar expended upon the part of the States. It appeared in the hearing that $100,000 was all that the States and private organizations had informed the department they would raise for this purpose, and therefore the department recommended the sum of $175,000, giving more than dollar for dollar.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Suppose there should be such a pest in the forests of Maine that private enterprise was not able to put up the amount of money necessary, would the Government then withhold the amount of money necessary to save the forests of Maine?

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. This is precisely what they are doing. The proprietors of the timberlands in my State to-day, individually and by organization, are expending a large amount of money for the extermination of this pest. I think I know about as much about the forests of Maine as does the department at Washington. I have been pretty much in every town and all through the forests. I know that all that is necessary to do is to go around and pull up these bushes and burn them. It does not require any scientific men to carry on any research work. If we can have sufficient funds to do that with just common labor, we can exterminate the trouble in my State and in the other Northern States. The same principle applies to the wheat fields of the West. Yesterday we increased an appropriation from $200,000 to $500,000 for the elimination of the barberry menace, a most commendable thing to do, a very generous and very proper thing to do. Something of the same character should be done with my State for the extermination of the pest which we are discussing. I believe it is right and proper for all Senators to help every State wherever they can be of assistance. It is not necessary to come down to the department every time we are asked to do anything for a State and get information from them as to just what should be done. We can in a general way depend upon them for information, but there is not a Senator who does not know more about conditions in his State and what is needed than does the department in Washington.

I am asking that the amount be increased, and I ask for a rising vote on the question.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama asked if the private interests could not put up sufficient money to match the Federal appropriation dollar for dollar to eradicate the pest, whether the Federal Government should then refuse to make an appropriation. Does the Senator from Alabama believe that the great lumbering interests of Maine are unable to raise, for the eradication of the white-pine blister in Maine, the sum of $25,000 or $50,000? Does he think the great State of Maine is unable to appropriate the sum of $25,000 or $50,000 to meet dollar for dollar an appropriation by the Federal Government in the State of Maine?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I take it that a great deal of the forest land in Maine is not owned by the sawmill companies but is owned by private individuals. It may be that some of those private individuals have expended so much money in fighting the white-pine blister that they are not able to put up any more. Then what good would it do to clean up 100,000 acres of land and not touch the property of a man who has 10,000 acres and who is unable to free his trees of this pest? We would have the work all to do over again, because the pest would spread, I take it, from the section that was not cleaned out.

Mr. FERNALD. Absolutely. I just stated to the Senator from Wisconsin that the lumber interests of Maine had appropriated large sums of money, individually and by organization, to exterminate the trouble, but the States can not do this work. Suppose Maine should appropriate $25,000 or $100,000, and the State of New Hampshire right along the same line did not appropriate anything, then what we spend in Maine would be of no value. The work has to be done all over the country, and wherever the pest exists money must be expended to exterminate it.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Alabama says it might be that the lumber interests in Maine had expended all of their money and could not raise $25,000 or $50,000 for this purpose. Of course that might be, but there is no evidence anywhere that such is the case. Of course that is not the case, as the Senator well knows, if he has been in Maine and is familiar with it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not well know it, because I understood the able and distinguished Senator from Maine to say that the problem was too big for them to handle it alone; that they are doing all they can now, and that they need this additional sum from the Government, and, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to grant it.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very sure the Senator from Maine, of which State he is so justly proud, will not stand on the floor of the Senate of the United States and say that Maine can not raise $25,000 or $50,000 to help eradicate this pest from the State of Maine.

Mr. President, this is just one of the instances, in a matter that is of very vital interest to a State, where they ask the Federal Government to assume the entire burden.

Mr. FERNALD. Why, Mr. President, I have made the statement twice that we do not ask the Federal Government to make the entire appropriation, but that we are doing there, individually, collectively, and by organization a great amount of the extermination work. I have stated twice that we do not ask the Federal Government to make the entire appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. I will put it this way—that it is an instance where, instead of matching dollar for dollar, as is being done now and as will be done in the next year under this appropriation of $175,000, they are asking the Federal Government to appropriate more money than is being expended by the States and individuals in the States. Now, that is a fair statement. We had in testimony before the committee just what has been proposed to be raised during the next year for the eradication of the white-pine blister by States, by counties, and by individuals, and the total amounts to $100,000. The bill carries $175,000.

This is a good deal like the other cases where they look to the Federal Government to do all of these things; the pest is not going to be eradicated as quickly as if the States and the individuals in the States would not expect the Federal Government to do it all, but would realize their own responsibility and do their own share. I do not mean that the Federal Government is doing it all now.

I am willing the Federal Government should put up dollar for dollar in these cases, but it is not fair to ask the Federal Government to do more than that.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Does not the appropriation apply to the whole United States?

Mr. LENROOT. It does.

Mr. BURSUM. And to all the public lands?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but where the Federal Government has public lands the States are not asked to match dollar for dollar.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin suggests that the States must put up dollar for dollar. There have been a great many appropriations made to exterminate pests in different parts of the United States where that principle was not invoked. If I remember correctly, when Congress appropriated $500,000 to fight hog cholera, we did not require the States to match dollar for dollar before they could get the benefit of that fund. We did that to stamp out hog cholera from the hogs of the United States. When we appropriated money the other day, a few million dollars, to buy seed wheat for our farmers in distress up in the Northwestern States, we did not require the States or the individuals to put up dollar for dollar before they could get the benefit of that fund.

The appropriation sought by the Senator from Maine affects the white-pine blister proposition throughout the whole United States, and I submit that $75,000 is not a large sum when we consider the good that is derived by stamping out this pest in all sections of the country.

If private individuals own land where this blister is present and they have been collecting their own money and applying it for years and years, and they are not able now to meet the appropriations made by the Federal Government, I submit that it is unfair to stop the work in those localities and apply it to some other State and deny it to Alabama or to Maine, because it may be that the money is not forthcoming in those sections. I submit that this is an American question and the forests of America are involved. The whole of the forests of America will be benefited by exterminating the white-pine blister pest and the money is well worth expending. Seventy-five thousand dollars is not a large sum.

Mr. LENROOT. It is $175,000.

Mr. FERNALD. The increase asked is $75,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Maine is asking for an increase of $75,000, and I submit it is a fair proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD].

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I now renew my motion to amend, in line 19, page 67, by striking out the numerals "$385,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the numerals "$405,000."

This increase involves the amount necessary to restore the leased wire market service to the State of Texas, which was discontinued a year or so ago on account of lack of funds. The matter was not brought to my attention by the State department of agriculture of Texas until a few days ago, and I did not, therefore, have an opportunity to have an official estimate made by the Department of Agriculture.

The reinstallation of the service has been made very advisable by the fact that the State of Texas has installed a radio market service and can now use the leased market wire to very great advantage.

If the Senator in charge of the bill will permit the amendment to be made and to go to conference, I shall lay before him and the other conferees the data justifying the additional amount.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 67, line 19, strike out the numerals "$385,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$405,000."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Texas if this has been estimated for?

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I explained, the matter was not brought to my attention until a few days ago. I took it up unofficially with the department and found this was the amount necessary to restore the leased market wire for the State of Texas. I shall not ask the Senator to accept the amendment unless I can lay before him and the other conferees in the next day or two facts justifying the additional sum.

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator from Texas that the matter was never presented to the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator will recall that I spoke to him about the matter a day or two ago and explained why I had not had an opportunity to bring it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. I shall not oppose the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on page 35, line 12, I move to insert, after the word "woods," the words "and grasses." This is a provision for the investigation of certain woods with the idea of making paper, and in some States grasses are a great source of supply for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 35, line 12, after the word "woods," insert the words "and grasses," so that it will read:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing, and the testing of such woods and grasses as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, for investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest and fiber products, and for commercial demonstrations of improved methods or processes, in cooperation with individuals and companies, $340,000.

Mr. McNARY. I have discussed the amendment with the Senator from Florida, and I think it is a proper one. So far as I am able to do so, I am willing to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there was one amendment which was reserved, the amendment in relation to the free distribution of seeds. I should like to have a separate vote on that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has not yet been reported to the Senate.

Mr. REED. I thought the bill had been reported to the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, there is a proposition in which the States along the Gulf coast are very much interested, and that is the continuation of the work of investigating and curing diseases attacking the Satsuma orange. I had an amendment prepared to offer to the pending bill in order to make it sure that a provision in reference to that matter would be in the bill. I have talked with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who has the bill in charge, and he has stated that this appropriation is provided for on page 24 of the bill. I have also talked to Doctor Ball, of the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Agricultural Department, and he says that this proposition is cared for. I therefore desire to state to the Senator from Oregon and the Senate that, with the understanding from himself and Doctor Ball that if the $7,500 appropriated on page 24 of the bill is to be used for the purpose to which I refer, I do not care to offer the amendment which I had prepared.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD, Mr. President, in connection with my remarks, a letter from Representative McDUFFIE, of Alabama, on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1922.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I herewith hand you a letter which is self-explanatory.

You will note the proportions to which the citrus industry in Alabama has grown within recent years. I feel the Congress should not deny such care and protection as this great industry merits. The work, after having been done for three years, promises complete success in another season, and I sincerely hope you will be successful in reinstating this item in the bill.

I have written Doctor Winberg, assuring him that you would give the matter your undivided attention.

With kindest regards, I am,
Cordially yours,
JOHN McDUFFIE.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in all amendments made as in Committee of the Whole except the amendment relating to the free distribution of seeds, which has been reserved.

The amendments, with the exception of the amendment reserved, were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendment reserved by the Senator from Missouri on pages 26, 27, and 28 relating to the free distribution of seeds.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I discussed this question at length on yesterday. It is true that many of the Senators who are now present were not present at that time.

I now simply wish to say that the appropriation for the free distribution of seed is the one appropriation which has been carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill for many, many years which goes directly to the people. Under it improved varieties of seeds are distributed into every State and into every hamlet of the Nation. It has probably brought more good results directly to the people than has any appropriation ever contained in the Agricultural appropriation bill. A fight has been made upon it for years by the seed houses. I submit that this appropriation ought to remain in the bill and that the people ought not to be left entirely to the mercy of the seed houses.

If the Agricultural Department is conducting its business correctly—and I hope that it is—it is selecting the finest varieties of improved seeds, and the scattering of that character of seeds throughout the United States brings a result that is incalculable.

Mr. President, I ask for a division on the question.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word. One might be led to believe by the debate in favor of the distribution of free seeds that the farmers in the country are demanding it. I do not know of one single farm organization represented here in Washington which is in favor of the distribution. Does the Senator from Missouri know of any?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Wisconsin know of any that are against it?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I do.

Mr. REED. I should like to have him name one.

Mr. LENROOT. I have understood that the Farm Bureau and other farm organizations have at various times passed resolutions against it. If I am mistaken in that, I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. REED. I have never in my life heard of that.

Mr. LENROOT. I have.

Mr. REED. On what ground does the Farm Bureau protest against the free distribution of seeds?

Mr. LENROOT. Because they believe it is taking an appropriation away from agriculture that is used for the benefit of Senators and Representatives, with the idea that it is going to help them politically, and that the purpose behind it is not to aid agriculture, whereas the three hundred or four hundred thousand dollars or more used each year for the distribution of free seed could be used in experimental work for agriculture and would be of some real value to agriculture. That is the ground upon which their opposition is based; and I think it is a good ground.

Mr. President, in my judgment, if it were not for the fact that Senators and Members of the other House have control of the distribution of free seeds to our constituents, the appropriation for the distribution of free seeds would have gone out of this bill long, long ago.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate. There are 3,500,000 people who live in my State and a very considerable percentage of them live on the farms and in small towns and villages. The protest made by the Senator from Wisconsin just now is the first one I have ever heard made against the free distribution of seeds except by those who object generally to all appropriations.

A part of the protest the Senator has made I have heard; I have read it in newspapers and elsewhere. It is cheap claptrap to say that Senators and Representatives desire this appropriation because it benefits them politically. I stated yesterday, and I repeat now, that it would be my preference that the distribution of these seeds should be made by the Agricultural Department direct. I should be very glad if that were done. The single objection anyone might make to that would be that the Agricultural Department perhaps has no organization directly in touch with the people as have Members of Congress in their respective districts. I know the department has its farm agents, and so forth, but I still adhere to my judgment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to say that I happened to distribute the seeds allotted to me through those very county agents.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator is getting no particular political benefit from it. I do not think I myself ever got any political benefit from it; and I am not talking about it from that basis. I do not conduct my campaigns with either garden seeds or chicken feed.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield there, I will say that I think any Senators and Representatives who think it is of political advantage to them are mistaken.

Mr. REED. I am not talking about it on that narrow ground; that is the ground that has been chosen, however, by the great seed companies on which to make this fight, the companies which charge 25 cents for a package of seed peas, and there are only four peas in the package.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. All of the seeds which are distributed are bought from the great seed companies by the Government.

Mr. REED. Yes; but they are bought in bulk, and they are not paid for at the rate of 5 cents a pea.

Mr. LODGE. And a third of them do not come up.

Mr. REED. Very well; if a third of them do not come up, that is an indictment of the Agricultural Department, for if the Agricultural Department is so foolish as to expend the people's money in buying seeds that will not grow, then we had better get a new Secretary of Agriculture and a new force of assistants clear down the line.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not know it is the fault of the Agricultural Department; but three or four years ago, as a matter of curiosity, I took some of the flower seeds and some of the bulbs and tried them. I had them planted under the best possible conditions, and the best possible care was taken, but more than 30 per cent never came up at all; they were very poor seed and poor bulbs; they were poorer even than the variety of seeds bought from the seedsmen.

Mr. REED. I will ask the Senator if he has ever tried planting any seeds he has obtained from seed stores?

Mr. LODGE. I have. I have never planted anything else, as a matter of fact, except that one time when I tried the seeds furnished by the Government; but they are worse than the seeds supplied by the seedsmen, and those seeds have become very bad.

Mr. REED. Yet the Senator says the seeds that are distributed by the Government are bought from the seed companies.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly they are, and the Government gets the worst of the transaction.

Mr. REED. It would appear, therefore, that the Agricultural Department are doing the idiotic thing, or the dishonest thing, of buying the poorest seed.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is dishonest. The seeds to which I have referred were obtained when a Democratic Scretary of Agriculture was in office. I think he was absolutely honest, as I think, of course, the present Secretary is.

Mr. REED. Under those circumstances, perhaps the seeds were not planted on good ground. Perhaps Democratic seed would not grow in Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. They were planted on very carefully prepared ground.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I remember that a few years ago there was some complaint about the seeds furnished by the Government being faulty, but Doctor Galloway made it his business to see that good, sound seed were purchased, and since that time I have never heard any complaint about the seed not coming up. The department buys good seed now.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, all of this humor aside, I think the Senator from Alabama has put his finger on the question. There may have been some bad seed sent out, but certainly the Agricultural Department, which we trust to expend millions of dollars, has not failed alone in the matter of free seed.

Speaking of my own State—and I can speak only of my own experience—I have requests for these seeds constantly; particularly in the proper season, and they are distributed to lists of people regardless of politics. I do not even see the lists. The theory on which this system of distribution was started was that the Federal Government should obtain the finest variety of improved seeds, and that by sending them out all over the country in a very short time they would be reproduced and thoroughly disseminated through the community, so that instead of the old and inferior varieties there would appear in each community an improved variety. I can imagine no plan which would be more sensible.

If it has not been correctly carried out, then somebody in the Agricultural Department is derelict in his duty. I have no doubt that in some instances seeds which would not grow have been sent out. When I lived on a farm I thought sometimes I had good seed corn, but found when I tested it that it did not germinate. Such things happen; but I take it, no oftener in the case of seeds supplied by the Agricultural Department than in the case of those furnished by private individuals.

The question is, shall we stop the distribution of seeds of improved varieties of grains and of plants? I think it would be a mistake and that politics has nothing to do with it.

I should be perfectly willing, if we had time, to prepare an amendment to provide that the seeds shall be distributed in some other way, although my own experience is that it is just as well to have some of these things done by Members of Congress who know the people of their respective communities and who are rotating and changing in office from time to time so that in the end the people get the benefit of a distribution that is independent of some particular department.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have heard some criticism of the distribution of seed, but I want to say that the people in my State are very anxious to receive these seed.

A few months ago I was at home, and next morning I saw in the paper that I had stated that if anyone in the State wanted seed I should be very glad to hear from him. When I came back to Washington I told my secretary that I thought he had undertaken a pretty big proposition to invite all the people of the State who wanted seed to write for them. He replied that he wanted to serve the people as much as he could. Some time after that my mail was flooded by requests for seed, without respect to party, or favoritism, or anything of that sort. Of course, I did not personally read very many of these applications. I did read some of them, and in many of them the writers said that they received seed last year, and they answered a good purpose, and they were very glad indeed to get them again.

My office has sent out thousands of packages; not all of them garden seed, but flower seed. Mine were a little different from those of the Senator from Massachusetts—sown on stony ground. They were sown on good ground, and they flourished. A short time ago I received an invitation from the chairman of the Civic League in a prosperous city in my State, inviting me, as soon as convenient, to come down, as they wanted to show me the magnificent flowers that grew from these seed.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division on this question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. A division is called for.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator wanted to proceed without a quorum to-day.

Mr. McNARY. No; I want to proceed with a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKinley	Poindexter
Ball	Hale	McNary	Pomerene
Broussard	Harris	Moses	Reed
Bursum	Harrison	Myers	Sheppard
Calder	Heflin	Nelson	Shortridge
Capper	Hitchcock	New	Simmons
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Spencer
Curtis	Kellogg	Norbeck	Sterling
Dial	Kendrick	Norris	Sutherland
Edge	Keyes	Oddie	Swanson
Ernst	King	Overman	Trammell
Fernald	La Follette	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pepper	Warren
Gerry	Lodge	Phipps	Watson, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole relative to the distribution of seed. The committee amendment proposes to strike out the item.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the status of the amendment? I understood that we agreed to it some time ago in Committee of the Whole. Has that action been reconsidered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and a separate vote was reserved upon it in the Senate. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the amendment.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ERNST (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. When his name was called. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I understand that if that Senator were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. He is absent, but I understand that if present he would vote as I shall vote on this question, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my standing pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], which I transfer to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Ball	Hale	McNary	Pepper
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Phipps
Calder	Kellogg	Nelson	Poindexter
Capper	Keyes	New	Smoot
Colt	King	Newberry	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Lenroot	Norbeck	Warren
Edge	Lodge	Norris
Ernst	McKinley	Page

NAYS—31.

Ashurst	Gooding	Oddie	Sterling
Broussard	Harris	Overman	Sutherland
Bursum	Heflin	Pomerene	Swanson
Caraway	Hitchcock	Reed	Trammell
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Kendrick	Shortridge	Weller
Fletcher	La Follette	Simmons	Williams
Gerry	Nicholson	Spencer

NOT VOTING—35.

Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Stanfield
Cameron	Glass	Moses	Stanley
Crow	Harreld	Owen	Townsend
Culberson	Harrison	Pittman	Underwood
Cummins	Johnson	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Ladd	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
du Pont	McCormick	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Elkins	McCumber	Shields	Willis
France	McKellar	Smith

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was nonconcurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT RENT COMMISSION.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2919, to extend for the period of two years the provisions of title 2 of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to ask the Senator from Delaware, pending the putting of the motion, if he expects to press the bill this afternoon?

Mr. BALL. No; I am going to yield to the Senator from Maine, who desires to bring up the hospitalization bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2919) to extend for the period of two years the provisions of title 2 of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit an amendment, which I intend to propose to the bill which is now the unfinished business. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table. I will simply state that the effect of the amendment would be to exclude business property from the operation of the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, for several days I have been trying to get up House bill 10864, the soldier hospitalization bill. I have conferred with the Senator from Delaware this afternoon, and he agreed to yield to me to take up this bill, but it is getting so late that I shall desire to call it up early to-morrow. As it is understood that the Senate will adjourn very soon, this bill can be taken up in the morning hour to-morrow. The Senator from Delaware has been courteous enough to agree that the bill may be taken up before the bill he has in charge is proceeded with.

AMERICAN NAVAL EFFICIENCY.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD in 8-point type a brief article appearing in Current History for the present month, entitled "American naval efficiency," by former Senator Willard Saulsbury.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

AMERICAN NAVAL EFFICIENCY.

(By Willard Saulsbury, member of American Advisory Committee to Conference on Limitation of Armament, formerly President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States and Senator from Delaware.)

Believing, as we do, that the future years are to be more peaceful than the past, and that pending treaties signed at the Conference for Limitation of Armament will be duly ratified and carried into effect and will aid toward this peaceful future, there are still some fundamental facts we must not forget.

That the powerful naval nations have just agreed to limit their power is due simply and solely to the well-recognized fact that if competition in navies continued the United States would soon be not only the most powerful on the sea, but would be the only solvent nation on the earth. Great Britain never showed her willingness to resign her title of "mistress of the seas" until she knew she could not keep that title. The limitation of naval armanent has only been agreed to because the one nation, our own, admittedly able to maintain the most powerful navy, frankly stated that she wished to achieve no such prominence and would limit her own warships to a tonnage equal and not superior to her strongest competitor, provided the other nations would agree on proportional tonnage. That agreement was reached because, having the ability not only to compete but to excel, we waived our opportunity because we did not wish to achieve preeminence in this line of human endeavor. Had our Navy been weak or our shipyards insufficient or our sailors and their commanders inefficient there would be no naval holiday or limitation of sea power.

Our actual power and our naval program brought sanity to a bellicose though war-sick world. The most unchanging thing in all the world is the human mind, and more than a century and a quarter has been required to produce an unbeaten, possibly an unbeatable nation, warlike, yet not military, devoted to the paths of peace and willing to forego that supremacy which is achieved only by force. We may draw an almost infallible conclusion from what we, fortunate ones, living at this period of the world's history, have seen with our own eyes.

If this same Nation continues great—I mean so comparatively and potentially great—we may turn the whole world away from the ideals of military force which have prevailed heretofore. If we now sit smugly content and allow our power, actual or potential, to rust away, we will soon become a negligible factor as a world force and be so treated.

We all want the so-called naval holiday, now planned to last 10 years, to be renewed and continued, and it is not unreasonable to expect, if we properly conduct ourselves, that it will be renewed and continued. It is not improbable that 10 years hence the naval tonnage of America and Great Britain will by agreement be cut in half and the relative amounts be agreed on as 250,000 tons for each of these nations and 150,000 tons for Japan, and the others likewise diminished; but this will come about only if the half million tons we have are during these 10 years kept at the highest state of efficiency. If our ships rust out and the morale of officers and men declines our wishes and our proposals will be disregarded and ignored, or, at the best, politely "agreed to in principle," with specious reasons why the time is not opportune for action.

The suggestion that we now adopt a policy of neglecting the Navy and our Naval Academy at Annapolis and that we use the tax money which we now can save for other and supposedly more popular purposes, is frightfully mischievous. Our Navy must continue to be as good, as large, as well prepared as any in the world. Our officers and men must be as keen and capable as we are proud to know they now are. Every gun must be ready, every brass polished, and every shoe lace tied. We must have an educated reserve of naval officers to draw on to command our auxiliary fleet should need arise for its construction and use. We must show our determination to live at peace even if we must fight to do so.

If this position is known, then naval holidays will be long and armament will be still further limited. Not less important than ships are men and especially officers. They must have no feeling that only unjust treatment is their lot. China degraded the military art, following the ideas of her extreme pacifists, until she became the political football of the world.

The least expensive help toward greatness on which taxes can be properly spent is the balanced education of our youth. If I could, instead of reducing the output of our Naval Academy, I would educate there each year four times as many young men as we could retain in active service. As many as should be retained to keep our actual Navy at its high standard should be kept in the public service, giving those whose records were highest at the academy the option of remaining. The rest would be distributed, highly educated and well fitted, throughout the country to bear their part in private life and enterprise. They would form a great reserve, to be called on if ever needed, and would furnish the finest possible body of young men from which to recruit officers of the great merchant marine I hope we are to have.

One who now talks of making our Navy contemptible does our country and the world as ill service as if he urged the militarization of the Republic, and in my own opinion would probably bring about the very thing we all have come to disbelieve in—progressive competitive armament among the virile nations of the world.

REPRESENTATION OF AGRICULTURE ON FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have here a copy of a letter written by Hon. John Skelton Williams, former Comptroller of the Currency, to Congressman KITCHIN, of North Carolina. This letter touches in part upon pending legislation which provides that agriculture shall have representation in the membership of the Federal Reserve Board. The country is indebted to John Skelton Williams for many valuable contributions to the discussion of the ruinous deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. This letter contains much valuable information, and I ask unanimous consent to print it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the regular RECORD type.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

RICHMOND, VA., March 20, 1922.

Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. KITCHIN: I understand that the Senate bill enlarging the Federal Reserve Board and limiting the expenditures which may be made by the reserve banks for luxurious banking establishments is now before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and presumably will soon be reported to the House unless the efforts which are now being made by the Reserve Board to smother or defeat it should succeed.

I consider that measure exceedingly important and wise as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough, especially in the matter of curbing the lavish waste and extravagance which it has been demonstrated exist in the administration of the reserve system.

$50,000,000 FOR FOUR BANK BUILDINGS IN FOUR CITIES.

Astounding as it seems, it is nevertheless true that the Federal reserve authorities had already planned to spend about $50,000,000 for gorgeous banking edifices in the four cities of New York, Boston, Cleveland, and Chicago.

Against the official estimate of cost as submitted to the Senate under date of October 31, 1921, and described in that report as to most of the cost as the "Most recent estimate" of $49,878,914, please note the statement recently made on the floor of the United States Senate that the cost of both Houses of Parliament, including the House of Lords and House of Commons, was only about $2,000,000, or less than one-tenth of the amount which the reserve board has authorized for banking quarters in New York City alone, namely, $25,646,000.

The Capitol at Washington, according to the statement of another Senator, cost not more than $2,500,000, or less than one-eighth of the New York Reserve Bank's buildings and equipment as planned.

The Federal Reserve Board, in its recent supplementary report to the Senate, has confessed that the cash fees and commissions which they have agreed should be paid to architects, engineers, and contractors for banking quarters in New York City amount to $1,746,000, exclusive of the additional fees and commissions paid in connection with the construction of the New York Reserve Bank annex.

FEES ALONE OF NEW YORK BANKING PALACE ABOUT EQUAL COST OF HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

The total of these huge commissions and rake-offs for this one bank at New York amount to practically as much as the total cost of the Capitol at Washington or the total cost of both Houses of Parliament! It appears to be still a secret what the fees and commissions on the other reserve banks amount to.

Pages 21, 22, 24, and 34 of the board's official report to the Senate of October 31, 1921, furnish the following details as to the cost of the magnificent banking palaces in the four big cities above referred to:

[Figures from reserve board's report to Senate in answer to Overman resolution.]

Federal reserve bank buildings.	Cost to Oct. 1, 1921.	Estimated to finish.	Total estimated cost (land and structures).
Boston	$4,456,563	$900,000	$5,356,563
New York	7,766,410	17,880,000	25,646,410
Cleveland	3,410,257	5,000,000	8,410,257
Chicago	5,836,684	4,629,000	10,465,684
Total	21,469,914	28,409,000	49,878,914

In my letter to Senator OVERMAN of December 2, 1921, I showed that the average yearly congressional appropriation for all United States public buildings under the Treasury Department, including post-office buildings, courthouses, customhouses, and so forth, have averaged annually for the past 20 years only $10,969,076, which is only about 40 per cent of what the Reserve Board has authorized one bank to spend for lavish banking quarters in one big city.

The funds appropriated for the reserve bank edifices for the four cities mentioned, therefore, amount to approximately five times as much as the average yearly expenditures for the past 20 years for all of the Federal buildings in all of the 48 States of the Union.

$34,000,000 FOR BANK BUILDINGS FOR TWO FAVORED CITIES.

The above table shows also that two banks—New York and Cleveland—were authorized to spend for palatial banking quarters in those two cities the sum of $34,056,000, which exceeds by more than $9,000,000 the total amount which the farm loan banks were provided with under the recent congressional resolution to meet the urgent needs of farmers throughout the country. Can this be called an equitable distribution of the funds of the system?

$10,000,000 ENOUGH; $50,000,000 APPROPRIATED.

If the Boston and Cleveland banks should have been limited to the cost of the excellent banking quarters provided for the reserve banks of Philadelphia and St. Louis, and $2,500,000 appropriated for the bank at Chicago, which, in the opinion of competent judges, would have fully met that situation, and $5,000,000 additional should then have been appropriated for the New York bank—and that amount would, unquestionably, have given New York all the accommodations reasonably needed now or for years to come—there could have been a saving of just $40,000,000 on the amount which the board authorized for banking quarters for those four cities alone. If double the allowance here suggested should have been made, there could still have been a saving of $30,000,000 from the amounts authorized by the board for those four cities.

The total cost of the bank building of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, with equipment and the land on which it stands, is placed at $510,461. This is exclusive of other property subsequently bought, but which the report says they propose "to sell if found that a larger building is not required." As the ground without the new lot covers 20,367 square feet, as compared with 16,675 square feet for the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, 19,205 for the Philadelphia bank, and 26,400 square feet for the Chicago bank, it would seem that this additional land could be readily dispensed with.

HOUSING COST $14,063 PER EMPLOYEE.

As the officers and employees of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, December 31, 1921, numbered 517 and the officers and employees of the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland on the same date numbered 598, it will be seen that the cost of housing each employee in these two banks, based on the estimated cost of the respective buildings, would be as follows:

	Per capita.
Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis	$987
Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland	14,063

Surely there is "something rotten in Denmark."

The Federal Reserve Board's report to the Senate of October 31, 1921, showed that the reserve banks had already spent up to October 1, 1921, in the several reserve districts (pp. 21-22) on their banking palaces the sum of $39,370,000, and the additional amount which they had planned to spend to complete six of the bank buildings then under construction was $32,812,000, making a total of $72,182,000, which is exclusive of other enormous expenditures which the board had also planned to make in other cities where elaborate buildings have also been provided for, or are in contemplation. Some of these have been stopped by the board since the introduction of Senator HARRIS'S resolution to limit those expenditures.

RENTAL VALUE, GYMNASIUM, AUDITORIUM, CLUB, AND RESTAURANT SPACE IN NEW YORK BANK EXCEEDS TOTL RENTAL, ALL 12 RESERVE BANKS, 1917.

The manner in which every instinct of economy has been violated is obvious at every turn. For example, in the New York banking palace, now under construction, the annual rental value of the space set aside for "gymnasium, restaurants, club quarters, and auditorium," or movie theater, as it is sometimes called, is $179,322, as figured on what the reserve board describes in its reports as "the basis of existing rental values." The rental value of that space, so appropriated, is more than the total rental paid by all of the 12 reserve banks in the calendar year 1917—only the Dallas Reserve Bank at that time occupying its own banking house.

CLAIM THAT NEW BUILDING IS NEEDED TO "STORE GOLD" IS SIMPLY A FAKE.

In endeavoring to excuse the erection of the 15-story building by the New York Reserve Bank, with 5 additional stories underground, it was claimed that space was needed for the "storage" of the New York Reserve Bank's vast gold supply; but calculations which have been made show that the New York Reserve Bank's annex alone, exclusive of the main banking palace, estimated in the board's October report to the Senate to cost an additional $23,435,000, contained enough space in its basement for vaults capable of holding, without crowding, not only all of the gold supply of the New York Reserve Bank but the entire gold supply of the whole world, estimated at about $9,000,000,000.

The suggestion, therefore, that this huge additional building was necessary, either in whole or in part, to store the gold, etc., is an absurd pretense.

VOLUME OF LOANS PER EMPLOYEE, 1917, $500,000; 1922, $40,000.

The total loans, discounts, and bought paper held by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York last week—March 15—amounted to only $92,725,000, or about $40,000 per employee. In December, 1917, they were about $500,000 per employee.

Official reports show that the New York Reserve Bank has been employing, exclusive of all employees engaged in its "transit" or check-collection department, from 2,000 to 2,500 men and women. In 1920 the "transit" department had 522 employees.

A report which I have before me shows that one of the largest and most successful banks in New York City, whose loans and investments amount to about twice as much as the loans of the New York Reserve Bank, employs in all departments, including its transit or collection departments, its banking department, and all other departments, something less than 100 employees.

I also have before me the report of another large financial institution which has outstanding about $400,000,000 of loans, and those loans are in charge of one capable executive officer, who has in his department only about 30 employees, or say, 10 employees per $100,000,000 of loans, while the New York Reserve Bank has, exclusive of employees in its transit or check-collection department, more than 2,000 employees per $100,000,000 of loans.

The loan department of the bank is the most important. The work in connection with Liberty bonds is a mere fraction of what it was in 1917, when expenses were less than one-seventh of what they were last year, and the number of bank-deposit accounts is small compared with most of the banking institutions in New York City, although the amount of its deposits is, of course, very large. Its check-collection business is also small compared with that of the New York clearing house.

Loans, discounts, and bought paper held by the New York Reserve Bank were as follows:

Mar. 15, 1922	$92,725,000
Dec. 28, 1917	403,110,000

This shows that loans, discounts, and bought paper held by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York on December 28, 1917, amounted to more than four times as much as at this time, although that reserve bank for 1917 was employing only 829 employees and officers, as compared with 2,773 employees and officers December 31, 1921.

EXPENSES INCREASE 800 PER CENT—25 MEN GET SALARY INCREASE AVERAGING 594 PER CENT.

For the year 1921 current expenses of the New York Reserve Bank were reported at the enormous sum of $8,673,456, against total current expenses in 1917 of $1,129,336.

In other words, since 1921 the expenses have increased to nearly 800 per cent of what they were in 1917

What else could you expect when you find money being so recklessly paid out that 25 of the New York Reserve Bank's "officers" whose aggregate annual salaries at the time of or just before their employment by the Federal reserve system amounted to only $56,300 were getting in October last $334,700, an increase of 594 per cent, although the salaries of most Government employees, Senators, and Representatives have not been increased at all.

I believe that at least five or six million dollars could have been saved in the administration of the New York Reserve Bank last year if it had been run with a proper regard to intelligent administration and economy, and of the amount so saved 90 per cent would have gone into the Federal Treasury.

In making the plans for its new "banking temple" at New York the Federal reserve authorities proceeded with the most amazing waste and the most reckless extravagance.

The total rental paid by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for the years named was reported as follows:

Calendar year 1920	$301,397
Calendar year 1919	290,243
Calendar year 1917	55,557

Rental value of space set aside for "gymnasium, restaurants, clubs, and auditorium" on "present basis of rental," $179,322. Total rental all reserve banks 1917 (only one bank building owned), $178,623.

The bank at this time has no need for as much space as it had in 1919 or 1920, and yet they are pushing forward the construction of an additional 20-story building, including five stories underground, upon which the taxes alone, based on cost and the present New York City tax rate, will amount to about $700,000, or twelve times total rental in 1917, although loans are now less than one-fourth of December, 1917. Rental increased from $55,557 to equivalent of over $1,500,000, estimating funds in building at 3 per cent.

And the interest on the $25,646,000 which the board authorized the bank to expend for banking quarters would, at the moderate rate of only 3 per cent, be equal to, say, $769,000, making the rental cost on this basis, exclusive of upkeep, insurance, and other expenses, of $1,469,000, or about five times as much as the maximum rental the bank has ever paid in any one year in the past, when the demand for space was probably greater than it will be for many years to come.

The rental on that basis is also about thirty times as great as the total rental paid in 1917, although the bank's loans in December, 1917, were four times as large as they are now. (The money being spent in the building, if loaned on agricultural and commercial paper, would have been nontaxable.)

I viewed the site of the New York bank building a few days ago, and found earth was still being excavated from the foundation. The bank officers claim that they bought the land at a bargain price. If this is true, why not instruct the bank to sell it at a profit, if possible, and buy land a few blocks away which could be gotten so as to save, on land alone, probably three or four million dollars. The less expensive ground would be equally convenient to 97 per cent of the bank's depositors.

As to this new and wantonly extravagant building, its erection has practically not yet been commenced—still working on the foundation. Unless the subcontracts have been let on an enormously inflated basis they ought to be able to cancel the contracts by the payment of a moderate amount of money and save the Government on the land and building at least $15,000,000 from the estimate they submitted to the Senate in October last of $25,646,000.

NEW YORK RESERVE BANK ARRANGING FOR $25,000,000 BANKING PALACE WHILE RESERVE BOARD SUSPENDS RESERVE REQUIREMENTS TO AFFORD IT RELIEF.

The Reserve Board's report to the Senate shows that it made the "informal arrangement" with the "general contractor" for the construction of this monumental folly, or banking temple, on December 22, 1919, although the official records show that about that very time the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, largely as a result of its huge loans to certain big speculative institutions in that city, was so hard pressed that it was actually borrowing in January, 1920, more than $100,000,000 from other Federal reserve banks in other parts of the country, including the South and the West, whose resources were to that extent being sapped.

It is also worthy of note that while the New York Reserve Bank was practically in the act of authorizing these unconscionable expenditures for this banking palace the Federal Reserve Board at Washington was passing a resolution waiving the reserve requirements for that particular bank, thus facilitating its imprudent and improvident expansion.

The formal contract with the general contractor it appears was executed January 25, 1921. About that time, or, say, on February 14, 1921, the New York Reserve Bank, according to Governor Strong's admission before the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, August 9, 1921, was lending to two banks in New York district the sum of $250,000,000, the amount loaned to one of these institutions being $150,000,000.

TWO BANKS GET $250,000,000, WHILE TOTAL LOANS ON AGRICULTURAL AND CATTLE PAPER IN 5,307 BANKS WERE ONLY $59,000,000.

The total amount of "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper held as late as February 28, 1921, by eight Federal reserve banks, covering about two-thirds of the area of the entire country, was less than $59,000,000.

Therefore, those two banks in New York were being accommodated with more than four times as much money as 5,307 member banks were at that time getting on "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper in 28 States and parts of 5 others, including all of the New England States, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, parts of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana, and Arizona, and also in the whole of the important agricultural and cattle-raising States of Oregon, Washington, and California, with Utah, Nevada, and Idaho added.

NEW YORK RESERVE BANK DIRECTOR GETS BIG LOAN ON "DUMMY NOTE."

The following instance illustrates the scrupulous nicety and punctilious ethics of the New York Reserve Bank officials. In the autumn of 1920 the records show that a certain director of the New York Reserve Bank was borrowing from a member bank to which the New York Reserve Bank had extended huge accommodations more money than the Federal reserve banks of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Cleveland were lending at the same time on agricultural and live-stock paper to all the 2,766 member banks in all the States in those great districts. Furthermore, the New York Reserve Bank director was borrowing that money mainly on speculative stocks and more than half of it on a "dummy loan."

I have used in this letter figures as to building costs taken from the official report submitted to the Senate by the Federal Reserve Board under date of October 31, 1921, in answer to the Overman resolution calling for data. The report gave figures down to October 1, 1921, as to expenditures, and the estimated cost to complete the unfinished banks are presumed to be the estimated costs as of October 1, 1921, or the date of the report, October 31, 1921, except that we are told that the most recent estimate "for the completed banking quarters in New York City," which the report places at $25,646,410, is "March, 1921."

RESERVE BANK OFFICIALS SCAMPERING TO COVER.

Since the disclosures of this colossal extravagance and scandalous waste were made last fall the Federal reserve authorities have gotten very busy trimming down building estimates, and now claim that they did not really expect to spend the amounts they admit they had "authorized." But unless Congress itself puts the brakes on them, their promises and new estimates must be taken with a good deal of salt. These reductions should have been made before they were forced by an aroused public indignation.

WHAT A COLORADO BANK PRESIDENT SAYS.

In conclusion I beg leave to quote the following extract from a letter from a bank president in Denver, Colo., which was introduced in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 16, 1922, by Senator HARRIS of Georgia. The letter referred to was dated January 11, 1922. It refers to Senator HARRIS's bill designed to place a limit upon the expenditures to be made by the reserve banks without the authority of Congress. Its writer said:

If I am correctly informed, this bill attempts to place at least a joint control over the money earned by the Federal reserve banks in which the Government has a direct interest under the law in Congress itself. As a matter of fact, the Federal reserve banks should not be allowed under any circumstances to spend the money of the Government without the Government's consent, and your logic is certainly sound.

It has been well understood among banks throughout the country that the Federal reserve banks were spending money like drunken sailors in erecting new buildings on most extravagant scales in order to use up the extraordinary earnings of these banks and not be obliged to turn the same into the Government Treasury.

The business of the Government in the matter of public buildings should not be delegated, but be under the direct supervision of Congress. Of this there can be no doubt or argument. There may be cases where there is need for Federal reserve bank buildings, but, if so, Congress had just as well provide it as to have the bank boards provide it.

UNITED STATES TREASURY MULCTED OF $6,000,000 BY BOOK ENTRIES FOR "DEPRECIATION."

Already the reserve banks have charged off for alleged depreciation in connection with the cost of bank buildings, most of which have not yet been completed, over $7,000,000, and 90 per cent, or over $6,000,000 of this charge-off, is at the expense of the Federal Treasury.

There is probably not a man in either branch of Congress who will attempt to defend the mismanagement for which certain Federal Reserve officials have been impeached. The charges can not truthfully be denied. It is now for the Congress to answer the question which Governor Harding, of the Reserve Board, and Governor Strong, of the New York Reserve Bank, in the language of the notorious Tweed, are probably asking, "What are you going to do about it?"

I believe, Congresman, that you will find that the correction of these evils is a subject well worthy of your splendid abilities and your courageous efforts.

The fatal experiences of the past two years, in my opinion, prove quite clearly that the wise, capable, and fearless administration of our banking and currency system is really of more pressing importance to the whole country than the tariff, or disarmament, or the collection of our foreign debts, or other great questions which at this time are occupying the public mind.

With cordial best wishes,

Sincerely yours, JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BRINSON.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. SAMUEL M. BRINSON, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolutions of the House, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 13, 1922.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SAMUEL M. BRINSON, a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses connected therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 275) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL M. BRINSON, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CARAWAY, Mr. LADD, and Mr. HARRELD.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 13 (legislative day of April 10), 1922.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

D. Arthur Lines to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Louisiana.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

To be commanders.

George M. Baum.
Wolcott E. Hall.
Fred F. Rogers.
William L. Beck.

To be lieutenant commanders.

George M. Cook.
Edward K. Lang.
Walter D. La Mont.
Roman B. Hammes.
Herbert O. Roesch.
Deleavan B. Downer.
Lewis W. Comstock.
Frank E. P. Uberroth.
Alexander Macomb.
Paul F. Foster.
Ames Loder.
Ralph G. Risley.
Carlos A. Bailey.
John F. Meigs, jr.
Richard S. Field.

To be lieutenants.

Roman B. Hammes.
Linton Herndon.
John G. Farrell.

To be lieutenants (junior grade).

John G. Farrell.
Robert B. Crichton.

To be surgeon.

Charles S. Stephenson.

To be passed assistant surgeons.

William R. Taylor.
Elmer F. Lowry.
Earl E. Sullivan.
Forrest M. Harrison.

To be paymasters.

Hervey B. Ransdell.
Lawrence A. Odlin.
John A. Byrne.
John B. Ewald.

To be passed assistant paymaster.

Joseph A. Carey.

To be chief machinists.

James Hauser.
Warren E. Magee.
Helge Ohlsson.

To be chief carpenter.

Robert F. Roberson.

POSTMASTERS.

ILLINOIS.

William R. Buckler, Brockton.
Louis E. Ude, Carmi.
Fred More, Charleston.
Joshua L. Saylor, Glasford.
Harlo F. Selby, Golden.
William T. Robinson, Kenilworth.
Robert A. Blackmon, Lacon.
George H. Townsend, Onarga.
Homer F. Kelly, Roseville.
Frank Reed, Taylorville.

IOWA.

John L. Gallagher, Eddyville.
Frederick W. Steele, Walker.

KENTUCKY.

James H. Thompson, Ewing.
Edgar P. Catron, Junction City.
Jackson L. Montgomery, Valley Station.

LOUISIANA.

Jesse M. Talbot, Bernice.
John A. Marchand, Gonzales.
Clifford P. Connell, Haughton.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Almon L. Pratt, Belchertown.
Raymond C. Hazeltine, Clemsford.
Delano E. Chase, Linwood.
Myron M. White, South Duxbury.
D. Anthony Sheehan, Weston.
George B. Waterman, Williamstown.

MISSISSIPPI.

William B. Stone, Fulton.
Henry P. Patton, Sardis.

MONTANA.

Clarence R. Miller, Circle.
Ernest M. Goodell, Dutton.
Mary J. Tasa, Flaxville.
Leon E. Phillips, Highwood.
Rose M. Sargent, Nashua.
Letta Conser, Plevna.
Marie I. Moler, Reedpoint.
Lizzie Gorsuch, Winnett.

NEW JERSEY.

Walter Frederick, Delawanna.

NEW YORK.

C. Homer Hook, Greenville.
John B. Read, Poland.
Lloyd E. Jones, Richville.

NORTH CAROLINA.

James S. Rogers, Oxford.
William J. Hardage, Waxhaw.

OHIO.

Howard C. Moorman, Jamestown.
Albert E. Gale, Lima.
Sanford E. Gottshall, Magnolia.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Howard L. Harbaugh, Fairfield.
W. Winston Davis, Johnstown.
James W. Hatch, North Girard.
William E. Vance, Unity Station.
Ruth Roberts, Vintondale.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Jefferson M. Davis, Pinewood.

TEXAS.

James T. Shaw, jr., Anna.
James R. Corbin, Blooming Grove.
W. F. Curtis, Byers.
Robert S. Brennand, Colorado.
Jasper M. Brooks, Copperas Cove.
Jasper N. Coffman, Daingerfield.
Cornelius A. Ogden, Deweyville.
Andrew Schmidt, Edna.
Arnold H. Kneese, Fredericksburg.
Arthur B. Rook, Harold.
Minnie S. Parish, Huntsville.
Thomas J. Oden, Lindale.
Edmund W. Tarrence, Llano.
Joel W. Moore, McDade.
Rudolph Nordhausen, Schulenburg.

WISCONSIN.

Sever E. Nelson, Argyle.
Leslie D. Jenkins, Bagley.
Henry C. Scheller, Cecil.
Eugene F. Stoddard, Downing.
John F. Rhinehart, Gays Mills.
Carson J. Lawrence, La Farge.
Charles Pearson, Lavalle.
Burton E. McCoy, Prairie du Sac.
Andrew Bock, Stockholm.
Harry Bradley, Taylor.
Edmund O. Johnson, Warrens.
Tena W. Krentz, Westfield.
Theodore R. Peterson, Weyauwega.
George E. King, Winneconne.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 13, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be not silent unto us, O God, for amid our laughter and amid our tears we give Thee thanks. O speak to us out of the clouds which hide the glory of Thy face. Again there is a silence in our roll call, and a Member, honored and esteemed, will answer no more to his name. Remember the loved ones with the rich blessings of the untroubled heart. Impress us with the brevity and uncertainty of life, and also with its tremendous meaning. As men, as citizens, and as servants may our daily lives be born of the conviction that we are dealing justly and with loving mercy, for God is near. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, on page 5951 of the RECORD of yesterday there are some typographical errors, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in order to make the necessary corrections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks and to make the necessary corrections. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2579. An act to provide for the publication of estimates of unginned cotton; and

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish additional cotton statistics.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. RAWSON and Mr. CARAWAY members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Labor.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2579. An act to provide for the publication of estimates of unginned cotton; to the Committee on the Census.

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish additional cotton statistics; to the Committee on the Census.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BRINSON.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it is with sincere sorrow that I announce to the House the death, in the early hours of the morning of this day, of SAMUEL MITCHELL BRINSON, a Representative from the third district of North Carolina. Our colleague had been a sufferer for many months. It was a tribute to the people of his district, among whom he had lived, that last week, when he had returned to this city from a sanitarium, he made the request that he be carried home in order that he might die amongst his friends among whom he had lived and spent his life. Our dead friend was a man of generous impulses, amiable, and lovable. On his soul when the summons came rested that calm which of right belonged to one who had never knowingly injured a fellow being.

His funeral will be held to-morrow from his home in the city of Newbern, N. C., at 3 o'clock.

I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 326.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SAMUEL M. BRINSON, a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses connected therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. POU, Mr. STEDMAN, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. WARD, Mr. LYON, Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. HAMMER, Mr. BOWLING, Mr. SANDLIN, Mr. LOWREY, Mr. GLYNN, Mr. TYSON, and Mr. KING.

And then (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with the resolution, adjourned until Friday, April 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FESS: Committee on the Library. H. J. Res. 304. Joint resolution to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; without amendment (Rept. No. 903). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GENSMAN: A bill (H. R. 11296) to make punishable by law the offense of uttering false statements affecting national banking institutions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TAGUE: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5085. By Mr. CONNELL: Resolution adopted by the Manufacturers' Association of Lackawanna County, Pa., indorsing the principle of American valuation of imported goods in the administrative provisions of the tariff bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5086. By Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania: Evidence in support of House bill 11285, granting a pension to Christiana Hoffman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

5087. Also, evidence in support of House bill 11286, granting a pension to Mary A. Binker; to the Committee on Pensions.

5088. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of William Wallace Brauer, Washington, D. C., relative to loaning the German Government a billion dollars to revolutionize the American agricultural industry; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5089. By Mr. MEAD: Resolution adopted by the board of estimate and apportionment of New York City, urging the continuance of the Brooklyn Navy Yard and more hospitalization for disabled veterans in the New York district; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5090. Also, petition of Frank Mangus and other residents of Buffalo, opposing the passage of House bill 9753 and other Sunday bills; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 14, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father, we recognize the associations which gather about this day. We recognize the solemn responsibilities which come to us with those associations, and we rejoice before Thee that Thine own eye of piety and Thy heart of love are moved for a world in need, and we thank Thee for Him who came to bear our sins, to meet for us the emergency in the great crises of human life. We pray that more and more His Spirit may dominate our lives, control our actions, and bring us into closer sympathy with mankind in its needs and in all the affairs and responsibilities of government and of personal relationship. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, April 10, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 182).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of State (foreign intercourse), fiscal year 1923, for alteration, repair, and furnishing of the embassy building in London, England, $155,000; for the International Conference on Maritime Law, $5,000; and for the Fifth International Conference on American States, at Santiago, Chile, $75,000; in all, $235,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ALTERNATIVE ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 184).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an alternative estimate of appropriation for the Department of State (foreign intercourse), fiscal year 1923, for the International Research Council, $4,030, in lieu of the estimate for the same purpose contained in the Alternative Budget, page 90, in amount $2,658, representing a net increase in the amount requested of $1,372, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, WAR DEPARTMENT, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 183).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, fiscal year 1923, for "pay, etc., of the Army," $500,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts Department, Grand Army of the Republic, protesting against the enactment of legislation reducing the efficiency and personnel of the Army and Navy below the level agreed to by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MYERS presented a resolution of the Libby (Mont.) Commercial Club, favoring inclusion in the McNary reclamation bill of a provision for the reclamation of logged-off lands, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. ODDIE presented letters in the nature of petitions from employees of the Treasury custodian service of Reno and Carson City, Nev., praying for the enactment of House bill 8928, granting certain relief to employees of the Treasury custodian service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CALDER presented a resolution of the board of aldermen of the city of New York, favoring the restoration of the pneumatic-tube system in the postal service at that city, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a resolution of Ora Call Post, No. 10, American Legion, of Wheatland, Wyo., favoring the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill without amendments likely to defeat its final enactment, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MOSES presented memorials of sundry citizens of Rochester, Farmington, and Washington, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution adopted by the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Lincoln, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Lincoln, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COLT presented a resolution of the Varnum Continentals, of East Greenwich, R. I., protesting against the policy of further reduction of the Army and Navy personnel, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by Sarah M. E. Battles Tent, No. 44, Daughters of Veterans, of Akron, Ohio, favoring the enactment of liberal pension legislation for veterans of the Civil War and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 151) to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes, relating to compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 598) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 256) to reimburse the State of Montana for expenses incurred by it in suppressing forest fires on Government land during the year 1919, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 600) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 583) for the relief of Lyn Lundquist, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 601) thereon.

PRESENTATION OF TABLET TO NATIONAL SOCIETY, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, for the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], chairman of the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It is very short.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to present a tablet in the name of the Government of the United States to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution as a token of appreciation for making available Continental Memorial Hall for the sessions of the Conference on Limitation of Armament, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $350 for the expenses of producing a suitable tablet in conformity with this resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL SERVICES IN HONOR OF GENERAL GORGAS.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably Senate Resolution 250 to provide for the printing of 2,500 copies of the memorial services held in honor of Maj. Gen. William Crawford Gorgas, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,500 copies of Senate Document No. 390, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "Memorial Services Held in Honor of Maj. Gen. William Crawford Gorgas," for the use of the Senate document room.

APPOINTMENTS BY EXECUTIVE ORDER.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Resolution 258 be referred to the Committee on Civil Service, with instructions to report the resolution back to the Senate within 10 calendar days.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the matter, though I think there is no objection to the order.

Mr. STERLING. What is the Senator's request?

Mr. HARRISON. The request I have made is that Senate Resolution 258, which was debated at some length some weeks ago, be referred to the committee of which the Senator from South Dakota is chairman, with instructions that it be reported back within 10 calendar days.

Mr. STERLING. It is the resolution relating to appointments by Executive order?

Mr. HARRISON. It is.

Mr. STERLING. I have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to have the resolution amended by inserting after the words "Executive order" the words "since March 4, 1921."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution as modified was referred to the Committee on Civil Service, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish to the Senate the name of every person appointed by Executive order since March 4, 1921, setting aside the civil-service rules, and to furnish to the Senate the reasons therefor.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3317) to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, Beltrami County, Minn., and I submit a report (No. 599) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Minnesota be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3460) granting a pension to Hallie Wilt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 3461) to amend the act of February 28, 1920, so as to authorize the acquisition of additional land and the disposition of certain lands already acquired at Camp Knox, Ky.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 3462) to add two associate justices to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3463) relating to transportation rates for veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3464) for the relief of the Houston (Tex.) Chamber of Commerce, Emma Helberg, Laura Lackner, and F. W. Lackner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 193) to locate a Bartholdi fountain on the circle at the intersection of Columbia Road, Harvard, and Mount Pleasant Streets on Sixteenth Street; to the Committee on the Library.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. ASHURST each submitted an amendment and Mr. NICHOLSON submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by them to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. ODDIE. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the tariff bill, the amendment providing for the placing of cyanide on the free list. This is done for the purpose of protecting the gold and silver mining industries. I move that the amendment lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have here an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department. My amendment provides for the continuation of the barge service now in vogue on the Black Warrior River. The bill as it came over from the House did not provide funds necessary to continue this service and my amendment makes the necessary provision. I will offer this amendment to the bill at the proper time. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations in charge of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN THE NEAR EAST.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 276) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Senate Resolution 276.

Whereas Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Greece, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia, on the 10th of August, 1920, formally recognized the independence of the Republic of Armenia and entered into a solemn compact not only to respect but to preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and political independence of Armenia; and

Whereas Turkey, upon the 10th day of August, 1920, formally recognized Armenia as a free and independent State and renounced in favor of Armenia all rights and title in the vilayets of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van, and Bitlis in conformity to a boundary and frontier therein which had been fixed by the President of the United States according to the stipulations of the treaty of Sevres; and

Whereas the aforesaid powers signatory to the treaty of Sevres, in disregard of their covenants respecting the independence and integrity of Armenia, have suffered and permitted the so-called Kemalist Government, having its seat at Angora, Anatolia, to enter the Provinces of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van, and Bitlis, and by means of murder, rapine, pillage, arson, and outrages unspeakable to destroy a large portion of the Armenian population in said Provinces, and to expel the remnants of the Armenian people from said Provinces; and

Whereas the powers signatory to said treaty, in callous indifference to their solemn pledges and to the national rights and liberties of the Armenian people, are contemplating that the Kemalist Government shall be confirmed in its illegal seizure and occupation of the Armenian Provinces of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van, and Bitlis; and

Whereas it is impossible for Christian peoples to have and enjoy the rights of life, liberty, and security of property under any Turkish régime, while, on the other hand, the Turks may enjoy the full and free exercise of their religion and be secure in their liberties, lives, and property under a civilized government, such as obtains in Christian nations; and

Whereas the continued exercise of political authority by the Turkish State in Constantinople was, by article 36 of the treaty of Sevres, made conditional upon Turkey faithfully observing the provisions of said treaty, particularly as regards the protection of the rights of racial, religious, and linguistic minorities in Turkey, and in the event of a failure to observe said treaty the powers expressly reserved the right to modify the Turkish rights in Constantinople, and Turkey agreed to accept any new dispositions which the powers might make in relation thereto; and

Whereas a failure of the powers to take drastic, radical, and effectual measures to pacify Turkey and bring an end to Turkish disorder, rapine, pillage, and crimes, and to place the Christian peoples and Turkish tribes in such a position of security and of governmental and economic order as will permit said peoples and their territories to become self-supporting will only result in multiplied disorders, distress, and famine; will aggravate the anxiety and burdens of the people of the United States, who are being constantly importuned to come to the aid and succor of the victims of Turkish malice and misrule; and will otherwise constitute an example of the perfidious attitude of the powers in a great historical and political crisis, at a time when adequate power is in their hands, to reach such a rational and permanent adjustment of the Turkish problem as shall be justified in Christian morality and by the verdict of history; and

Whereas the people of the United States view with misgiving and disappointment the action of the powers in weighing Mohammedan opinion in Asia and Africa in the balances against the opinion of the people of the United States and of other civilized States, who have become indignant at the vexatious temporizing with the Turkish question; and

Whereas in the opinion of the people of the United States the elimination of Turkish political authority from Constantinople, the liberation and independence of Armenia, and the pacification of Anatolia were second only in importance to the thwarting and overthrow of the German military power, and if these results be not accomplished, now that the Turks have been delivered into the hands of the allied powers, the American people will feel that they have been deprived of one of the legitimate fruits of the victory of the allied and associated powers in the recent war, and the Christian nations themselves will be deprived of the peace that has been won; and

Whereas no consideration of the integrity of the Turkish debt may be properly permitted to interfere with the realization of these objects, but that questions of the apportionment and security of the Turkish debt must be subordinated and accommodated to the inexorable political requirements for the realization of these objects: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that, in conformity to the pledges of the powers and of the rights reserved in that behalf in the treaty of Sevres, the powers should take effectual measures to permanently supplant Turkish political authority in Constantinople, and that Constantinople ought either to be placed under the administrative authority of Greece or be constituted a free State having the same status as the free city of Danzig under the League of Nations; that the political independence and territorial integrity of Armenia, according to prior commitments of the powers, should be confirmed and that effectual military measures be taken to assure the same; and that, if the Kemalist régime at Angora in Anatolia will not recognize these dispositions and abide in good faith by the provisions of the treaty of Sevres for the protection of racial, religious, and linguistic minorities in Anatolia, effectual measures, military and political, should be taken to pacify Anatolia and to provide for a just and liberal political administration therein.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to make an announcement. I am convinced that the chaotic condition existing in industry to-day demands the consideration of Congress; and I wish to announce that on Monday next, immediately following the routine morning business, providing the calling of the calendar does not interfere, I shall ask unanimous consent to consider Senate Joint Resolution No. 188, which provides for a committee of inquiry to endeavor to find some solution of the problem. As I do not want to interfere with the regular business of the Senate, I desire further to announce that should the morning hour on Monday be consumed by the calling of the calendar I shall renew my request for unanimous consent the first morning thereafter when we have a morning hour.

ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10429) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credits to and relieve certain disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments in the settlement of certain accounts. It is a bill which has passed the House, and the passage of which is recommended and urged by the Comptroller General of the United States in order to enable him to settle the accounts of certain disbursing officers. It was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized, through such officer as he may designate, and within two years from the passage of this act, (a) to relieve disbursing officers or special disbursing agents of the War and Navy Departments from accountability or responsibility for losses occurring between April 6, 1917, and November 18, 1921, of funds, or of accounts, papers, records, vouchers, or data pertaining to said funds, for which said officers or agents were accountable or responsible; and (b) to allow credits, in the settlement of accounts of said officers or agents, for payments made in good faith on public account during said period, notwithstanding failure to comply with requirements of existing law or regulations pursuant thereto: Provided, That in cases of losses or payments involving more than $1,000 the Comptroller General shall exercise the authority herein only upon the written recommendation of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, which recommendation shall also set forth the facts relative to such loss or payment: Provided further, That the Comptroller General in all cases shall certify that the transactions, expenditures, losses, or payments appear to be free from fraud or collusion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota make a brief statement with reference to the bill? It seems to be so sweeping in its character that there must be some special occasion for its passage.

Mr. NELSON. The bill was passed by the House and is recommended and urged by the Comptroller General and was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. It is to enable the Comptroller General to settle the accounts of certain disbursing officers. A great many disbursing officers failed to get the proper vouchers and documents, and under the rule of the department they are unable to settle their accounts. The report of the committee in support of the bill shows the facts in the case.

Mr. SMOOT. Was there any reason why they did not get vouchers?

Mr. NELSON. We passed such laws at the close of the Civil War and the Spanish War.

Mr. SMOOT. It was on account of war conditions that they could not get receipts and vouchers?

Mr. NELSON. Yes. The disbursing officers were here and there ordered to places temporarily and failed to get the proper vouchers in many instances.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILLIS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in the regular RECORD type, an address by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] delivered at Bangor, Me., on the 6th instant before the Republican State convention.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

SUMMARY OF ADDRESS BY HON. FRANK B. WILLIS AT BANGOR, ME., APRIL 6, 1922, BEFORE THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

A little more than a year has passed since President Harding was inaugurated and the various departments of government passed under Republican control. Though in many of these departments Democrats remain in practical control through the bureaucratic system which has fastened itself like a barnacle on the ship of state, yet Republicans are properly chargeable with responsibility and are ready to answer for their stewardship, even though they have been hampered and impeded by hold-over Democrats who seek not to promote but to hinder. Ours is a government by parties, and I trust it will remain so. Parties are charged by the people at the polls with a mandate to perform. On the performance of the trust imposed rests the determination of the question whether the party in power shall remain in power. Vesting of power implies the obligation to exercise that power in the performance of party pledges. Let us examine the situation by which the Republican administration was confronted on March 4, 1921.

Our Nation, forgetful of partisan lines, had fought a great war; it had saved civilization from disaster; it had financed Europe as well as America and given of the fairest flower of its young manhood that liberty among men might continue to live. Unfortunately, at Versailles the high purposes of the war were obscured and shriveled by avaricious land grabbing and rival ambitions, on the one hand, and by an impracticable internationalistic scheme of world supergovernment on the other. America's ideals were misinterpreted at Versailles, and when later, to resume its independence, which had almost been bartered away, it rejected by an overwhelming vote a League of Nations to which it had never subscribed and in no respect authorized, charges of bad faith were made. The atmosphere of suspicion was further darkened by the stubborn refusal of the Democratic administration to conclude any treaty of peace whatever with the countries with which we had recently been at war. Having deceived the people in one campaign by the false slogan of "He kept us out of war," the Democracy was emboldened to essay another campaign of deception with the less attractive rallying cry of "He kept us out of peace." As a result of this attitude our foreign affairs on March 4, 1921, were in a desperate condition. We were despised by our enemies and distrusted by our former friends.

Misunderstanding of fundamental American ideals and misrepresentation by self-appointed spokesmen had bred doubt and suspicion and hate. We had fed and fondled and financed Europe so long that she was beginning to believe that was our permanent job. When she was informed that money loaned to buy bread must not be spent for bullets she resented the impertinent suggestion of American independence. Yet Europe could not be blamed especially, for she had been repeatedly informed by Democratic statesmen that our country was anxious to yield up its sovereignty and become the pack horse and the policeman for everything from the Hebrides to Hejaz.

March 4, 1921, Europe was sullen, dissatisfied, suspicious, unfriendly. There were ominous complications in the Pacific—complications which threatened the peace of the world—Japan alert, aggressive, was doubtful as to America's policy in the Far East; and doubt is the prolific mother of suspicion, jealousy, hatred, and war. There were troublesome difficulties in Central America; the vascillating policy of the preceding administration had brought that region to the verge of revolution. Our Mexican policy had been such as to make Americans little more than a laughing stock in the Republic to the south of us. Such was the condition of our foreign affairs when Warren G. Harding became President—he was confronted by unrest, turbulence, suspicion, the loss of American prestige, and threatening difficulties likely to breed wars.

What has been accomplished in a year in the betterment of our foreign relations? In the State Department vascillation and weakness have given place to firmness and strength.

America has accomplished more in one year under the leadership of President Harding and Secretary Hughes toward better understanding among nations and the promotion of world peace than has been accomplished in all the long decades of our national history prior to 1921. So wise and so convincing have been the plans of President Harding for American expression of the world's fond hope for tranquillity and peace that these plans have received the cordial support of substantially all the people regardless of party lines. Indeed, Senator OSCAR UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, himself the leader of his party in the Senate, a great American before he is a Democrat, had a most honorable and important part in shaping and defending these plans.

Every serious international difficulty which threatened a year ago has either been finally settled or the definite means provided for its speedy adjustment. All this has been done without sacrifice of national sovereignty or abatement of self-respect and with fullest justice to other nations. Deeds have banished doubts, suspicion has given way to confidence, ambition has surrendered to justice. Yet all this has been accomplished quietly, firmly, fairly. We have succeeded in securing without loss of national sovereignty adherence to those principles of even-handed justice of which America is the chief advocate and defender. All this has been done in America, by Americans, in a distinctively American way. President Wilson went to Europe, and failed; President Harding brought Europe to America, and succeeded. Versailles despoiled China, robbed a confiding friend, and gave Shantung to Japan. American diplomacy, exemplified by Harding and Hughes, brought despoiled and despoiler together in the inspiring atmosphere of American fair play and gave Shantung back to China. The treaty of Versailles made problems, the Washington conference solved them. The two treaties prepared by that conference relative to China guarantee the open door, provide an equitable customs tariff for the new Republic, and, by pledging a policy of "hands off," guarantee to China a fair chance to work out its own destiny.

By other agreements the great nations have banished from any future wars the deadly poison gas that strangles and suffocates and sears and have put the submarine under bonds for good behavior. Without sacrifice of national honor or loss of American strategic position, a treaty was concluded providing for limitation of construction of capital ships by the great maritime nations. This sane measure of economy and peace is a long step forward; according to a recent estimate by naval officers it saves to our country alone over $250,000,000 per year, or nearly $1,000,000 per day. It lifts from the shoulders of the taxpayers a part of the rapidly increasing burden of competitive armament and at the same time gives to the signatory powers and the world a pledge of good faith and devotion to peace.

Rivalry in armament will lead to war as certain as it did in 1914. This treaty turns the faces of the great maritime nation away from war and toward peace.

The so-called four-power treaty substitutes conference for conflict and reason in the place of rifles. It infringes in no respect on American sovereignty or independence; it yields up no American ideal; it involves our Republic in no entangling alliance; it rests for its sanction on no armies camouflaged as international policemen and on no navies lurking in the offing; it constitutes no supergovernment based on force and creates no obligation legal or moral to use force. It is the expression of the thought of the world that there is a power more powerful than force and that is the regnant sway of world opinion founded in justice and right. Unless this principle is recognized, we must fall back on the doctrine that might makes right and that the only way to secure safety for ourselves is to proceed on the theory that no other nation will keep its word, and that we must therefore arm to the teeth.

The world is sick of war. It was calling for leadership. In his inaugural address President Harding said:

> We recognize the new order in the world with the closer contacts which progress has wrought. We sense the call of the human heart for fellowship, fraternity, and cooperation. We crave friendship and harbor no hate. But America, our America, the America builded on the foundation laid by the inspired fathers, can be a party to no permanent military alliance. We are ready to associate ourselves with the nations of the world, great and small, for conference, for counsel; to seek the expressed views of world opinion; to recommend a way to approximate disarmament and relieve the crushing burdens of military and naval establishment. Since freedom impelled and independence inspired and nationality exalted a world supergovernment is contrary to everything we cherish, and can have no sanction by our Republic. This is not selfishness; it is sanctity. It is not aloofness; it is security. It is not suspicion of others; it is patriotic adherence to the things which made us what we are.

The treaties drawn by the Washington conference were the answer to the President's recommendation.

These treaties have now all been ratified by the Senate. If nothing had been done in the year past beyond the work of the Washington conference, enough has been wrought in this consummation alone to give the administration of President Harding place alongside of the administrations of Washington and Monroe and to justify the confident claim of public approval for a program outlined in the Republican platform, proclaimed by its candidates, planned and carried into execution by its officials. This record of solid, successful, tangible achievement, of which the Nation is proud and for which a bleeding, war-burdened world is grateful, will be contrasted by a thoughtful electorate with the Democratic record of subserviency to European interests, abandonment of national ideals, rainbow chasing after an un-American League of Nations, meddling with everything, settling nothing, not even the bills of expense piled up by their administration—the most recklessly extravagant and wickedly wasteful in the history of the Republic.

But it is not in the handling of foreign affairs alone that the Republican Party has made a record which merits indorsement at the hands of the people. In domestic affairs it has made more progress toward economy and business methods in eight months than the Democratic Party made in eight years. When the Republicans came into full power in 1921 they found a Federal Treasury verging on bankruptcy. The World War unavoidably increased Government expenses, yet these necessary expenditures were vastly increased by Democratic wastefulness and incompetency. Cost-plus plans and privileged profiteering had piled Ossa on Pelion. National expenditures had increased beyond belief. Appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1916, were $1,115,000,000. In three years they had increased to more than $27,000,000,000. For 1917 expenditures had increased to $1,600,000,000 and the next year to $18,000,000,000. Following the election of a Republican Congress in 1918 expenditures were reduced from the Democratic high-water mark of $27,000,000,000 in 1919 to $6,500,000,000 in 1920. Cessation of war accounted for some of this decrease, but Republican economy and business methods were a large factor in making decrease possible.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, Republican economy brought appropriations down to $4,750,000,000 and the next year to $3,909,000,000, and for the coming year appropriations will be cut at least $500,000,0000 below this figure.

Before the war the $1,000,000,000 Congress was viewed with alarm. To-day, according to Eliot Wadsworth, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the Government is committed to more than double that sum in obligations and fixed charges that can not be reduced. This $2,065,000,000 is made up of $975,000,000 for interest on public debt, $388,000,000 sinking fund and other charges, $450,000,000 for disabled veterans' relief (apart from any bonus proposal whatever), and $252,000,000 for pensions.

These total nearly 60 per cent of the estimated cost of the National Government, leaving but 40 per cent upon which savings may be effective. The Army and Navy Departments and good roads take 26 per cent, leaving 14 per cent for all other Government services.

Such is the heritage handed down to President Harding by his predecessor.

The Government of the United States is the greatest business in the world, and the administration of President Harding has insisted that the best business methods should be established. For decades business men and thoughtful citizens generally have been urging the establishment of a Federal Budget system to make possible coordination of the different executive departments and cooperation between the governmental agencies which raise revenue and those which spend it. This is the application of just plain common business sense to a great business problem. Accordingly a Republican Congress promptly passed a Budget law, which President Wilson promptly vetoed. On March 4, 1921, the new Republican Congress came into being; it promptly passed a Budget law, which President Harding promptly signed. This law has been in operation under the efficient management of General Dawes less than a year, yet in that time it has saved of the taxpayers' money more than a billion dollars.

Theories do not count for much, but actual facts do. Here is an actual, tangible saving under Republican methods of a billion dollars a year, more than $3,000,000 every day. Economy after a Democratic administration is not a theory; it is a necessity. Democratic administrations do not solve problems, they make them; they do not pay debts, they create them. It is the business of Republicans to solve the problems and pay the debts, and that is what we are doing.

Better business methods in government are immediately reflected in better government credit. United States bonds that were selling a year ago at 87 are now selling at 99 and going up every day. Government bonds are a thermometer of finance, and this thermometer shows Government credit going up at 1 per cent a month. We told the people to hold their Government bonds, the Republican Party would bring them back to par, and it is doing it.

Two very tangible reasons why Government bonds are appreciating in value are furnished by two recent reports of the United States Treasury. One report shows that for the five-month period beginning July 1 this year the Federal expenses were $500,000,000 less than for the corresponding period under the Democratic administration in 1920. This is reducing the Federal expenses at the rate of $100,000,000 a month, or $1,200,000,000 a year, as compared with the operating expenses during the closing year of the Wilson régime.

Simultaneous with this report the Treasury shows that the gross debt of the United States Government has been decreased by over $485,000,000 within 90 days.

The Washington Post of March 29 said this:

> The cost of government is 30 per cent lower now than a year ago, a Treasury Department statement showed yesterday. Thus far this fiscal year, which began July 1 last, the Government has disbursed $2,412,000,000 under the heading of ordinary expenditures. For the corresponding period of the last fiscal year expenditures amounted to $3,502,000,000, an excess of $1,090,000,000 over the current period. President Harding's demand for economy in all Government affairs is believed responsible for the decrease.

This is the reason why bond prices have advanced—President Harding has made good the pledges of economy.

The President's policy is evidenced by the decrease in the Federal pay roll. Between January 1, 1921, and January 1, 1922, the grand total of all Government employees in the United States dropped from 643,833 to 588,018, a decrease of 55,815, a total now increased to 70,000 and reaching at least 85,000 before the end of this administration's second year.

In his speech at Marion, Ohio, in July, 1920, accepting the presidential nomination, Senator Harding said:

> I believe Federal departments should be more businesslike and should send back to productive effort thousands of Federal employees who are either duplicating work or are not essential at all.

The President has made good on this pledge to the people.

In his message to Congress one year ago President Harding especially urged speedy enactment of certain legislation. These recommendations have been carried into effect.

The emergency tariff law was passed, giving to languishing agriculture the encouragement that always comes from a protective tariff. The products of the farm were no longer on the free list where they were placed by Democratic tariff makers.

Farmers lacked credit; they were plundered by the packers and fleeced by stock gamblers. In harmony with platform pledges the Republican Party afforded immediate legislative relief, which is being felt now in the improved condition of agriculture throughout the country.

When the Congress convened the agricultural interests of the Nation were in a very critical condition. They needed protection and financial assistance. The response of the Congress was instant and without precedent. Within 90 days it had made provisions whereby the agricultural and live-stock interests of the United States were extended practically unlimited credit. The farmer's home market was protected, his exports were financed, $25,000,000 were added to his farm-loan funds and the interest charges decreased, gambling in grain to his detriment was stopped by the Capper-Tincher law, and exploitation of the live-stock interests was stopped by the packers and stockyards act.

Within 90 days the special session of the Republican Congress enacted more helpful, constructive, protective legislation in behalf of the basic industry of agriculture than all the sessions of Congress in any 10-year period of American history put together.

The President asked for a resolution declaring peace with Germany; this action Congress promptly took.

It passed a taxation law removing $800,000,000 of tax burdens from the people in a single year and eliminating all transportation and nuisance taxes.

It passed the new immigration law to restrict immigration on the 3 per cent basis. The Republican Party believes in and practices protection to American labor against cheap, underpaid foreign competition, whether that competition comes on foot or in boxes or crates. Neither cheap foreign labor nor its products shall be permitted to come into this country without restrictions. The present Congress will, in my judgment, retain and strengthen the immigration law.

Congress, believing in the Republican principle of developing our own country, has appropriated at the rate of $75,000,000 per year for aid in highway construction.

The Republican Party has not failed in discharging its obligation to him who has borne the burden of the battle, his widow, and his orphans.

As a recent report of the Veterans' Bureau shows, the Government is:

1. Paying out $1,000,000 cash every day, including Sunday, directly into the hands of the ex-service man or his dependents.
2. Providing, without cost, hospital care and treatment to 30,000 ex-service men. This care includes board and lodging and represents an annual expenditure of $60,000,000.
3. Giving vocational training, without cost, to over 100,000 disabled ex-service men, at an annual expenditure of over $30,000,000.
4. Conducting an insurance business for over 600,000 ex-service men, without any cost of administration to them, at premium rates below those of private companies for like policies. The insurance now in force is in the sum of $3,500,000,000.
5. Mailing out 650,000 checks every month, representing an expenditure of $42,000,000 monthly.
6. Conducting over 50,000 medical examinations every month.
7. Giving outside treatment in cases where hospitalization is not required to 20,000 ex-service men every month.
8. Handling 1,000 new claims every day in addition to the 1,200,000 already on file, and employing over 4,000 ex-service men in carrying out this work.
9. In addition to the above, the Veterans' Bureau has allowed 305,000 compensation claims; has paid out in compensation benefits $300,141,000; has allowed 148,000 insurance claims, totaling a value of $1,310,000,000.
10. The Veterans' Bureau will expend during the current calendar year of 1922, $510,000,000 in behalf of disabled ex-service men, more than the entire expenditures of the United States Government in any year of its history prior to 1897.

With the same liberality and patriotic purpose the Republican Party will solve the problem of adjusted compensation. It passed the Sweet law, asked for by the veterans, for the reorganization and decentralization of the Government functions dealing with veteran relief; it has never failed the soldier and it will not fail him now. It is significant that the States which have provided State compensation are Republican, whereas Democratic States have generally done nothing for their soldier boys.

Democratic tactics of delay have hindered and hampered, but they have not been and will not be able to prevent full completion of the Republican program before Congress adjourns.

The Republican protective tariff law is well on its way to final passage. The baneful effects of Democratic free-trade legislation were obscured by the Great War. Yet before the war came industrial disaster impended. Factories were closing, mines were shut down, mills were idle, unemployment was everywhere, soup houses were busy, bread lines were long. Under Democratic tariff laws employment had been transferred to Europe and Canada, while our own people suffered, and then the war came, with its large demand for American products.

War orders from Europe came in abundance and the people forgot Democratic tariff blunders that closed American factories and opened factories in Europe.

Europe was busy with war, consequently there were few exports to America. The waste of war increased beyond the wildest expectations our exports to Europe. As a result we enjoyed a terminary, feverish prosperity. But now all is changed. Europe is not able to buy but she is able to produce. Her rate of wages is only a fraction of ours. She can, therefore, produce in many lines more cheaply than we can.

An ounce of gold pays wages for—

Twenty hours' work in the United States.

Fifty hours' work in Great Britain.

Ninety hours' work in Japan.
One hundred hours' work in France.
Two hundred hours' work in Germany.

A recent trade report says:

Imports from Europe last month were valued at $71,484,521, as against $68,113,403 in January and $54,830,045 in February a year ago.
Exports to Europe last month amounted to $128,956,140, as compared with $148,939,246 in January and $238,816,430 in February, 1921.
Trade with South America remained almost stationary during February as compared with January.
Notable among the figures as to countries were those relating to Germany, from which country the United States imported goods valued at $8,901,154 last month, almost double the value of German goods which entered the country in February, 1921, when the German mark had a higher value.

American markets are being flooded with European-made goods offered for sale here at prices only a fraction of our American labor cost. If our American standards are to be maintained, if American workingmen are to be employed, if American industry is to thrive, we must write on the statute book at the earliest possible moment a protective tariff law, and if there is unnecessary delay in the Senate after full discussion, I am in favor of amending the rules of the Senate so as to make it possible for the majority to function and do business. Before many weeks a protective tariff law based on the principles of Blaine and McKinley will be on the Federal statute books.

Republicans have checked extravagance, established the Budget system, reduced taxes, lopped off appropriations, maintained American ideals. On this record of pledges the administration of President Harding looks to the people of Maine for a vote of confidence and support.

Enactment of the cooperative marketing law, the emergency tariff, the act for regulation of the packing industry, the act to prevent grain gambling, the reorganization of the Veterans' Bureau, the passage of the immigration act, the enactment of the maternity law, the extension of rural credit, the enactment of the tax law reducing tax burdens by hundreds of millions, the cutting of appropriations to the bone—all these indicate cordial Republican congressional cooperation with the Executive. The signs look better. Even the promise of a Republican tariff law stimulates industry and starts the factories.

With the early enactment of the tariff and prompt funding of the foreign debt already provided for by law, industrial conditions will continue to improve, and under Republican policies we shall have peace and prosperity at home as we have honor and prestige abroad.

DISMISSAL OF EX-SERVICE MEN FROM THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Senate Resolution 271, submitted by Mr. CARAWAY April 10, 1922, requesting the President to inform Congress as to alleged demotion, dropping, and discharge of honorably discharged sailors and soldiers from the service since March 1, 1921.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate for action, having come over from a previous day.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then I move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has just stated that the resolution is before the Senate for action. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, to refer the resolution to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. MOSES. I withhold the suggestion of the absence of a quorum in order that the resolution may be read, as requested by the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas by act of Congress it is provided that in the event of reductions being made in the force of any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department has been rated as good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary; and

Whereas many honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public good, to inform Congress:

(a) How many honorably discharged sailors and soldiers have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service since the 1st day of March, 1921; and

(b) By what, if any, charges or lack of efficiency justifying said dismissal or demotion; and

(c) Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. Now I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harreld	McNary	Simmons
Ball	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Bursum	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson	Newberry	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Wadsworth
Dial	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
du Pont	Keyes	Phipps	Warren
Edge	King	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	La Follette	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	Lenroot	Rawson	Williams
Fletcher	Lodge	Reed	Willis
Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard
Hale	McKinley	Shortridge

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to state that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in all probability, in the confusion, when the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] made his motion to refer the pending resolution to the committee, he had not heard the resolution read. I have just examined the resolution, and I can not see why it should be referred to a committee. The resolution merely states some facts and asks for certain information. It reads:

Whereas by act of Congress it is provided that in the event of reductions being made in the force of any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department has been rated as good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary—

After the statement of that fact, which no Senator would deny, then the resolution merely requests the President—

if not incompatible with the public good, to inform Congress:

(a) How many honorably discharged sailors and soldiers have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service since the 1st day of March, 1921; and

(b) By what, if any, charges or lack of efficiency justifying said dismissal or demotion; and

(c) Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

If there have been any honorably discharged soldiers or sailors discharged or demoted from the service the Senate is entitled to know that, and having the resolution referred to the committee can do no good. If the Senate desires this information the resolution ought to be passed now and should not be referred to the committee, because the committee can not, I imagine, alter the proposition at all. The resolution merely seeks some information to which the Senate is entitled. I presume the resolution is for the purpose of laying the foundation for some legislation affecting the discharge of soldiers and sailors after the facts for which it calls shall have been ascertained.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the resolution does assume facts, and it is for that very reason that it should be referred to the committee. The Senator from Mississippi did not read the second paragraph of the preamble.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well, I will read it. It is as follows:

Whereas many honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service.

That is a statement of fact. If honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been dropped, the Senate is entitled to know it, and we can not obtain the information except through the passage of a resolution calling upon the President to give the information to us.

Mr. STERLING. The second paragraph, as I think the Senator from Mississippi will admit, is a pure assumption of fact, namely, that "many honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records are good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service."

That is a matter to be proven, I suppose. It is the assertion of a fact.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator want the resolution to go to a committee, so that he can take testimony to ascertain that fact?

Mr. STERLING. So that we can examine into the question of fact which is set forth in the resolution. I do not think the Senate is prepared now upon this mere assumption to consider this resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is willing to eliminate the second paragraph of the preamble, then that would eliminate the difficulty and we could pass it. Would the Senator then be willing to have the resolution adopted?

Mr. STERLING. I think, irrespective of the second paragraph, the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Civil Service. It relates to the civil service and makes an inquiry in regard to it and into the discharge of certain persons from it. I think by all means the resolution should go to that committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator agree, then, that an instruction shall go with it to report the resolution back within 10 days?

Mr. STERLING. I should be willing to agree to an instruction of that kind if I thought it were possible to make the report within that time; but the Committee on Civil Service now has a number of matters to consider; it has already two resolutions offered by the Senator from Arkansas and a resolution offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I will assure the Senator that the resolution will receive consideration at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. HARRISON. What the Senator says is a confession, however, that the committee has not the time to attend to it.

Mr. STERLING. No; it is not a confession that we have not the time, but it is a statement that we want a reasonable time to give to it, along with a good deal of other work which has been put upon us.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from South Dakota by providing that in the reference of the resolution to the committee an instruction shall accompany it that the committee shall report the resolution back to the Senate within 10 calendar days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that the objection raised by the Senator from South Dakota could be easily cured by striking out the second paragraph of the preamble, which reads:

> Whereas many honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service—

And then modifying the resolution so that it would read:

> Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public good, to inform Congress whether honorably discharged soldiers and sailors have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service since the 1st day of March, 1921.

Mr. CARAWAY. That ought to be the 4th of March.

Mr. REED. Very well. If the suggestion appeals to the Senator, then we are passing on no fact.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will accept that.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will offer it in that form——

Mr. CARAWAY. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I think the only person who could amend the resolution is the Senator who offered it. It is in this parliamentary situation: If the Senator will accept it with the second paragraph of the preamble out, modify it, and then make the resolution read:

> Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested * * * to inform Congress whether honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service—

And how many, giving the names—if it can be offered in that way, there will be no occasion to refer it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri, I desire to offer the resolution in this amended form, striking out the second "whereas" in the preamble, and then making it read:

> Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform Congress whether honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, or discharged from the civil service—

And the remainder of it will read as it now reads. I also wish to change "the 1st day of March" to "the 4th day of March." That is a typographical error.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi withdraw his motion to amend?

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that the Senator from South Dakota is going to withdraw his motion to refer, with this modification.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; let us have the regular order. I do not know how the Senator from Mississippi got an understanding like that.

Mr. HARRISON. I just imagined that as it was right and as the Senator always wants to be right, he would withdraw his motion in view of this modification.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; Mr. President, I insist upon the motion to refer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to amend the motion to refer the resolution as perfected by its proponent, the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Can that motion be made now, and entertained, pending the motion to refer the resolution to the committee? That was the pending motion, as I understand.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me there is no occasion for any confusion. The Senator from Arkansas offered a resolution, which he has a perfect right himself to amend.

Mr. LENROOT. Not now, at this stage.

Mr. REED. He has asked to modify it and offers it in the modified form.

Mr. WILLIAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to amend the motion to refer.

Mr. LENROOT. May it be stated?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is such confusion that it is impossible to understand what is going on.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought the Chair said that the question was upon the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. A motion was first made to refer the resolution.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator from Mississippi moved to amend the motion to refer by adding instructions to report back within 10 days.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I asked to have stated.

Mr. REED. And, Mr. President, pending that the Senator offering the resolution asked to amend it or change it and submit it in the amended form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He had a right to perfect it before the motion was put.

Mr. REED. That has been done, and the motion is now pending.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand, of course, that it is admitted all around that the Senator from Arkansas has a right to perfect his original resolution, and that the question now pending before us is the motion to refer the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas as modified by him, and that the various amendments are to that.

Mr. President, I wish to make this suggestion to my colleague: The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has just said that the Committee on Civil Service could not report back in 10 days, because of various other matters of importance that are pending before that committee. It would be well, I think, not to have any question as to time; and I suggest to my colleague that he give them 20 days within which to report, or, if necessary, even 30 days, but any time that the Senator from South Dakota says is absolutely necessary in order to enable the Committee on Civil Service to perform their other duties and to perform this one, if the resolution shall be referred to them. It would be better to make it six months than to have the committee confess that they could not attend to anything except what they now have before them. None of us believe that this is an extremely overworked committee.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I can not agree to any amendment to the resolution. I make the point of order that there is a motion pending, and that is the motion to refer, and that the motion to amend is not now in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to amend is a motion to add instructions to the reference.

Mr. LENROOT. That is proper. That is all right.

Mr. STERLING. I shall not object to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on the point of order, I do not think there is a Member of this body who will contend that when a motion is offered to refer anything to a committee, it can be out of order to refer it with instructions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nobody objects to that. That is admitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought so, and especially with instructions with regard to the time to be taken by the committee. That principle is so well recognized that it is always in order in this body and in the other body to offer a resolution to have a committee "report forthwith," and it is a motion which takes precedence of nearly all other parliamentary motions of any description.

Mr. President, personally speaking, I have no objection to this matter going to a committee, provided it is understood that it does not go there for the purpose of being buried; but if the position of the Senator from South Dakota is to be taken by this body, the country will understand—at least, I as a part of the country will understand—that his object is to have it buried. Unless he consents to some time within which that committee will report back, I charge that that is his object.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi may put that interpretation upon the matter if he chooses to do so. My declining to accept an amendment to the effect that the committee shall report in 10 days, 20 days, or any other limited time, does not mean that the committee will not give this matter consideration, or that the committee intends to bury it; but there is no occasion for the instruction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator objects to an instruction that the committee shall report back in 10 days, or 20 days, or 30 days, and he said any time, from which I suppose that he would object to an instruction to report back within five years. I say that not only I but every other man of common sense understands that if that means anything, it means that the resolution shall be referred to the committee for the express purpose of being buried.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi must not judge the common sense of other men by his own ideas or opinions or his own judgment as to what common sense is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I were appealing to anybody, from King Solomon—who is said to have had exceeding wisdom—down to my darky Amos, who drives my wagon on the plantation, and left this particular controversy to either one of them, either one of them would decide that I was right and that the Senator from South Dakota was being guilty of a mere camouflage. There can be no question about that.

Mr. President, whether this resolution ought to pass or not is another matter; but if it is to pass, then it ought to pass, and there ought to be no pretense of its passage while there is injected into its belly a denial of any result. That is what the Senator from South Dakota is trying to bring about.

There is not the slightest pretense upon the part of any man with common sense, with knowledge to ascertain what the natural consequence of an action is, the action itself being once predicated, but that his object is to put this resolution to sleep. If that is not the Senator's object, purposely entertained by him in his own mind, it is at least the natural consequence of what he is proposing to have us do; and every man of ordinary intelligence is, even in the law books—not otherwise full of common sense—presupposed to be affected with the purpose of the natural consequence of his own acts. Therefore I charge—and I think everybody will admit that the charge is well taken—that unless the Senator consents to some time—and I care not about the time—within which this resolution shall be reported back from the committee, then the natural consequence of his position is that it shall never be reported back at all; and he, being a sane man, outside of the asylum, is affected with the effect accompanying the natural consequence of his position.

In its modified form the resolution reads:

> Whereas by act of Congress it is provided that in the event of reductions being made in the force of any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department has been rated as good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary: Now therefore be it
>
> Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform Congress:
>
> (a) How many honorably discharged sailors and soldiers whose records have been good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service.

Let us stop and think for a moment. There is a law upon the statute books covering this situation. It had to be signed by the President of the United States in order to become a law. It is in its nature as much executive as legislative. The executive and the legislative branches of the Government were both parties to the enactment of the law. Is it to be said that one of the two branches to the enactment has no right to inquire of the other as to whether it has acted in good faith or not, whether it has carried out the law; and if, under the modification, the assertion is withdrawn that there have been soldiers and sailors discharged contrary to law, and for it is substituted an inquiry as to whether there have been or not; and if so, how many, how can the executive branch of the Government object to this inquiry upon the part of the legislative branch of the Government, both of whom were parties to the enactment of the law; all the more, when you insert in it the words "if not incompatible with the public interest"? By the way, there is no greater camouflage than those words, because it is always left to the Executive to determine, in his own discretion, without inquiry aliunde and without question, whether the thing is or is not "incompatible with the public interest."

Now follows this:

> By what, if any, charges or lack of efficiency justifying said dismissal or demotion; and
>
> Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

How does the law read? It reads that they shall not be dropped or reduced in rank or salary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator cite the provision of the statute from which he is reading?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator asks whether I can give a reference to the code, the page, and the date of the approval of the act, I answer that I can not. My memory does not carry the act of Congress so specifically as that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator point in any way to the provision of law referred to in the preamble?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not, if the Senator means the page, or refers to the date.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator give the date of the act of Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not a man who goes around with a lot of dates, and things like that, in his head, but I suppose every Senator will admit that there is such a law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator certain that there is such a provision of law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. It provides that in the event of discharge or reductions in the public service, in so far as they affect honorably discharged soldiers or sailors, they shall not be made or there shall be a reason given. Does the Senator deny that that is the law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have been endeavoring to find that provision of the statute, and thus far I have been unable to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I confess frankly that I can not at this moment give the Senator the date of the approval of this statute, but I am informed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is very much more of a detail man and very much more of a detail lawyer than I am, that in a few minutes he will have the statute here, and then I will read it. Nobody denies—not even the Senator from New York—that there is a statute to the effect which I have stated, and the resolution is based upon the fact that the law exists forbidding this sort of discrimination against honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, and that they have a right to know the cause which has been alleged for their demotion or for their discharge, if they are demoted or if they are discharged.

All the resolution asks is, first, whether any honorably discharged soldiers or sailors have been demoted or discharged, and, if so, their names and the dates of their demotion or discharge; secondly, what charges of inefficiency or of any other character were made against them in order to justify their demotion or discharge. The word "demotion" does not mean merely not being promoted. It means taking a man out of a higher rank at a higher salary and reducing him to a lower rank with a lower salary. That should never be done by the Government or even by private enterprise, unless there is some reason for it.

I read now from the United States Statutes at Large, Sixty-second Congress, volume 37, brought me, as I anticipated. By the way, Mr. President, where is the Senator from New York? Echo answers, Where? In response to the inquiry of the Senator from New York, I read from section 4, page 413. After reciting certain powers vested in the Civil Service Commission, there is this proviso:

> Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary.

Mr. President, I made one mistake of memory about the statute. I thought it said without the cause being communicated to Congress. But this statute is an absolute prohibition. The law goes further than I thought it did.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator give the volume?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. Let me finish the reading of the law:

Any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office—

Of course, that does not apply to the President, because Congress can not remove him except by impeachment. It does not apply to the Secretary of the Treasury, but it does apply to the subordinate chiefs of bureaus—

Any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office, and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

Mr. President, I hope the RECORD will disclose the fact that after the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] had asked me a question about where I could find the statute, and after I had frankly confessed that I did not carry the dates of the enactments of Congress in my mind, I subsequently did find the statute and read it, and found it stronger in favor of the contention I was making than I myself thought it was, and that he in the meanwhile had disappeared from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question first comes on the motion to amend offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the motion to refer.

Mr. HEFLIN. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have not yet been ordered. The yeas and nays were requested on the main question.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion to amend the motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. If I may be permitted, I would like to modify my motion to refer with instructions by making it 20 days instead of 10 days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question then is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, that the committee be instructed to report within 20 days.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I do not want to take a minute of the time of the Senate, but I ask unanimous consent to have two letters printed in the RECORD at this point in the proceedings, in the ordinary type of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, as follows:

U. S. INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD,
Washington, March 11, 1922.

To whom it may concern:

It is a pleasure to recommend Mr. Luther B. Turnley to the favorable consideration of anyone desiring the services of a capable clerk.

Mr. Turnley's assignment while in the employ of this board included the supervision and operation of our mimeographing section. Mr. Turnley is not only an expert operator of the mimeograph but is capable of handling mimeoscopic work, such as illustrations, charts, special tables, and tracing from free-hand and mechanical drawings.

Mr. Turnley is also acquainted with the details of filing mimeograph work and has had a lot to do with the details of the distribution scheme, mailing lists, covering letters for pamphlets, and general work of information service of this board.

Mr. Turnley's work here was very satisfactory, and the termination of his services was due to causes beyond his control and ours.

If more specific information regarding Mr. Turnley is desired, telephone Main 6276.

SIDNEY MORGAN,
Supervisor Military District of Washington.

—

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12, 1922.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing to state facts in my case. I am an ex-service man; I entered the service August, 1918, giving up a good position, went over, and was returned to the United States for discharge May 28, 1919. Having been discharged, I was again given a position with the Shipping Board in the cable department, where I was employed from August, 1919, to February, 1920. The force was reduced and I was one to go.

I then took the first-grade civil-service examination and passed, and waited three months before being placed, which was with the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board. I was there from June, 1920, to June, 1921, when the force was reduced and I was again out. I notified the Civil Service Commission May 15, 1921, that I would be out and to place me on the reemployment register, and was told that they could do nothing until I was out, which was June 30, 1921.

Since then I have been going to the Civil Service Commission constantly and have been treated with no consideration, being told each time that there was nothing for me. I then tried myself in the different departments and secured two positions, one with the Treasury Department and the other with the Internal Revenue Bureau, and applied to the Civil Service Commission to be certified, and was told I could not be certified, as I had not worked in any one department three years, which I would have to do in order to be transferred from one department to the other. If I was working and wanted to be transferred from one department to another, that might be the case; but I don't see why that rule should apply to me not working at all, and have not worked a day since June 30, 1921, where I was working with the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, and was laid off because of reduction of force.

I have tried to seek outside employment and have been asked if I was an ex-service man and why the Government did not provide work for me. I am married, and my wife has had to work since I could not get work. She is not in the Government.

Trusting you may find some way to help me in the near future, I beg to remain,

Yours sincerely,

LUTHER B. TURNLEY,
4889 Conduit Road, Washington, D. C.

P. S. Inclosed will find letter of recommendation of my last employment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I desire to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] on official business. He is paired on this vote with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE].

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Ashurst	Harris	Norris	Trammell
Broussard	Harrison	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Heflin	Reed	Watson, Ga.
Culberson	Hitchcock	Sheppard	Williams
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Simmons
Fletcher	Kendrick	Stanley
Gerry	La Follette	Swanson

NAYS—40.

Ball	Gooding	Moses	Smoot
Bursum	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Harreld	New	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Newberry	Sutherland
Cummins	Keyes	Nicholson	Townsend
Curtis	Lenroot	Oddie	Wadsworth
du Pont	Lodge	Phipps	Warren
Edge	McCormick	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	McKinley	Rawson	Weller
Fernald	McNary	Shortridge	Willis

NOT VOTING—31.

Borah	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Ransdell
Brandegee	Glass	Myers	Robinson
Cameron	Johnson	Norbeck	Shields
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smith
Crow	King	Owen	Stanfield
Dillingham	Ladd	Page	Underwood
Elkins	McCumber	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
France	McKellar	Pittman

So Mr. HARRISON'S motion to amend was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think that the purpose of the reference is now absolutely plain. Twenty days' time was to be allowed by the amendment which has just been voted down by an almost strictly party vote. Twenty days' time to do what? To consider a resolution merely asking the President for information.

The reference of such a resolution to a committee at all is wholly unnecessary. The committee have no facts to ascertain. The sole thing the committee can do with the resolution, as the resolution is couched since it was modified, is to report to the Senate whether or not the Senate ought to ask the President to give the reasons for the discharge of any soldiers or sailors who may have been discharged. That is not a question for a committee. It is a question for the Senate to pass on in the first instance, and the question could be passed on by a yea-and-nay vote on the mere adoption or rejection of the resolution.

It follows, therefore, inevitably that there is but one purpose for the reference, and that is to gain time and if possible ultimately smother the resolution. What, I pray, are the committee to do? Are the committee to advise the Senate whether or not, in the judgment of the committee, the President ought to be asked to furnish the Senate information with reference to the discharge from civil-service positions of former soldiers of the Army and sailors of the Navy? How much would it help the Senate to have the advice of the committee on that matter?

The proceeding that is now being had is on a par with the performances we have witnessed here constantly in the last few days. It seems to be a part of a concerted action to keep the Senate and the country from knowing just what is being done in the executive departments of the Government. A veil of secrecy is to be thrown around the acts of the President and those who serve under him. The other day some one made the statement on the floor of the Senate that the President was not amenable to any law; that he is above the law, I presume. There was once a King of Poland who undertook to write an address in Latin and, being as ignorant of Latin as some people are of the ethics and decencies of public life, he made many blunders. A clerk who did know Latin said to him, "This particular sentence is ungrammatical." The King replied that the monarch is above grammar. Whereupon he was thereafter known in history as supergrammatical.

The doctrine now seems to be asserted that the President of the United States is above the law of the land. We find Senators sitting in their seats undertaking to defeat or smother a resolution asking merely for the names and reasons for the discharge from the public service of honorably discharged sailors and soldiers who are guaranteed their positions by the law unless it is necessary to reduce a force and their discharge is made inevitable by virtue of those facts.

It may seem to Senators that it is necessary to pursue this course, but there is only one reason why that could constitute such a necessity and that is that there must be something to conceal. There must have been some illegal or oppressive acts done, otherwise the resolution would be passed without the form of debate or a shadow of opposition. What is it that the executive department has to conceal? The only question is, Have honorably discharged soldiers and sailors been dismissed from the public service without adequate or proper cause? Why can not that question be answered and why should any man hesitate in answering it?

If former soldiers and sailors have been so discharged, that is a complete answer and the administration would hasten to make it and the friends of the administration would court honorable publicity of that kind of an honorable course of conduct. If former soldiers and sailors have been discharged with good cause, the administration would be equally willing to state the number discharged and the reasons for their discharge. It is only when they have been wrongfully discharged that hesitancy will be manifested. It is only when there is something to conceal that it is necessary for the cohorts of an administration to rally and defeat investigation or even inquiry. You undertake to refuse to give to the Senate of the United States and to the country the facts with reference to the treatment you are according to soldiers who served their country in the great World War; you undertake to keep from the country and from the Senate knowledge of the fact that you have been violating the law of the land and trampling upon that law; you sit like so many indifferent graven images while these soldiers are being deprived of their rights under the law; and yet you were the loudest in singing their praises when they were marching out to defend the country, and you were the most insistent that their rights should be always guarded.

Of course, every lawyer who has ever defended a criminal in court, if his client were guilty, has endeavored to secure a continuance. That is the first and cardinal doctrine of defense when your client does not dare front the bar of justice. I am not saying that the President is a criminal, of course, but if he has or those under him have lived according to the statute now under consideration, then they are receiving a very poor service from their friends and defenders when the President and his subordinates are placed in a position such as is here manifested this morning, to wit, that there is something to conceal and that it is necessary to bury this resolution for an indefinite period of time, if not forever.

There was no hesitancy on the part of these soldiers to go to the rescue of their country. There ought to be no hesitancy on the part of the administration in granting them their rights under the law, and if the administration has granted them their rights under the law there will be no hesitancy on the part of the administration to come forward with the evidence to show that the course of the administration is above criticism.

However, as I stated a moment ago, this seems to be a part of a general plan of smothering things, keeping them away from the public. Several times Congress has been refused by the President information to which, in my judgment, we were entitled. Some day we are going to have a President who will be of the opinion that the business of the country is public business and is entitled to be known and understood by the public. You may, because of the present majority, be able to pursue these tactics of suppression of facts, but I venture the assertion that it will not be very long pursued, and that if the soldiers and sailors who served their country are being wrongfully discharged, you can not suppress that fact by a reference of this resolution to a committee; and any committee that requires more than 20 days to report this resolution must have some obstacles confronting it which do not appear upon the face of the resolution.

I repeat, Mr. President, there should be no reference whatever of the resolution. The Senate ought to decide whether or not it desires this information. Then, if the President declines to give it to us, we shall have to take such course as may be open. I do not hesitate to say to the President of the United States, whom I personally respect, and to every executive officer of this Government, that, in the last analysis, the Congress of the United States is the master of this and every other similar situation. A majority of Congress may decline to ask for information and then the public will have to inquire as to their motives.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Civil Service.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Repeating my previous announcement as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from North Dakota (Mr. McCUMBER) has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has not voted.

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with that Senator. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and reluctantly I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I understand he has not voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida has not voted.

Mr. BALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Florida to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Ball	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Bursum	Harreld	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Capper	Kellogg	Newberry	Townsend
Curtis	Keyes	Nicholson	Wadsworth
du Pont	Lenroot	Oddie	Warren
Edge	Lodge	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	McCormick	Rawson	Weller
Fernald	McKinley	Shortridge	Willis
Gooding	McNary	Smoot

NAYS—24.

Ashurst	Harrison	Myers	Stanley
Broussard	Heflin	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Hitchcock	Pomerene	Trammell
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Kendrick	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Harris	La Follette	Simmons	Williams

NOT VOTING—33.

Borah	Fletcher	McLean	Robinson
Brandegee	France	Norbeck	Shields
Cameron	Frelinghuysen	Overman	Smith
Colt	Glass	Owen	Stanfield
Crow	Johnson	Page	Underwood
Culberson	King	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Ladd	Phipps
Dillingham	McCumber	Pittman
Elkins	McKellar	Ransdell

So Mr. CARAWAY's resolution was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. FERNALD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar for consideration House bill 10864, and, after the reading of the bill by the Secretary, I shall desire to make a few remarks in regard to it, which will be very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion, and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to taking this bill from the calendar and proceeding to its consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau by purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants, and by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospitals and out-patient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment and accessories, and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel; and also to provide proper and suitable recreational centers; and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein. Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President: Provided, however, That the director, with the approval of the President, may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized, by Executive order, to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof.

SEC. 2. That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or the extension, alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work, and to employ individuals and agencies not now connected with the Government, if in his opinion desirable, at such compensation as he may consider reasonable.

SEC. 3. That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraphs relating to additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. That not to exceed 3 per cent of this sum shall be available for the employment in the District of Columbia and in the field of necessary technical and clerical assistants at the customary rates of compensation, exclusively to aid in the preparation of the plans and specifications for the projects authorized herein and for the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses, field-office equipment, and supplies in connection therewith.

SEC. 4. That all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available for veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion suffering from neuropsychiatric and tubercular ailments and diseases.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, it is my desire to state very briefly the purpose of the bill and its provisions.

It is obvious that the purpose of the bill is to provide hospital facilities for those soldiers of the late war who need treatment in the hospitals, and facilities for carrying out the purpose of the bill. The provisions of the bill are somewhat different from those of any public buildings bill that has been before the Senate during my time as a Senator. It provides that all of the buildings and everything connected with the bill shall be cared for by one man, instead of by the Treasury Department, as heretofore. The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been carrying on hearings on this matter for many weeks; and after a long-continued investigation of the matter they have brought out this bill, which has the approval of the Federal Board of Hospitalization, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and the President of the United States.

As I have stated, the provisions of this bill are somewhat different from those of other public buildings bills. It has been thought best, and in fact I have always held to the opinion that it was much better to leave these matters in the hands of one man than in the hands of a committee which meets only occasionally. I do not know personally the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. I would not know him, I suppose, if I saw him come into this Chamber; but from all the sources of information that the House committee were able to bring before them, and from the indorsement of the President and all those connected with the bill, this seems to be about the only way to handle the matter, as under the Sweet bill the director of the bureau has authority to carry out all the provisions for the care of the disabled soldiers.

There are to-day about 30,000 ex-service men who need hospital care. About 1½ per cent of all the men sent overseas ought now to be in hospitals. We have already provided Government hospitals for 21,000 men who are now in hospitals. We have also made provision, under a bill passed last year, for about 6,000 more. I think there are about 1,500 beds now ready for occupancy in those hospitals. There has been some delay, and I have no right to charge to anyone in particular the responsibility for the delay. I do believe that the matter would have been advanced very materially from its present status if it could have been left then in the hands of one man. Whenever a committee has a thing to do, it is very natural for each of its members to place the responsibility upon the other members of the committee, and to excuse himself from being as active as one man would be if he had entire charge; so, for that reason this provision was made in the bill, and, as I say, it has the sanction of the Federal Board of Hospitalization, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the President of the United States.

Only one hospital is entirely completed under the bill which was passed last year—that at Fort Logan H. Root, in Arkansas. It is estimated that before we hospitalize all of the soldiers and sailors of the late war the number will reach about 38,000, and the peak will be reached in 1926. It is hoped that when this bill passes we may begin immediately to make provision for the hospitalization of the rest of the men now outside, some of them in homes for disabled soldiers, some of them in hospitals which are perhaps little better than almshouses, some of them entirely outside of any institution; and, in fact, those outside of the 21,000 in the Government hospitals are cared for in private institutions.

I wish to read part of a statement made before the House committee by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to prove what I have already said in regard to the effect that the Secretary feels the passage of this bill would have on his department:

> The Secretary of the Treasury does feel, however, regardless of who may locate the new hospitals, where they may be built, or what the size, cost, or character of construction of such new hospitals may be, that it is in the interest of economy and efficiency that the preparation of plans and specifications and the actual superintending of the construction of the hospitals be done by the Supervising Architect, whose office is a part of the Treasury. The Supervising Architect has told you of the facilities of his office. I am not asking that you designate that he shall do this work, but am merely stating that I believe it is in the interest of efficiency and economy that those facilities be utilized.

So there is a provision in this bill that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau may call upon that department of the Government to furnish such facilities as he feels may be utilized for this work.

That is the opinion of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. I think there is no difference in the opinion of Senators on either side of this Chamber as to the desirability and the imperative need of these hospitals at this time. We are of one opinion, and I am sure it is a very pleasant duty for a Senator to present a bill that has the indorsement of every Senator on the floor.

I have taken up this matter in my committee, which acted immediately. It was necessary to have but one meeting of the committee. The committee were of one mind. All of the Senators on this side of the Chamber and all on the other side agreed that speedy action should be taken; and for this reason I shall consume but very little time in presenting the matter to the Senate.

If it were not for what I believe is an erroneous and false impression that has gone about the country, I would feel quite content to rest my case here. I feel sure of what the vote will be; but some publications in different sections of the country have attempted to give the impression that the Government has not done as much for the soldiers of this war as has been done for soldiers of other wars. I want to correct that impression, because, of the six great wars this Government has fought, there has never been one the soldiers of which have had the very generous treatment accorded the veterans of the war we have just passed through.

Senators may be surprised to know the difference in the treatment of the soldiers by the different Governments. Outside of Australia and New Zealand, no Government that was in any way connected with the late war has paid anything like what the United States has paid her soldiers. Canada alone paid her soldiers $33 per month. The United States paid her soldiers $33 per month. Great Britain paid her soldiers but $11.40 per month. Germany paid her soldiers $3 per month. France, Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Japan paid their soldiers less than $2 per month. So Senators may see that in comparison with what other Governments have paid, the United States has been exceedingly generous.

No soldier of the Revolutionary War received a pension, for over 40 years after the close of the war, of more than $5 per month, and that only in case of disability to such an extent as to prevent his performing manual labor.

No soldier who served in the war for independence was allowed a pension for any reason except for injuries or disability incurred in the service, for 42 years.

No soldier of the War of 1812 was pensioned for any cause, except for disability incurred in service, until 60 years after the war.

No widow of the War of 1812 received a pension until the act of 1816, and then only $4 per month.

No soldier of the Mexican War received a pension, except such as were wounded or disabled in the service, until 40 years after the close of the war.

Those totally disabled as the result of service received $8 per month.

No soldier of the Civil War who was not injured or disabled by his military service received any pension from the Government until the act of 1890, 25 years after the close of the war.

Those totally disabled received only $8 per month in case of privates, and only $30 per month in case of lieutenant colonels and those of higher rank.

No widow of a Civil War soldier was granted a pension until 25 years after the close of the war, and then only upon proof of the soldier's death being of service origin.

At the close of this fiscal year we will have expended during this 12-month period for the benefit of the soldiers $438,000,000, twice as much as was ever expended before in aid of the soldiers of any war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not mean that that is all that has been expended by the Government since the armistice?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I expect to take that up right away.

Mr. KING. It will be over that amount for one year.

Mr. FERNALD. That is for one year. Four hundred and thirty-eight million dollars is the amount for this year.

Mr. KING. Nineteen hundred and twenty-two or nineteen hundred and twenty-three?

Mr. FERNALD. Nineteen hundred and twenty-two.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will find that it will be considerably more than that.

Mr. CALDER. That is for the year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. FERNALD. Now I will take up the other years.

Mr. KING. There will be deficits. I think I can assure the Senator that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1922 will exceed $500,000,000 for the purposes indicated in the observations of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I suggest to the Senator from Utah that his figures may be correct about the expenditures, but there are assets in the way of premiums received from the soldiers on insurance, which reduce the sum to the figure named by the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will find that there are claims unadjusted which will amount to millions of dollars, which will swell the total, even admitting the assets to which the Senator refers, to the aggregate which I have indicated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is a common mistake to say that the soldiers have cost so much money, which has actually been expended, and to give no credit for the revenue which has been received. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] for a long time labored under that impression, and gave some figures which were very grossly exaggerated, because there has been a very large amount coming to the Treasury from the soldiers themselves in the way of insurance premiums.

Mr. FERNALD. Now I want to go on to show the difference in the treatment of soldiers of these different wars. I am certain these figures are absolutely correct.

From the beginning of the Revolutionary War until July 4, 1836—53 years after the close of the war—no widow of an enlisted soldier who served in the War for Independence was ever allowed a pension. But by the act of July 4, 1836, and several amendatory acts, widows of Revolutionary soldiers were allowed a pension at first of $4 and later $8 per month. They were never allowed more than that until the act of 1886—more than 100 years after the war.

Until the act of 1816 no widow of the War of 1812 received a pension. But by that act widows of soldiers who were killed in the service were allowed half pay, or $48 per year—$4 per month.

Widows of soldiers killed in the Mexican War received half pay of $48 per year for life, and it never was increased above that amount until 1887—40 years after the close of the war—and then increased to $8 per month.

In 1886 pensions of widows of Civil War veterans were increased to $12 per month. So that no widow of a Civil War veteran whose death resulted from injuries received or disease contracted in the service received as much as $12 per month until over 20 years after the close of the war. Their pensions remained at $12 until 1916, when they were increased to $20 per month. So that it was not until 25 years after the close of the war that the widows of Civil War veterans could receive a pension except upon proof that the soldier's death was of service origin.

Widows of veterans of the Spanish War have never been allowed a pension of more than $12 per month; and prior to the passage of the Sells Act they were never allowed that except in case where the soldier's death was due to injury received or disease contracted in the service.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, does not claim that there is any provision under existing law for granting pensions to widows of soldiers of the late war?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I am just going to show what we have done.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What we have done for the widows of the late war has been as the result of the insurance plan.

Mr. FERNALD. Absolutely.

Mr. CALDER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken about that. I think we do pension the widows of men who were killed in the service.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Who were not insured?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to have the Senator refer me to the law providing that.

Mr. CALDER. I am reasonably certain that is so. I shall look it up, due to the fact that the Senator questions it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course, they were practically all insured.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a table before me which shows that in case of death, if the soldier leaves a widow alone, the Government of the United States pays the widow $300 a year.

I want to say, in connection with insurance, that 148,000 claims have already been allowed; that there is still in force insurance to the amount of $3,500,000,000, and no Government ever made such provision before for the soldiers of any war. They are handling at the department 1,000 new claims every day, in addition to the 1,200,000 already on file, and employing 4,000 ex-service men in carrying out the work.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Those are compensation claims.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Not death claims.

Mr. FERNALD. In addition to the above, the Veterans' Bureau has allowed 305,000 compensation claims, and has paid out in compensation benefits $300,000,000. We are mailing out 650,000 checks every month, representing an expenditure of $43,000,000 monthly; giving vocational training, without cost, to 100,000 disabled ex-service men; providing hospital care for 30,000 ex-service men, at an annual expenditure of $60,000,000; expending $1,000,000 cash every day for ex-service men and their dependents.

So, Mr. President, since 1918 this Government has expended $1,410,000,000, and from now on, under the provisions of the laws we have already enacted, it will cost this Government $438,000,000, twice as much as was ever expended before for the soldiers of any war.

There are three groups of men we sent overseas. One group of 1,950,000 returned able-bodied, in good health, able to care for themselves, and take up their life work where they left it off. They are better physically, mentally, and morally than when they went overseas. There is a difference of opinion, possibly, as to the best attitude for the Government to take toward these men. One thing may be certain, that the Government of the United States will treat all men justly.

We had another class of men, those boys who never returned. Fifty thousand two hundred and eighty of these boys were killed in battle. There were 48,370 men who died from disease—pneumonia, the "flu," and tubercular trouble. There were 17,000 who died from other causes, or 115,000 men in all. Nothing more can be done for those good boys. They fought for the flag. They fought side by side. This was no sectional matter; this was no partisan matter. The boys of Alabama and the boys of Maine, the barber's son and the banker's son, fought side by side. They made the supreme sacrifice. They gave their all. They fought in battle. They slept under the same tents. But, Mr. President, they have exchanged their battle-ground camps for tents on the infinite shore. The books are closed with those boys. This Government has shown every courtesy and every honor possible to them. In 778 cemeteries on the other side the bodies of those brave boys remain.

There is still another group for which I am speaking now, the returned invalid and disabled soldier. I have never yet read in any publication or ever heard any man say that those boys should not be cared for, and the bill before us this afternoon is in the interest of the invalid and disabled soldier.

We have 30,000 of those boys to-day, and it is a pleasant duty to speak as an American on an American question. There is no difference of opinion, in my judgment, about this. The committee held hearings and heard everybody who wished to appear, and nobody ever suggested but that we should do all possible for these men.

So, Mr. President, when the vote is taken I want, first of all, a quorum called. I want a record vote. I want the shining, glowing, and encouraging message to go from Maine to California, from the northland lakes and rivers to the Gulf of Mexico, that it is to be the policy of this Government to care for and protect its defenders. It will be an encouraging word to the boys who fought overseas. Let it ever be remembered that the invalid and disabled soldier is to have the care and protection of his Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 2919) to extend for the period of two years the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended.

Mr. FERNALD. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BALL. I understand that temporarily laying it aside does not displace it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I am, of course, in entire sympathy with the hospitalization bill, but the rent bill is of rather pressing importance, because the present rent law expires within the next three or four weeks. I understand that the pending bill which has been presented by the Senator from Maine is not going to take very long, and I therefore make no objection to his request to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. FERNALD. My understanding with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] was that I was to present the matter very briefly, and I think it will take only a very few moments more to dispose of the hospitalization bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has agreed to continue the consideration of the bill, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the bill is of extreme importance. It has been read by the Assistant Secretary and a lucid explanation has been made by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. As he has said, it appropriates the sum of $17,000,000 for the further hospitalization of ex-soldiers.

The vice of previous legislation of this sort, the purpose of which was good and which attempted hospitalization, was that it divided the authority. We were unable to determine whether the Treasury Department or the Veterans' Bureau had authority, and, as is usual in cases where there is divided authority, there is more or less conflict and delay. In the pending bill full discretion and ample authority are vested in the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, subject only to the action of the President.

I am aware that criticism has been laid against the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, but until the director shall have had an opportunity to work without being enmeshed in red tape, I can not hold anyone to blame where he has not been fully charged with the responsibility, but in the pending measure the Veterans' Bureau is charged with the responsibility and ample funds are provided. We now have a right to expect adequate hospitalization of our ex-service men who are suffering from neuropsychiatry, tuberculosis, or who are suffering generally.

The legislation is so important that I shall withhold any further remarks upon the subject. It will be remembered I have spoken many times on this very subject, but I believe the best service I can render now would be to shorten my remarks so that the bill may pass. I ask permission to include in the RECORD a copy of an address I delivered in the Senate on the 22d day of December, 1921. I ask that it be printed in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. HENRY F. ASHURST, OF ARIZONA, IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1921.

The Senate had under consideration the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9458) for the relief of the distressed and starving people of Russia.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, what I am required to do this morning is apparently ungracious, as the Congress desires to adjourn for the holidays, but my task must be performed. I shall restrain the oratorical impetuosity and tumultuous emotion which I feel as I reflect upon the foul injustice that is being perpetrated upon many of our ex-service men suffering from tuberculosis. I now thank not only the conferees on the part of the Senate but also the conferees on the part of the House on the Russian relief bill. They accorded to me a privilege not usually extended to Members of either House. I made it known to the conferees that I desired to be heard on my two amendments, which the Senate adopted, to the Russian relief bill, and the chairman of the conference committee [Mr. SMOOT] was so kind as to come to me and advise me that they were in session. I was accorded, not only by the Senate conferees but also by the House conferees, a patient hearing, and I have reason to believe both of my amendments would have been agreed to had it not been for the reactionary and archaic rules of another branch of Congress which prevented the House conferees from agreeing to the amendments. I have, therefore, no quarrel with the conferees on this bill, but I quarrel with the rules of another body of the Congress.

I direct attention to the somnolence that has come upon the American Congress, a sleepiness which neither "poppy nor mandragora nor all the drowsy sirups of the world could produce." I am at eternal war with this Congress or any Congress that will be silent, inert, and asleep when it should be lit by the passion of justice. Meanwhile what are the facts?

On the 17th of last October I received the following telegram from the Governor of Arizona, a gentleman of good judgment and of accurate expression:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., October 17, 1921.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

Director Forbes, of Veterans' Bureau, has submitted report to President strongly urging immediate action to meet present emergency arising from needs of hundreds of disabled former service men who, with approach of winter, are pouring into Arizona, where facilities for their care are very inadequate. He recommends immediate completion of Whipple building program through letting of contracts, it being obvious that under system now in effect winter will be well over before any of the buildings now under construction will be ready for occupancy. Maj. Louis T. Grant, manager Veterans' Bureau, twelfth district, is now in Washington, and I therefore urge that Arizona congressional delegation take prompt action, conferring with Major Grant and Director Forbes and calling on the President, bringing strongly to his attention the desperate situation in which these men find themselves and pointing out necessity for immediate action along following lines: Speeding up of construction program at Whipple, establishment of vocational-training center at Prescott, acquirement of additional hospital facilities at Phoenix, and construction of cottages at Tucson to accommodate approximately 300 more patients. The need is very real, and I urgently bespeak your hearty cooperation.

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL,
Governor.

Immediately upon the receipt of that telegram I called upon Mr. C. R. Forbes, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and he said to me, "Senator, the governor has not overstated nor misstated the situation. We are trying to save the lives of the tubercular ex-service men who are pouring into the Southwest. We must have action, and we must have the nerve to sever the damnable red tape that is hindering efficient work."

Now, Mr. President, whether the common opinion of our countrymen to the effect that the Southwest with its balmy air and salubrious climate is a specific for tuberculosis is erroneous or not, nevertheless it is the common opinion not only of the laity but of many members of the medical profession that the Southwest is a specific for tuberculosis. I do not argue that question at this time. I leave the question to the physicians to answer; but I do assert, and no Senator would deny, that it is a common belief throughout our country that those persons suffering from tuberculosis who go to the Southwest find relief from the great white plague and that there the progress of their disease is arrested.

Therefore many ex-service men suffering from tuberculosis which they contracted while in the honorable service of their country drift into the Southwest, largely at their own expense, not by the dozens but by the scores. The local physicians there have measured up splendidly to their high and arduous profession; the charitable organizations, the State authorities, and the county authorities have done their full duty in attempting to care for these men, and yet with all the superb work that the people have done, that the State has done, and that the Public Health Service has done, there still remains much more to be done. I could litter these desks with letters from ex-soldiers in Arizona who have gone there in search of health and are now suffering from the lack of proper hospitalization.

On December 12, when the deficiency appropriation bill was before the Senate, I offered the following amendment thereto, and the same was agreed to by the Senate:

That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospitals and out-patient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment, and accessories, and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel, and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named therein. Such hospital plants and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraph relating to additional hospital facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000 to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

In support of that amendment I spoke, in part, as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the time has arrived in the progress of hospitalizing the ex-service men when no further explanations or excuses may be offered. The situation is one which calls for immediate action. There is in this pending bill a provision to appropriate $1,000,000 to enable the Government of the United States to take part in the International Exposition at Rio de Janeiro. Naturally the opulent Government of the United States, which courts and deserves the esteem of other powers and other peoples, can not be oblivious to the fact that we should in due time take our proper part in the International Exposition at Rio de Janeiro, which will require the expenditure of $1,000,000; but are we prepared to vote $1,000,000 to take part in the International Exposition at Brazil when in one town in the United States 950 tubercular soldiers are suffering from neglect? Are Senators ready on their conscience to say that they prefer that this $1,000,000 shall be spent for an international exposition rather than for the hospitalization of tubercular soldiers? * * * On armistice day we had services in honor of the unknown dead; and the private soldier was permitted to stand on the sidewalk and see the procession go by. Fifty thousand dollars were appropriated by Congress for the purpose of making arrangements for the exercises, and this sum was spent in giving admirals and generals and high foreign dignitaries seats; but the "gold-star" mother received scant attention; no gold-star mother was brought here to participate in those exercises. All the soft seats and all the carriages and the equipages were preempted by generals and admirals and high foreign dignitaries. Now, with ex-service men suffering from neglect on the streets of Phoenix, Ariz., we are going to "shell out" $1,000,000 to participate in an exposition in Brazil, but refuse to hospitalize those who stood in the iron storm of war and breathed poison gases in order that our civilization might be saved.

* * * * * * *

On the same bill to which my amendment was attached appropriating $1,000,000 for further hospitalization of ex-soldiers there was also attached by the Senate an amendment appropriating $100,000 to be expended by the Department of Labor in bringing the man to the job and the job to the man. I had the honor to be present at a meeting of the unemployment conference called by President Harding. I there met workingmen whose speeches showed that they possessed fully as firm a grasp upon fundamentals in government as any Senator here.

The unemployment conference recommended that $400,000 be spent by the Department of Labor in finding employment for those who desire to work; not to be spent in bounties, gifts, and largesses out of the Treasury, but to assist honest, upstanding workingmen to find a chance and an opportunity to earn their daily bread.

The time has come in Congress and out to stop this soft talk; this ballyho and this twiddling of melting notes on the harp of sociability and acquiescence; the time has come to act. When this $400,000 item for finding employment for idle men reached General Dawes his knife and scalpel carved the amount to the bone, but even General Dawes found that $200,000 was absolutely necessary, so he recommended that sum.

The emotionless, self-contained, and detached Senate felt, however, that General Dawes had been extravagant, so the Senate adopted an amendment appropriating only $100,000, or one-half the amount General Dawes said was necessary.

When this deficiency bill reached the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses my amendment appropriating $1,000,000 for further hospitalization of ex-service men and the amendment providing $100,000 to relieve unemployment lasted about as long as would a waxen taper in a blazing temple and both were rejected by the conferees.

On December 14, when the conference report on the deficiency bill was considered by the Senate, I spoke in part as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. I shall not take time now to go over the ground I traversed on last Monday. The Senate will remember that I presented a status of affairs which I believe convinced every Senator of the necessity for immediate action regarding the hospitalization of tubercular soldiers. The Senate adopted my amendment which appropriated $1,000,000 to be spent by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, or in such other manner as the executive branch might see fit, for the hospitalization of tubercular soldiers who were gathering in large numbers throughout the Southwest, attracted there, as I said, by the widespread opinion, shared not only in the West but throughout all portions of our country, that in the Southwest a specific, the healing air, could be found for their great plague, tuberculosis.

The Senate was convinced that a real necessity existed.

I did not happen to have in my pocket or amongst my papers on Monday, when I made my speech on this subject, a telegram which I shall now read. This is the telegram from Doctor Sweek, of Arizona, of the Public Health Service:

"Exact figures impossible. Lowest estimates 950 active cases vicinity of Phoenix. Four hundred should be hospitalized but not willing to enter present contract hospital. Number of cases in Arizona that would enter properly conducted hospital, lowest estimate, 1,500. Present number hospitalized here, 104. Any size institution up to 1,500 would be full nine months of year. Hospital for 400 could be kept full year round for 25 years. Attending specialists available. Expensive resident staff of full-time men unnecessary. Would like opportunity to make this model hospital. Great need for hospital here, as men come from all States. Proper care here would prevent widespread criticism. As disease advances the number here increases as Southwest is used as last resort."

* * * * * * *

Now, Mr. President, I submit that in time of war it is right for the superior officer to say where a soldier shall go, whether it costs the soldier's life or not; but after he has gone faithfully through the war, after he has had practically every segment of his lungs burned and torn away by the enemy's gas, it is not humane, it is not just to him to say, "You shall go where we say or you shall die." A humanitarian government, a just government will say to him, "If you share the common belief that your plague will be lifted and your disease arrested in some particular climate and you have gone there in large numbers, in good faith, at your own expense, in that belief, then a rich and opulent government will set up a hospital there for you."

I repeat, the Senate conferees are entitled to the thanks of the Senate for the manly way in which they struggled to save this amendment appropriating the $1,000,000, and if a thousand ex-soldiers die from neglect, abandoned by the most powerful and opulent Government, the blame will not rest upon the Senate, but will rest upon those who are so bound by red tape that they are no longer free men.

* * * * * * *

In company with Governor Campbell, of Arizona, Representative HAYDEN, and Mr. D. B. Heard, editor of the Arizona Republican, I called upon the President and read to him the telegram from Doctor Sweek.

The President manifested every attention and proved himself to be what he is believed to be, a man of heart and brain, willing to give civil consideration to any important matter that a citizen sees fit to present. I do not feel at liberty to quote him.

Many times when ex-service men in Phoenix, Tucson, or Prescott suffering from tuberculosis are offered transportation and offered hospitalization elsewhere, they will not go away because they believe the progress of their disease will be arrested in those genial climes, and shall the Government be so rigid and so hard-hearted as to say to the soldier, "You shall be hospitalized where we want you hospitalized or you may go to your grave"? That is the issue before us.

German bullets and German gas cost the lives of scores of thousands of Americans during the World War, but if American red tape now in existence is to continue it will cost the lives of thousands more.

As a sample of the methods pursued by the Government, I will read from a letter of Doctor Redewill, of Phoenix:

PHOENIX, December 13.

There are hundreds of boys in Phoenix that need hospital care and a large number of them want to come to Desert Inn, but on account of the opposition to our place we are unable to take care of any of those men. On the other hand, two years ago we had some 20 soldiers paying their own way here at Desert Inn and were perfectly contented, but when the Public Health Service told them that they could not stay here if they wanted to receive compensation, but that if they went to the Phoenix Sanitarium it would not cost them anything for their board and they would also receive their compensation they all left here, thus not only taking away our contract but also a certain amount of income from our place by taking these soldiers away from us when they were contented to pay their own way rather than receive free board at the Phoenix Sanitarium.

For a reasonable sum of money the Public Health Service could acquire the Deaconess Hospital at Phoenix and could, at comparatively small expense, soon complete the same and thus care for scores of men now requiring treatment, but the Treasury Department has closed its ears and eyes to all arguments in favor of purchasing and completing this hospital.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will agree with me that one of the curses that has directly affected some of our soldier boys throughout the United States has been the treatment they have received through some of the private hospitals.

Mr. ASHURST. Why, then, do some of the soldiers want to go to private hospitals?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know.

Mr. ASHURST. If they are so terribly abused, why do they want to go there?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that they all are, and this may not be one of those places. I do not say that. I do not know anything about it; but I do know that in some of the private hospitals of this country our soldiers have been outrageously treated.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, I am not speaking of any private hospitals except those in the Southwest.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows more about this case than I do, because this may be a perfectly first-class hospital, and perhaps even better than the one the Public Health Service has designated; but power had to be given to the Public Health Service, or, now, the Veterans' Bureau, to select the places where the boys should be sent so that they could control them, so that they could have an investigation made, and so that if complaints were made they could go at once and see that they were rectified, if any wrong was done the soldier.

The Senator is not any more anxious to see those boys taken care of than I am. I have tried to further the legislation in their behalf in this body right along; and the Senator knows that I never would submit to any kind of legislation that would in any way be a detriment to the soldier boys.

Mr. ASHURST. I know that to be true. Men differ in views and temperaments; some ex-service men prefer the large United States Public Health Service hospitals, whilst some desire treatment in the smaller or private hospitals and some prefer the so-called home treatment.

I desire to allow the ex-service man to make his own choice in cases where at all practicable.

Mr. President, the Senate has not been entirely inactive in this matter. A resolution was introduced (S. Res. 59) by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] demanding an investigation. The committee was appointed, and on August 24 it made a partial report signed by Senators SUTHERLAND, CALDER, WELLER, WALSH of Massachusetts, and POMERENE. Twelve recommendations were made. The first recommendation was:

(1) That the Director of Veterans' Bureau be authorized to provide additional hospitals according to the recommendations of the board of consultants at a cost of $16,400,000, and that an appropriation of that amount be made available without delay.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I will say, in reference to the statement the Senator has just made, that that recommendation was made by the special committee of the Senate after months of inquiry and investigation. We made that as our first recommendation, and the most important one.

Mr. ASHURST. So I am reenforced by the statement of the industrious junior Senator from New York, who says that after months of patient investigation his committee unanimously reached the conclusion that $16,400,000 should be placed in the hands of Director Forbes.

At this juncture I must state that when my amendment appropriating $1,000,000 was agreed to by the Senate on the 12th instant it was said—and I am not going to give names—"Senator, you ought not to lodge that authority in Colonel Forbes. You should have lodged the authority with the Treasury Department." When my second amendment, adopted by the Senate on the 20th instant, lodged the authority with the Treasury Department, it was said to me, "You should have lodged the authority with Colonel Forbes."

I say in reply, "You can not ping-pong me. You may play ping-pong in the parlors of the dilettante, but not with me."

So this report of the Senate investigating committee was submitted to the Senate. Their first recommendation was that $16,400,000 be expended for further hospitalization.

Now, I have been severe upon that committee. I said, publicly and privately, that I thought they were guilty of a flagrant disregard of their duties when they omitted to go to Arizona and investigate conditions there, but I am beginning to believe that they knew to whom they were reporting. Of what avail would it be to go to Arizona and investigate, when the recommendations they have made as to conditions here are ignored? Their recommendations have been disregarded and forgotten, so I probably owe that committee—composed of Senators SUTHERLAND, CALDER, WELLER, POMERENE, and WALSH—an apology for the criticisms I directed against them because of their failure to go to Arizona and investigate.

Mr. President, a cry of anguish and despair came to us from starving Russia—Russia, that mysterious land; that spinner of webs; that people of mysticism and orientalism which will some day contribute not a little to the material wealth of the world.

A bill appropriating $20,000,000 to aid Russia passed the House of Representatives and came to the Senate, and when the bill was pending in the Senate on the 20th of this month I spoke as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I listened to the speeches to-day, and they have all been excellent, varying emotions surged within me. Some Senators say this measure, if enacted into law, would not be constitutional, but the bill is institutional.

I sometimes believe that chloroform or some other anæsthetic falls upon us in this Capitol, else what could make us so oblivious to what is going on in our own country as well as in other countries. Mr. President, during the past 10 years we have seen some strange mutations. In that decade changes more remarkable and radical took place on this earth than took place in the 200 years preceding. Even the processes of thought, the customs and views of the peoples, have changed, and whether we would or would not prefer the old days that we knew before 1914, we could not return to such standards if we tried.

We are living in a new earth and must adjust ourselves to the conditions.

We are told that thousands of people are starving in Russia. Doubtless that is true. We are told that we are inhibited by the Constitution from appropriating money for the purpose proposed. Doubtless that would be true according to the way the Constitution was interpreted, and correctly interpreted, 45 or 50 years ago; but the Constitution, sir, is not a dead hand; it is flexible. It has been stretched to protect every dollar in our land, and I insist that it shall be stretched to protect every person in our land.

Mr. President, we will find refuge to-day from the upbraidings of our national conscience by voting $20,000,000 to relieve Russia; but I fear when we examine closely we may find in that act but a scant refuge for our conscience.

The United States is a fountain, not a cistern; her open hand is a horn of plenty. The United States must and will take her place as the leader of the nations. Destiny compels her, requires her, to take that wondrous place. It is right and proper to listen to Russia's cry of anguish and despair, but before America can be generous, Mr. President, she must be just.

A Chinese philosopher once sent for his students to gather about him and tell him which, in their opinion, was the greatest of the virtues; he found them divided as to whether generosity or justice was the greater. The other virtues had comparatively no votes when the students were delivering their opinion. There was a tie vote between generosity and justice, and, breaking the tie, he said to them, "You must be just before you are generous. You can not be generous without first being just."

I believe that America as the leader of all the nations has come at last to know that there is an ethnic unity of the human race and that the distress of one nation must be a concern of all the others.

Now, let us examine and see if we have been just toward those whose sacrifices have made our country so powerful for good in the affairs of men.

How cynical, how tragic it would be to appropriate $20,000,000 for starving Russians and then refuse to appropriate the modest and much-needed sum of $100,000 to aid the Department of Labor in securing employment for our unemployed men. Workingmen in America are not asking a largess or a gift from the Treasury; they are pleading for an opportunity to get a job and earn their bread. So I shall offer to this bill an amendment which passed the Senate on the 12th instant, and which amendment Senate conferees manfully struggled to save, same being an amendment appropriating $100,000 to be used by the Secretary of Labor in securing employment for the unemployed here in the United States.

Moreover, Mr. President, how may we lay the flattering unction to our souls, how can we say on Christmas Day, "We have done a glorious thing by sending $20,000,000 to Russia," when we remember that ex-service men are suffering from tuberculosis, and in many—too many—cases are without help or mercy?

The Senate on the 12th instant agreed to my amendment appropriating $1,000,000 for the further hospitalization of ex-service men afflicted with tuberculosis, yet that amendment, which was added to the deficiency bill, was abandoned in conference. The blame, however, does not rest upon the Senate, for this body did all within its power to save the amendment.

If we desire to serve America, if we want to keep her in the paths of progress, let us not neglect those who made possible our peace and our progress.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is not known as an orator, who makes no pretensions to oratory, really established himself to-day as an orator by his speech. In clear, convincing language he pointed out what destiny has cast upon us as to our duty to aid Russia; but are we going to say when the Christmas bells are ringing that we have $20,000,000 for Russia, but not a penny to aid the American workingman in securing a position; that we have money for Russia, but that the American soldier who carried our stainless banner to new glory may die a death of neglect because, forsooth, bureaucracy says the soldier is already taken care of, and that a bureaucracy must never be questioned?

Mr. President, German gas and German bullets slew their thousands of our boys and American red tape is slaying its thousands more. On the 2d day of November I laid before the Senate the facts as to the necessity of further hospitalization of soldiers afflicted with tuberculosis, who are pouring into the Southwest by the score. The local authorities have gone to their limit in trying to aid. The humanitarian and the generous people of the Southwest have given from their private purses until they are practically no longer able to give; and yet, inert, somnolent, bound by red tape, we serenely sit here while these poor boys are shamefully neglected. We are told by bureaucracy, which worships red tape, that "we are taking care of them." Ask the dying boys if they are being taken care of. Do not ask some bureaucrat. * * *

It has been stated here that if this bill does not become a law, children in Russia will perish. That is true, and I say if my amendment does not become a law, American citizens will perish here. The despondent, the disconsolate, who are out of money and out of work, looking not for charity, gifts, or a largess, but looking for work, will perish in spirit if not in body. No appropriation that could be made, nothing that could be done, would be more welcome to the people of this country than an appropriation to enable the Department of Labor to secure, if possible, positions and jobs for the unemployed.

I have said before, and I repeat, that if this amendment is defeated, if the hand of the Department of Labor shall be paralyzed in its laudable endeavor to secure work for men in order that they may earn their daily bread, the blame will not be on the Senate.

Mark you closely to what I now say. This Government does not owe anyone a living; he who being able to work says that the Government owes him a living is the idler, the malingerer, and the grafter; but the Government does owe every person a chance to earn a decent living, and the Government that does not secure to each citizen a fair chance to earn a living will soon drift into troubled waters.

I shall at the appropriate time offer another amendment—somewhat similar to the amendment I offered to the deficiency bill, which amendment was adopted by the Senate but lost in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses—appropriating a reasonable sum of money to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury to enable him to extend full hospitalization to ex-service men; then when these two amendments shall have been adopted and the bill passed we shall feel the glowing and expanding of soul that comes to those who have done their full duty.

I then proposed the following amendments to the bill, and both were agreed to by the Senate, viz:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospitals and out-patient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, and accessories, and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named therein. The location and nature of such hospitals, whether for the treatment of tuberculous, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

That for carrying into effect this provision relating to additional hospital facilities there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

* * * * * * *

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the present unemployment emergency, to augment the existing facilities of the United States Employment Service in facilitating the transportation of labor from one State to another, inform States in which there is scarcity of labor of the situation in States where there is surplus of labor of the kind desired, and securing, compiling, and publishing information on unemployment throughout the country, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official station, together with their per diem in lieu of subsistence, allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; rent of quarters outside of the District of Columbia; supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and printing and binding, $100,000.

Both of these amendments went to conference, and when the conference report was laid before us, we found that the Senate conferees had yielded to the House conferees and had receded, which action, of course, kills the two Senate amendments and leaves the bill precisely as it passed the House, to wit, $20,000,000 for relief of distressed Russians; not a penny for relief of distressed Americans. I believe, however, that the House conferees would have yielded had it been possible for them to do so without killing the Russian relief bill.

Now whilst Congress was appropriating $20,000,000 to aid sufferers in Russia, what was going on at home?

I will read some of the melancholy happenings, and will call upon the Senators from the State mentioned in the dispatch I am now about to read to deny it if it be untrue. This is from the Washington Times of December 21, 1921. The article reads:

STARVATION IS FACING 2,000 IN WEST VIRGINIA TOWNSHIP—MINDEN PAINTED "HELL ON EARTH" AS RESULT OF MINE SHUTDOWN.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA., December 21.

Two thousand men, women, and children, comprising the populace of a West Virginia town—Minden, in Fayette County—are literally starving to death.

The mines closed down several months ago. The miners and their families remained, hoping for a resumption of work. None came. To-day at Minden and other towns in the stricken area babies are dying for want of sufficient nourishment, children are half clothed, and the entire town is slowly starving.

To add to the misery, an influenza epidemic is sweeping the territory. The death rate has been alarming. Schools have closed; out of 500 pupils only 104 were able to attend classes last week.

Conditions in Minden and surrounding mining communities are deplorable. The babies cling to gaunt parents, weakened by weeks of literal starvation. An eyewitness arriving here last night said that a loaf of bread would be hailed as a gift from Heaven.

Where only one pair of wearable shoes are left in a family the children take turns in wearing them. The majority are walking about barefooted and shivering in the biting cold.

The mines shut down in early fall. Lack of orders was the cause. Five hundred miners were thrown out of employment. During the warmer weather of autumn there was no serious suffering, but when cold came, lack of food, clothing, and medical attention brought about pitiful conditions. One man from the stricken area, who managed to secure money enough to reach here, said that Minden was "a hell on earth" and had been for several weeks.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, is the Senator from Arizona able to state in what county Minden is?

Mr. ASHURST. Fayette County. That is a little more definite than "Volga Basin," in Russia.

There is no Senator here who could truthfully say that I have been more partisan than the exigencies of politics required me to be, and surely I do not desire to be offensively partisan on this occasion, but I can not forego the observation that it is the Republican and not the Democratic Party that needs sympathy now.

Your predicament is worse than ours. Politically, you are more nearly bankrupt of vision than we are, and your political situation, instead of improving, is rapidly growing worse.

When Republican Senators go to the cloakroom they will say, "That man is telling the truth." You may, and doubtless do, at times desire to solve these questions of large import, but you do not know how to go about it. Frequently, when your hands grasp the handle of the keen and glittering blade of truth and justice, you are inept and in your struggles to cut some Gordian knot you but slash and mutilate yourselves.

Never again let me see the word "efficiency" in a Republican editorial in praise of your present majority or hear it from the lips of a Republican orator. Do not use that word again. You have demonstrated your gross inefficiency and debility at a time when you had full power. I do not mean anything personal; I simply say that your own newspapers, your own orators, know that you are not meeting the duties of the hour.

True, you have passed some good legislation, but its volume is so small when compared to what you ought to have done that it is practically nothing. So, if you will pardon this political reference, you have now an opportunity golden in its preciousness, if you can only measure up to it, and I appeal to you to look into this need of the ex-soldier for hospitalization and see to it that the ex-soldiers who are suffering and who are unable to work by reason of disease shall be hospitalized.

So, to recapitulate, the Senate on the 20th instant adopted my amendment appropriating $100,000 to enable the Department of Labor to find work for unemployed men; on the same day it adopted my amendment appropriating $500,000 for the further hospitalization of soldiers wherever and whenever the Secretary of the Treasury desired to hospitalize them.

These amendments have been defeated, and the Russian relief bill will become a law. I again thank the Senate conferees for the time they gave me. Moreover, I would be playing a small part if I should criticize the House conferees, for I am sure they would have adhered to my amendments were it not almost a certainty that to so adhere would have killed the Russian relief bill.

I am not permitted to criticize the House of Representatives. I am not going to do so. Any criticism of the rules of that branch of Congress would be unparliamentary, howsoever true it might be. But I will say that when the gathering tide of public opinion is informed as to the archaic rules in another branch of the Congress, which make it practically impossible to secure needful legislation, there will come a demand that such rules shall be altered.

We have seen some strange mutations in politics in the past decade and we will see more unless we learn to do the people's will. In 1912 we thought the day of the Republican Party was done. We thought its blood was water. In 1920 there were men who thought the Democratic Party was dead. Neither party is dead. Unless adequate hospitalization for the tubercular ex-service men shall be provided I am going to leave here for a time and make some speeches in the States and in the districts of men who may solicit the votes of the people, and when I read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which tells the tale of the inattention to and the disregard of amendments looking toward soldier relief somebody is going to "sit up and take notice."

It is a foul injustice which this Congress has perpetrated upon the Nation in defeating my amendments to the Russian relief bill.

When the conference report on the deficiency bill was before the Senate my learned friend from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] arose and castigated his party associates for their remissness. He said, "Why is it that bad measures always pass and good ones are defeated?" His phrase was, "Why is it that on all good amendments conferees always recede and on all bad amendments conferees agree?"

When he uttered these words little did we think that such a thing would happen again within a week, but it has happened. But, Mr. President, I am comforted by the reflection that—

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again; the eternal years of God are hers.

Congress may learn a valuable lesson from one of Joseph Addison's essays entitled "The Political Upholsterer." There lived in London some years ago, within my neighborhood, says Addison, an upholsterer of more than ordinary diligence and application to business, and he became a man of independent means because of his close attention to his own affairs. He arose early; his family was decently provided for and his house was comfortable. Later he developed a peculiar habit of knitting his brows and his countenance grew grave; he arose at a still earlier hour, not, however, to open his shop, but to inquire if the mail from Holland had yet arrived.

He became more inquisitive to know what went on in Poland than what took place in his own household, and he was in greater anxiety for King Augustus's welfare than for the welfare of his own family.

This man and his affairs had long been out of my mind, continues Addison, until about three days ago, when I met him walking in St. James Park. He was shabbily dressed, and I intended to ask him as to his present circumstances when he prevented me from doing so by asking me what I sincerely thought of the King of Sweden. When he had fully discussed Turkey in Europe and had deposed princes, settled the bounds of kingdoms, and balanced the power of Europe, he asked me to lend him half a crown, for in his upholstering of foreign countries he had ruined his business, reduced his family to poverty, and himself to beggary. Addison says he loaned the half crown to the worthy but needy "statesman" to be repaid when the Turk was driven out of Constantinople.

Mr. President, we are neglecting our own household whilst upholstering foreign countries; the course of conduct which ruined the London upholsterer will, if practiced much further, ruin the United States. Let us first be just to those at home who have claims upon us; then our generosity toward strangers will be a virtue. As it is now our generosity to strangers whilst our own are in need is our reproach.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, did time permit, I had intended to make a résumé of what the Congress has done in the way of appropriations for the hospitalization of disabled war veterans. It is a very interesting story. Had the same speed and promptness been exercised in the past that have been exercised in the handling of this bill by the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], and by the members of that committee, we would not have had the sad story of neglect and the apologetic record of indifference disclosed that the people of the country are now so familiar with.

It is very interesting to know that only three material appropriations have been made since the close of the war for hospital construction. The first one was for $9,000,000. It was made on March 3, 1919. The request for that appropriation was formally made to Congress in December, 1918, it having been discovered some two months before the armistice that there were no facilities available for hospitalizing discharged diseased and wounded soldiers and sailors except the hospitals and relief stations under the direction of the Public Health authorities, which were plainly inadequate. Of course, the Army and Navy Hospitals could not care for disabled soldiers after they had been discharged from the service.

The months following the first appropriation on March 3, 1919, made apparent the magnitude of the task of hospitalization for discharged disabled soldiers and sailors, which up to this time was not fully realized. Careful study was then begun on the problem, and on December 5, 1919, there was submitted and published Document 481, which reviewed the entire question and contained an estimate of an immediate need for 30,600 beds, and that approximately $85,000,000 would be required for this purpose. This estimate, in the light of subsequent developments, proved to be fully justified, because on July 7, 1921, there were actually hospitalized in Government-controlled hospitals 26,453 patients.

Congress had before it from December, 1919, this request for millions of dollars to provide hospital facilities for our ex-soldiers. Hearings were held almost daily before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they were constantly urged to appropriate money for this purpose until the adjournment of Congress.

Subsequently continuous appeals were made to Congress, and the need for immediate action was daily urged upon them until the spring of 1921, when a special appeal was made for an appropriation of approximately $35,000,000; but it was not until March 3, 1921, that an appropriation was authorized, and then only for $18,600,000, and this more than two and one-half years after the signing of the armistice and one year and four months after conditions were disclosed by Document 481.

Congress can not escape responsibility for the delays in providing funds for this humane work. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was largely responsible, if my memory is correct, in forcing the appropriation of $18,600,000 through Congress in the dying hours of the Sixty-sixth Congress by insisting again and again for action. The Republican Congress permitted a whole session to pass after the war was over without appropriating one dollar for hospitals. The first $9,000,000 appropriated in March, 1919, was passed by a Democratic Congress in its closing days. I think that Congress itself must appreciate and confess that it was careless and indifferent to the importance of the need in letting the long period of time pass without action while our incapacitated veterans were suffering in poorly equipped temporary and unsuitable contract hospitals. Even in March, 1921, when $18,600,000 was appropriated, it was apparent that it would be insufficient. Last summer the special committee investigating hospitalization and other agencies dealing with the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, on which committee I had the honor to serve, made a report to Congress recommending an immediate appropriation of $17,000,000. The Director of the Veterans' Bureau, the present Secretary of the Treasury, and, indeed, the President himself, have urged that further money be appropriated for further extension of hospital facilities, yet not until a few days ago did this bill come to the Senate from the House providing for the appropriation of the $17,000,000 fixed in the pending bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to say in behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I being a member of the committee, that just as soon as the bill came over from the House he convened the committee, using extraordinary diligence in getting it together, and promptly reported the bill within one day. He has moved with the greatest celerity, and I am very proud to say it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have already made reference to the fact that immediately upon this bill coming to the Senate the chairman of that committee speedily called his committee together and the committee immediately reported it favorably. Had the same action been taken and the same promptness been manifested in 1919, 1920, and 1921, we would not have had the hospitalization record that is altogether shameful.

As I have pointed out, up to the beginning of this year not one single bed was available from any appropriation made by Congress, unless it was the few provided for by the earlier appropriation of $9,000,000 in March, 1919.

In February of this year there were 30,879 Government patients in hospitals. Of this number, 21,772 were in Government institutions and 9,107 in contract hospitals, mostly private, profit-making institutions, or in State insane asylums.

The present Government hospital facilities are practically utilized to the full capacity, and before more men can be admitted more hospitals will have to be built.

There are thousands of neuropsychiatric ex-service men who will become hopelessly insane unless adequate hospital facilities are quickly provided for their care. Many others are in the early stages of tuberculosis and in dire need of special hospital facilities to promote and hasten their recovery.

Even with the completion of the projects undertaken under the $18,600,000 appropriation, only 6,000 additional beds will be available, and this number is not sufficient to care for those in need of immediate treatment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. May I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts and others who are interested in the subject that the diseases from which former soldiers are suffering are constantly developing and we have not reached the peak of the requirements for hospitalization in the country, in my judgment, so far as they are concerned. New tubercular cases are constantly developing——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And neuropsychiatric cases.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and nervous diseases. I think the matter should be hastened with all reasonable speed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will say to the Senator, as he will recall, that the evidence before the special investigating committee was that there were reported per month 1,500 new cases which required hospital attention. I do not care to take the time of the Senate further, except in emphasis of what I said in the beginning, to commend the speed and promptness with which the committee has acted; to point out that it is in marked contrast with our previous record; and that had we shown the same speed and interest when the earlier demands for hospitals were sent to Congress we should not have had so much of the unfortunate criticism that has prevailed among the veterans of the war for three years.

I think the criticism of the administration of our relief agencies for disabled veterans has been largely directed against compensation, training work, and inadequate hospitalization, and justly so; but I also think, in the matter of providing hospitalization facilities, Congress can not escape the charge of having evinced grave indifference in not having appropriated any money from March, 1919, until March 3, 1921, when we made the appropriation of $18,600,000, which even then was known to be inadequate.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Of course, I am in favor of the legislation which is embodied in the bill, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the language on page 2, line 12, which reads:

> Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction.

There seems to be an inconsistency in that provision of the bill when contrasted with the language which is found in section 2, which provides that the construction "shall be done in such manner as the President may determine."

Mr. President, the point I wish to make is this: It seems to me that if all of these buildings were required to be of fireproof construction it would tend to defeat, in a measure, the great purpose of the bill, for certainly it will require a long time for their construction. I am not very familiar with hospitals, but I presume there are very few of them in the country which are of fireproof construction, although they are all probably protected by sprinkler systems and other fire-fighting apparatus. I think, however, it would be unwise to insert in the bill the requirement that such buildings shall be fireproof. Such a restriction would certainly limit the use of the funds very greatly. I am not an expert in the construction of such buildings, but I merely call the attention of the proponents of the bill to the matter which I have suggested.

Furthermore, in the sections of the West where it is proposed to construct some hospitals the climate is very mild; and what we desire to do is to prevent the spread of disease and to cure those who are ill as soon as possible. If, however, we wait in order to erect fireproof buildings it would seem to me that we should thereby very greatly delay their construction. I repeat I merely call the matter to the attention of other Senators. I do not know whether the language to which I have referred is inserted advisedly or not. It might be for the advantage of the builders, but it would seem to me that it would be very poor policy to require that the buildings which are provided for shall in all cases be fireproof. The hands of the Government should not be tied; discretion should be left with the proper officials. This provision is in the interest of certain contractors. The character of the construction should be decided by where located, the character of the patients, and whether or not the buildings are to be permanent, and so forth.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from South Carolina has called attention to the provision of the bill to which he has referred. It was my privilege recently to discuss that phase of the matter with the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. He said the President should be given the authority to erect fireproof buildings. I agreed with him that fireproof buildings may now be erected almost as speedily as nonfireproof buildings may be erected, provided they are not great 10 or 12 story buildings. It is the purpose of the director to build these structures not exceeding three stories in height, and to locate them where plenty of air and light are readily obtainable. He insists—I agree with him; and I have had some experience in the business of constructing buildings—that such buildings ought to be fireproof. We ought to leave nothing to chance; we ought to erect such hospitals as that there will be no possibility of any of the patients being burned to death overnight.

I will say to the Senator that if the construction of these buildings is placed in the hands of some of our largest builders in the great cities they can construct a three-story fireproof structure to take care of a thousand sick men in from seven to eight months, if they go about it at once.

The Senator may recall the construction of the fireproof Army and Navy buildings in this city near the Lincoln Memorial. Those buildings were constructed during one summer, and I think they are as fine buildings of a fireproof character as will be found in this part of the country.

So, Mr. President, I would not agree to cut out the provision of the bill that these buildings shall be fireproof. We ought to take no chances on the lives of these men, many of whom are confined to bed and would have to be carried out in case of emergency.

Mr. DIAL. Of course, any building of a permanent type ought to be fireproof.

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. This provision in all likelihood would prevent the authorities from purchasing any building already constructed if it were not fireproof. However, I repeat, I merely call the matter to the attention of the Senate and ask whether Senators desire to have that language retained in the bill. I myself think it is an ill-advised provision. Of course, if we are going to have permanent hospitals they ought to be fireproof, but if they are to be merely temporary and designed to accommodate the greatest number of patients at the earliest possible moment, it seems to me the requirement that such buildings shall be fireproof ought to be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think the provision of the bill for fireproof construction is very important, and that it is very wise that such provision should be made. I think the experience of the committees which have considered the needs and the complaints against the temporary hospitals in which veterans have been housed has led them to the conclusion that fireproof buildings are the only safe and proper kind of structures to use.

Replying again to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as to the urgency of this situation, and confirming what the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has said. It is to be noted that at the present time only about 20,000 of the 30,000 disabled veterans receiving hospital treatment under the Veterans' Bureau are housed in Government hospitals. One-third of all the disabled men are in State, local, private, or contract hospitals. When the work is completed on the hospital buildings which are being enlarged and constructed under the appropriation of $18,600,000, 6,000 of the remaining 10,000 patients will have been taken care of. So that this appropriation will take care of the remaining three or four thousand who will be for years yet under treatment outside, and also others who may require treatment in the years to come. However, in the natural course of events it will be at least two years before the work under this appropriation can be completed.

I wish to state further that I think the committee also showed very wise judgment in leaving the responsibility to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. We found that many long, tedious, and unnecessary delays occurred in starting the erection of hospital buildings under last year's appropriation of $18,600,000; that months of time were wasted in drawing plans and looking over sites and other detailed work which could have been avoided or hastened. I believe, therefore, that putting the responsibility upon the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is going to help to facilitate the erection of the hospitals provided for in this bill. This bill should pass without delay, and I hope by an emphatic majority.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the credit of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that in the committee he offered a very excellent amendment—it was so considered by the committee—but it was not accepted because we did not feel that we ought to accept any amendment in view of the desirability of securing the enactment of the bill at the earliest possible date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FERNALD. I suggest that a yea and nay vote be taken.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I am informed that were he present he would vote as I propose to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I am informed that if present the Senator from Alabama would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent, but I understand if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I am informed that if present he would vote as I propose to vote on this measure, I am therefore at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (when Mr. ROBINSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably absent. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when Mr. SMITH's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. If present my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I understand that if that Senator were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I am, therefore, at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). Notwithstanding my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], but I am informed that, if present, he would vote as I shall vote. I, therefore, am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. If present, I understand that Senator would vote as I have already voted. Therefore, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce that, so far as I am informed, the following Republican Senators who are absent would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill: The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. So, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] who is absent on official business. I understand if he were present he would vote "yea." As I intend to vote the same way, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

I desire to announce that the following Democratic Senators, all of whom are necessarily absent, would, if present, on the passage of the bill vote "yea."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I have voted. I therefore will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—67.

Ashurst	Gooding	McKinley	Simmons
Ball	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Harreld	Moses	Spencer
Broussard	Harris	Myers	Stanley
Bursum	Harrison	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Heflin	New	Sutherland
Capper	Hitchcock	Newberry	Swanson
Caraway	Johnson	Nicholson	Townsend
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Keyes	Phipps	Warren
Dial	King	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	La Follette	Pomerene	Weller
Edge	Lenroot	Rawson	Williams
Ernst	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Fernald	McCormick	Shortridge

NOT VOTING—29.

Brandegee	Gerry	Owen	Smith
Cameron	Glass	Page	Stanfield
Crow	Kellogg	Pepper	Trammell
Dillingham	Ladd	Pittman	Underwood
Elkins	McCumber	Ransdell	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	McKellar	Reed
France	McLean	Robinson
Frelinghuysen	Overman	Shields

So the bill was passed.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT RENT COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2919) to extend for the period of two years the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the emergency described in Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, still exists and continues in the District of Columbia, and that the present housing and rental conditions therein require the further extension of said act.

SEC. 2. That said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended by an act entitled "An act to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921, be, and the same is hereby, reenacted, extended, and continued, as hereinafter amended, from the date of the approval of this act until the 22d day of May, 1924, notwithstanding the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921.

SEC. 3. That section 101 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 101. When used in this title, unless the context indicates otherwise—

"The term 'rental property' means any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto in the District of Columbia rented or hired and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith; but does not include an apartment.

"The term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

"The term 'apartment' means any apartment or part thereof in the District of Columbia rented or hired and the land and outbuildings appurtenant thereto, and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith.

"The term 'owner' includes a lessor or sublessor, or other person entitled to receive rent or charges for the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment, or any interest therein, or his agent.

"The term 'tenant' includes a subtenant, lessee, sublessee, or other person, not the owner, entitled to the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment.

"The term 'service' includes the furnishing of light, heat, water, telephone or elevator service, furniture, furnishings, window shades, screens, awnings, storage, kitchen, bath and laundry facilities and privileges, maid service, janitor service, removal of refuse, making all repairs suited to the type of building or necessitated by ordinary wear and tear, and any other privileges or service connected with the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment.

"The term 'commission' means the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 4. That section 102 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 102. A commission is hereby created and established to be known as the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, which shall be composed of five commissioners, none of whom shall be directly or indirectly engaged or in any manner interested in or connected with the real estate or renting business in the District of Columbia. The commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and three of the commissioners appointed shall be learned in the law and shall have been engaged in the actual practice of law before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for a period of at least five years prior to their appointment. The term of each commissioner shall be for the period covered by this act, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds. The commission, as at present constituted, shall continue in office and shall have and exercise all the powers and duties now vested in them pending the appointment and confirmation of the five commissioners provided for herein. The commission shall at the time of its organization and annually thereafter elect a chairman from its membership. The commission may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry this title into effect. All powers and duties of the commission may be exercised by a majority of its members. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission. The commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed."

SEC. 5. That section 103 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended by said act approved August 24, 1921, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"The commission shall also have the power to appoint two inspectors, outside of the civil service, who shall receive a salary not exceeding $2,000 a year each, payable monthly."

SEC. 6. That the last sentence of the first paragraph of section 105 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Any member of the commission may sign subpœnas, administer oaths and affirmations, summon witnesses, conduct hearings, and receive evidence touching any matter which the commission is authorized to consider or investigate, and the substance of such evidence, when certified to the commission by the member of the commission who heard and received the same, may be made the basis of the commission's determination respecting the matter under consideration or investigation."

SEC. 7. That the last paragraph of said section 105 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such books, accounts, records, papers, and correspondence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. Any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend and testify, or to answer any lawful inquiry, or to produce such books, accounts, records, papers, or correspondence, or who shall fail or refuse to file with the commission plans and other data in such detail as the commission may require, descriptive of the rooms, accommodations, and service in connection with any apartment required by the commission, if in his power to do so, in obedience to the subpœna, order, or lawful requirement of the commission, or who shall neglect or refuse to comply with any lawful determination or order of the commission requiring him to furnish heat, electric current, or other service in any rental property or apartment shall be guilty of an offense, and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. No officer or employee of the commission shall, unless authorized by the commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction, make public any information obtained by the commission."

SEC. 8. That section 106 of said Title II of the food control and District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 106. For the purposes of this title it is declared that all (a) rental property and (b) apartments are affected with a public interest, and that all rents and charges therefor, all service in connection therewith, and all other terms and conditions of the use or occupancy thereof, shall be fair and reasonable; and any unreasonable or unfair provision of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of such rental property or apartment, with respect to such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy. The commission upon its own initiative may, or upon complaint shall, determine whether the rent, charges, service, and other terms or conditions of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any such rental property or apartment are fair and reasonable. Such complaints may be made and filed by or on behalf of any tenant, and by or on behalf of the owner of any rental property or apartment, notwithstanding the existence of a lease or other contract between the tenant and the owner; and in fixing and determining the fair and reasonable rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment the commission shall in all cases take into consideration the character and condition of the property and the character of the service, if any, furnished in connection therewith.

"In all such cases the commission shall give notice personally or by registered mail and afford an opportunity to be heard to all parties in interest: Provided, That notice given by the commission to the agent of the legal owner of any rental property or apartment for the collection of rents shall be deemed and held to be good and sufficient notice to said legal owner. The commission shall promptly hear and determine the issues involved in all complaints submitted to it. All hearings before the commission, or any member of the commission, shall be open to the public. If the commission finds that the existing rents, charges, service, or other terms or conditions of the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment are unfair and unreasonable, it shall fix and determine the fair and reasonable rents, rates, or charges for the rental property or apartment under consideration and may fix and determine the fair and reasonable service, terms, and conditions of the use or occupancy of the property, and may also order and require the furnishing of such service by the owner as it shall lawfully determine to be fair and reasonable. In any suit in any court of the United States or the District of Columbia involving any question arising out of the relation of landlord and tenant with respect to any rental property or apartment, except on appeal from the commission's determination, as provided in this title, such court shall determine the rights and duties of the parties in accordance with the determination and regulations of the commission relevant thereto."

SEC. 9. That section 108 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 108. Unless within 10 days after the filing of the commission's determination any party to the complaint appeals therefrom to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term, the determination of the commission shall be final and conclusive. The said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in general term, is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals taken from determinations of the commission, and said appeals shall be given precedence over the other business of said court. At the hearing of said appeals the chief justice of said court shall preside, with at least two of the associate justices of said court, to be designated by said chief justice, and in the absence of said chief justice the senior associate justice of said court shall preside, have the powers, and perform the duties of said chief justice. If such an appeal is taken from the determination of the commission, the record before the commission or such part thereof as the court may order shall be certified by it to the court and shall constitute the record before the court, and the commission's determination shall not be modified or set aside by the court, except for error of law. If any party applies to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shows to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings before the commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original determination, with the return of such additional evidence. In the proceedings before such court on appeal from a determination of the commission, the commission shall appear by its attorney or other representative and submit oral or written arguments to support the findings and the determination of the commission. No owner or tenant shall apply to the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review any determination of the commission fixing the fair and reasonable rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, except by appeal, as hereinbefore provided, and said court shall not issue any injunction, permanent or temporary, restraining or enjoining the commission from fixing the rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, and said court is hereby divested of any and all power and jurisdiction to issue any such injunction.

"Any final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term on appeal from any determination of the commission may be reexamined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, by writ of certiorari, to be issued by it, in its discretion, upon the petition of any party aggrieved by said final decision, or by the rent commission, within 30 days after said final decision, but if said writ of certiorari shall be denied, said final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term shall remain in full force and effect."

SEC. 10. That section 109 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 109. The right of a tenant to the use of or occupancy of any rental property or apartment, existing at the time this act takes effect, or thereafter acquired, under any lease or other contract for such use or occupancy or under any extension thereof by operation of law, shall, notwithstanding the expiration of the term fixed by such lease or contract, continue at the option of the tenant, subject, however, to any determination or regulation of the commission relevant thereto; and such tenant shall not be evicted or dispossessed so long as he pays the rent and performs the other terms and conditions of the tenancy as fixed by such lease or contract, or in case such lease or contract is modified by any determination or regulation of the commission, then as fixed by such modified lease or contract. All remedies of the owner at law or equity, based on any provision of any such lease or contract to the effect that such lease or contract shall be determined or forfeited if the premises are sold, are hereby suspended so long as this title is in force. Every purchaser shall take conveyance of any rental property or apartment subject to the rights of tenants as provided in this title. The rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property or apartment shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property or apartment if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner provided by section 1223 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia,' approved May 3, 1901, as amended, which notice shall contain a full and correct statement of the facts and circumstances upon which the same is based; but in no case shall possession be demanded or obtained by such owner in contravention of the terms of any such lease or contract. If there is a dispute between the owner and the tenant as to the accuracy or sufficiency of the statement set forth in such notice, as to the good faith of such demand, or as to the service of notice, the matters in dispute shall be determined by the commission upon complaint as provided in section 106 of this title.

"Any dispute made before the commission under the provisions of this section shall be filed with the commission before the notice complained of has expired."

SEC. 11. That section 111 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 111. The determination of the commission in a proceeding begun by complaint or upon its own initiative fixing fair and reasonable rents, charges, service, and other terms and conditions of use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment shall constitute the commission's determination of the fairness and reasonableness of such rents, charges, service, terms, or condition for the rental property or apartment affected, and shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding any change in ownership or tenancy thereof, unless and until the commission modifies or sets aside such determination upon complaint either of the owner or of the tenant."

SEC. 12. That section 112 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 112. If the owner of any rental property or apartment collects any rent or charge therefor in excess of the amount fixed in a determination of the commission made and in full force and effect in accordance with the provisions of this title, he shall be liable for and the commission is hereby authorized and directed to commence an action in the municipal court of the District of Columbia to recover double the amount of such excess, together with the costs of the proceeding, which shall include an attorney's fee of $50, to be taxed as part of the costs. Such actions shall be brought in said municipal court, regardless of the amount to be recovered, and the said municipal court is hereby given special jurisdiction to hear and determine all such cases. The commission is hereby authorized to bring such actions without the payment of costs, and no bond shall be required in the case of any appeal taken by the commission from any judgment of the said municipal court in any such case. The judgments of the said municipal court in such cases shall be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term, in the same manner as determinations of the commission. Out of any sums received on account of such recovery the commission shall pay over to the tenant the amount of the excess so paid by him, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia: Provided, That if the commission finds that such excess was paid by the tenant voluntarily and with knowledge of the commission's determination, the whole amount of such recovery shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 13. That section 113 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 113. If in any proceeding before the commission, begun by complaint or on the commission's own initiative, and involving any lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment, the commission finds that at any time after the passage of this act, but during the tenancy, the owner has, directly or indirectly, willfully withdrawn from the tenant any service agreed or required by a determination of the commission to be furnished, or has by act, neglect, or omission contrary to such lease or contract or to the law or any ordinance or regulation made in pursuance of law, or of a determination of the commission exposed the tenant, directly or indirectly, to any unsafe or insanitary condition or imposed upon him any burden, loss, or unusual inconvenience in connection with his use or occupancy of such rental property or apartment, the commission shall determine the sum which in its judgment will fairly and reasonably compensate or reimburse the tenant therefor. In any such proceeding involving a lease or other contract, the term specified in which had not expired at the time the proceeding was begun, the commission shall likewise determine the amount or value of any bonus or other consideration in excess of the rental named in such lease or contract received at any time directly or indirectly by the owner in connection with such lease or contract. The tenant may recover any amount so determined by the commission in an action in the municipal court of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 14. That section 116 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 116. Any person who with intent to avoid the provisions of this title enters into any agreement or arrangement for the payment of any bonus or other consideration in connection with any lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment, or who participates in any fictitious sale or other device or arrangement the purpose of which is to grant or obtain the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment without subjecting such use or occupancy to the provisions of this title or to the jurisdiction of the commission, shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or both."

SEC. 15. That section 117 of said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 117. The commission shall prescribe standard forms of leases and other contracts for the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment and shall require their use by the owner thereof. Every such lease or contract entered into after the commission has prescribed and promulgated a form for the tenancy provided by such lease or contract shall be deemed to accord with such standard form; and any such lease or contract in any proceeding before the commission or in any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia shall be interpreted, applied, and enforced in the same manner as if it were in the form and contained the stipulations of such standard form. The owner of an apartment shall file with the commission plans and other data in such detail as the commission requires, descriptive of the rooms, accommodations, and service in connection with such apartment, and a schedule of rates and charges therefor. The commission shall, after consideration of such plans, schedules, data, or other information, determine and fix a schedule of fair and reasonable rates and charges for such apartments: and the rates and charges stated in such schedule shall thereafter constitute the fair and reasonable rates and charges for such apartment. The commission's determination in such case shall be made after such notice and hearing and shall have the same force and effect and be subject to appeal in the same manner as a determination of the commission under section 106 of this title."

SEC. 16. That said Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"SEC. 124. (a) Any violation of this act or of any order of the commission, committed before the termination of this act may, after such termination, be prosecuted by and in the name of the Attorney General in lieu of the commission in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

"(b) In the case of (1) any proceeding begun under the provisions of section 114 before the termination of this act, or (2) any proceeding on appeal from a determination of the commission begun before the termination of this act, such proceeding may, after such termination, be continued in the same manner with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated, and all powers and duties in respect to such proceedings vested in the commission by this act shall for the purposes of such proceedings be vested in the Attorney General.

"(c) Any right or obligation based upon any provision of this act on upon any order of the commission, accrued prior to the termination of this act may, after the termination of this act, be enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

"(d) The Attorney General may, after the termination of this act, appoint the attorney last appointed by the commission under the provisions of section 103 to assist in the enforcement of this act. Such attorney shall continue to receive compensation for such services at the rate of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly."

SEC. 17. That section 2 of the said act, entitled "An act to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 18. That all orders and determinations heretofore or hereafter made by the commission shall be and remain in full force and effect until the termination of this act.

SEC. 19. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I shall not be able to be here throughout the consideration of this bill, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if he has any objection to a unanimous-consent agreement that when the vote is taken upon the final passage of the bill it shall be a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. BALL. I have not any objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that when the vote is taken upon the final passage of the bill it be a yea-and-nay vote—a record vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the yeas and nays will be ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this is a very remarkable bill to be considered in an American legislative assembly. One of the fundamental principles of all American constitutions is that private property shall not be taken for private use, either with or without compensation; and yet, in principle, that is exactly what this bill proposes to do. This bill provides that one private citizen can occupy the premises of another private citizen against the will of the owner of the property for an indefinite length of time. I suppose the bill undoubtedly will pass, as there seems to be a state of apathy in regard to it; it seems to be considered that it ought to be passed as a matter of course in some way; but it seems strange to me that such a measure, involving such a principle as that, should receive consideration at all, or should receive any votes in favor of it, in time of peace.

I can readily understand how this legislation was initiated and how it received its original support as a war measure, because the people of this country at that time did not stop to consider the effect upon individuals or even the rights of individuals when the winning of the war was involved or when, as was the case in this instance, we were dealing with the immediate consequences of the war. This bill goes a good deal further than that and holds that a contract made between the owner of a piece of property and a tenant shall be enforceable as against the owner of the property, but can not be enforced as against the tenant. That is a very novel proposition to be enacted into law by the Congress of the United States. It also provides that the usual remedies at law and in equity—to use the language of the bill; I will call attention to the entire provision in a few moments—to which a citizen of the United States is entitled shall be suspended so far as the owner of property is concerned, but shall still remain in force in so far as the man is concerned who happens in one way or another to have gotten possession of it in the capacity of tenant.

It not only provides that one private citizen shall have the use and the benefit of the property of another private citizen without his consent, but it goes to the extent of requiring the owner of the property to render services to the tenant, in addition to allowing the tenant to occupy his property beyond the term of his lease. Services are defined in the act as being the furnishing of maid servants, of light, of heat, of paying the bills for water, of furnishing janitor service; and if the owner refuses to do it, although he may not desire to have a tenant in his house at all, he is penalized under the terms of this bill. In addition to giving up the possession of his property, under compulsion, to some one whom he did not desire to occupy it, he is required to continue to furnish him with the conveniences which the tenant may require at his hands.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a moment.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does not this legislation suggest something of the legislation which Mr. Lenin has put into effect?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to say that it would seem to be a far call from the Ball Rent Act to the Genoa Conference; and yet, as a matter of fact, the same identical principle is involved in each of them. The attention of the whole world to-day is directed to the city of Genoa, and to the international conference which is assembling there; and those who hear me who have paid any attention to the press dispatches as to the proceedings of that conference have noted the fact that the conference in its present stage hinges upon the proposition which has been laid down to the Russian delegates as one of the conditions upon which they will be treated with as to the recognition of the government of Russia that Russia shall recognize the right of private property.

The question raised by this bill is whether or not the United States is to recognize the right of private property, which is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. I may say that I have not the slightest doubt that if there were sufficient initiative and energy among the people of this District to make a characteristic American protest against such an invasion of private rights there would be but little prospect of the passage of this measure. I do not care to discuss the merits of the District status at this time, but they have been deprived of their civil rights for so long that they have apparently lost all the energy and initiative which impel ordinary American communities to vigorously oppose the invasion of the fundamental and inalienable rights of American citizens. If there were sufficient public interest in the District to take this act again to the Supreme Court of the United States, I have not the slightest doubt that its further extension would be held unconstitutional by that tribunal, because it is a violation of the rights which I referred to a moment ago.

All the bill amounts to, in substance, is this: It is said that there are people in the District of Columbia who have not houses, and that there are other people in the District who have houses, and that consequently Congress will provide that the houses of those who have them shall be taken away from them and given to those people who haven't them but who want them. That is all there is to the bill.

I can readily imagine that a perfectly constitutional bill, one which might not be considered unreasonable, might be framed along the lines of the usury law, which would provide penalties and inhibitions against the charging of exorbitant rents, without setting up a great commission, with a lot of officers at high salaries, and without providing that a man shall occupy the house of another man against the owner's will.

That is not the nature of the bill. It is generally understood that that is the nature of it, and that that is the principle on which it is based, and it is not generally understood that, as a matter of fact, it is an entirely different proposition. It is not confined to the regulation of rents, putting the leasing of dwellings upon the basis of a public service, and providing that rents shall not be exorbitant; but, as I said before, the bill goes to the outrageous extent, to the unconstitutional extent, not only of providing that rents shall not be exorbitant, but of saying to a man that he shall rent his property to another man whether he desires to rent it to him or not.

I hear some Senator mention the question of business houses, and I understand there is a movement to amend the bill by excluding business houses from its terms. I think they ought to be excluded, because I think that all kinds of buildings ought to be excluded from its terms; but I fail to see why there should be any discrimination in favor of the owners of business houses. If these limitations upon the rights of citizens in the ownership of property—which, by the way, is the first principle of individual liberty which is mentioned in the Bill of Rights and the constitutions of the States and of the Union—are to be imposed, why they should not be imposed upon owners of business houses and hotels the same as upon the owners of private houses I do not know.

Why do they leave out hotels? Why is it proposed to leave out business houses? Simply because the owners of hotels and the owners of business houses have more influence than the owners of apartments. That is the only reason. There is no more reason in principle why you should allow hotels to charge a crowding public exorbitant rates for lodging in those hotels than that you should allow the owner of an apartment house to charge what are alleged to be exorbitant rates for his apartments. It is just as necessary for the people who stop in hotels to find accommodations in which they can house themselves for the time being, it is just as essential to the public welfare, it is just as much and more in the nature of a public service as the renting of apartment houses, and yet it is not included in the bill. Now it is proposed, I understand, with the consent of the author of the bill, to exclude business houses from the bill.

Mr. President, I want to speak more particularly about the terms of the bill. The best condemnation, the best argument against the passage of this bill, is contained in the first lines of the report which has been filed in support of it. That report states after setting out the act:

> Your committee finds that the rental conditions in the District of Columbia which prompted the enactment of the original legislation, approved October 22, 1919, and the extension thereof, as approved August 24, 1921, continue to exist, if they have not grown worse.

I do not know whether Senators caught the significance of that or not. That is the statement of the committee which reported this bill. That statement is to the effect that, notwithstanding the enactment of the present law on October 22, 1919, which is in substance the same as the pending bill, the committee says it has not accomplished the purposes for which it was intended, that the conditions which they sought to remove still exist, and not only that, but the committee says those conditions have grown worse. The committee says the law failed of its purpose. Notwithstanding the fact that it has been on the statute books for more than two years, it has not accomplished the purposes for which it was enacted, but they say, in the language which I have just read, that it has made those conditions worse, at least that conditions have grown worse, notwithstanding the fact that the law is in effect. Yet they propose to remedy those conditions under the strange process of reenacting and extending a law which has not improved these conditions in the two years since it has been on the statute books.

It is a good deal like a quack doctor, with no scientific knowledge of his profession, dosing some poor patient with some medicine which he imagines might possibly be of some benefit to him, but the patient constantly grows worse, and gets into a very acute stage of disease, goes on that way for two years, and is about to die, when the quack doctor says, "Well, I will cure you now. I will give you a larger dose of the same medicine you have had already, which pretty nearly killed you." That, in effect, is what is proposed by the bill.

I will tell why the bill is brought here, Mr. President. I will tell the real motive back of it. This is simply another instance of the ingrowing disposition of a Government bureau which is once established, given a foothold, and let sink its roots into the Public Treasury. The original Ball Rent Act provided a few officers with high salaries, for which we appropriated $50,000, and "All the king's horses and all the king's men" can not uproot those officeholders and that bureau and get it out of existence.

It was said that $50,000 would accomplish the purpose for which the act was passed temporarily; provide for three commissioners at a salary of $5,000 each, and a secretary at a salary of $3,000—$50,000 in money. Last December they came in and said $50,000 was not enough, that they needed $25,000 more, and it was given to them, making $75,000 in all. In 1921 they came in and said that there were not enough officers provided for. The bureau having gotten its roots into the rich soil of Government patronage, had begun to grow. It became more hungry and desirous of Government pap and nutriment, so we provided an additional office. Some lawyer, who I suppose could not make $2,500 a year in private practice, was to be appointed at a salary of $5,000 a year, and now that lawyer, having been put upon the Government pay roll at $5,000 a year, finds that the term of the act is about to expire, so he draws up another bill to extend the life of the law, under which he holds this great position, for another period of two years.

This lawyer has written a strange provision into the bill which he has drawn to continue the authority under which he holds his position, that even after the act has expired, when the period of its extension shall come to an end, the commissioners "may," to use the language of the bill, employ him to continue in charge of the litigation which grows out of the transactions of the commission during the period of its life. Of course, it is simply a provision for perpetuating in office the attorney who has drawn up this bill, apparently without any regard and, I assume, without any fundamental knowledge of those inalienable and inestimable privileges of personal liberty and private citizenship which give a man control of the earnings of his labor, of his own property, so long as he does not use it to the injury of his neighbor. The bill provides a means by which all this shall be sacrificed, but that for two more years he shall hold this office, and that even after the two years have expired he "may"—which means he "shall"—be retained to represent the commission at $5,000 "per." That is one of the reasons why this bill is brought here at this time.

Another reason is that it provides four more good jobs. I read from the report of the committee:

The principal changes in the present law are as follows:
(a) The rent law is extended until the 22d day of May, 1924.
(b) The rental of business properties, other than hotels, is returned to the jurisdiction of the Rent Commission.
(c) The membership of the commission is increased to five members.

Every time they bring in a new bill the commission is to grow and new offices are to be created. Three commissioners could not regulate the rents of the District. They have to have five, so two more are provided for by this bill. The report further states:

(d) Two additional inspectors are provided.

So there are four new offices under this commission created by this pending bill, which was advertised as being merely an extension of the old law. That, Mr. President, is really the reason why all the statements as to its temporary nature which were made at the time the act was extended in the first place have been cast aside and demand is made for its extension for an additional two years.

It does not come from any demand of the public. It comes from the commission itself. It comes from people who are holding these offices and from those who want to hold them. It is simply a grab at the Public Treasury, and in grabbing at the Public Treasury it is nothing to them that they are trampling over the plainest and most important rights of the individual citizen, those which the framers of the Constitution of the United States and of the States in their various jurisdictions have named first in the list of those inalienable rights which characterize the status of free men under our form of government.

It is just as essential to protect an individual from the encroachments of his government as it is to protect him from the encroachments of a foreign power or of some other individual. What difference does it make to the citizen of the United States whose rights are invaded whether that invasion is by his own government or by some other individual or by some foreign country? If there is no security of private property, the result is the same from whatever source the invasion comes.

I am reminded at this point in my remarks to say—and I am going to be perfectly frank about it, without any invidious mentioning of names—that I believe there is a rule of the Senate which forbids a Senator interested in a subject matter of legislation from voting upon it. I am perfectly satisfied, in the first place, that if every Senator would read the bill, simply read it carefully and intelligently, there would not be the slightest possibility of its passing, but there is no way of getting the majority of the Senate to read the bill. It is accepted upon the report of the committee, and the report of the committee is made upon the report of the attorney, who is getting $5,000 a year during the life of this law.

Not only that, but if every Senator and every Representative who is a beneficiary of some action of the commission in cutting down the rent which he is paying for the quarters which he occupies while he is serving as a Member of this Congress would refuse to vote, the number of votes in behalf of the bill would be very greatly reduced.

I have a statement here, which I have no occasion to doubt at all, calling attention to one among many cases which have been called to my attention, instances of the kind to which I have just referred, where, in a certain large apartment house, the number of which is given and the name of the Senator is given, which I will not mention, the Rent Commission allows to the owner of the property only $1.095 per foot for the rooms occupied by the Senator, while for other tenants in the same tier the Rent Commission fixes the rate at $1.75 a foot. In another case a Senator is allowed space at 95 cents a foot in the same building, while other tenants in the same tier are charged $1.30 per foot.

But the case is much worse than that. It is a sordid sort of proposition. In their effort to cater to those in positions of power and influence, as I judge from the circumstances and from the actions of the commission, the commission, as I am informed, not only reduced their rents, but in some cases increased the rents of those who occupied smaller and inferior apartments above what was charged by the owner of the building himself, poorer, more lowly tenants, who do not get the consideration that those receive who are in the positions of the mighty.

Not only are Senators the beneficiaries of the action of the commission, but I am informed—and I have no reason to doubt it at all—that judges of the courts which construe and pass upon the law are tenants who have been likewise liberally dealt with by the commission in fixing the rents which are to be charged to them. There is danger in such a situation that the Government itself will be tarnished by its invasion under the circumstances of the private rights of the supposedly free citizens of a great municipality under the American flag.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator state as a fact that judges called upon to pass on the validity of the law have received these favors or does he state it as his opinion that such a thing might have occurred and other things have taken place?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I stated, as information which I said I have no reason to doubt, that judges of the courts of the District before whom this matter may come occupy apartments whose rental comes before this commission to be determined.

Mr. WILLIS. That is not what I understood the Senator to state before.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I gave certain instances in the case of Senators, in which I cited the comparative rents which have been allowed, and I am informed that the same thing has occurred in a similar way in the case of judges.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask my colleague, so as to be sure that I understand the matter rightly, if it is his information that the commission has allowed lower rents to Senators than to other tenants of similar property, or have those rents been fixed by the landlords?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The rents have been fixed by the commission.

Mr. JONES of Washington. By the commission?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. I wish to read in this connection a statement furnished to me. There is nothing invidious in it at all. It is rather a strong statement and I think justified by the situation.

The findings of the Rent Commission in the matter of rents for—

A certain number, but I omit the number of the street—

are so unfair to the owners and to some of the tenants, so inadequate to provide a fair return on the proved value of the property, and so partial to certain influential tenants at the expense of tenants having no influence in Congress or the courts, that the same and the practical workings of the Rent Commission generally might well be made the subject of congressional investigation, especially in view of the proposed extension of the Ball Act for two more years from May 22, 1922.

After several years' experience in the operation of this building, the owners revised the schedule of rates for the various apartments, carefully considering every advantage or disadvantage for each apartment separately, with a view to eliminating, so far as humanly possible, all inequities or inequalities. The Rent Commission, in their finding and determination, disregarded this carefully adjusted and well-balanced schedule and arbitrarily adopted a new one of their own by which all of the largest, most luxurious, best located, and best lighted apartments, occupied for the most part by tenants of large means, who are able and with few exceptions willing and anxious to pay the prices set by the owners, have been reduced, while the rental of the smaller apartments, occupied by tenants of small means, Army officers and Government employees, without political influence, have been allowed to remain practically the same or in some cases increased.

A glance at the plat of the building will show that the large apartments in the wings, with central halls and open on three sides, are the choicest in the building, and owing to their size the rate per square foot was set by the owners at lower than on the one, two, and three room apartments. Yet the Rent Commission has seen fit to cut the rates on the largest and best apartments, and to leave the rates on most of the small apartments untouched, except where increases have been allowed.

This surprising and inequitable determination can be accounted for only by the fact that in each of the eight wings comprising these choice apartments there reside either a Senator or Representative, a justice of the United States Supreme Court or of the District Court of Appeals.

I want to say here that I do not state and I do not believe that any justice of the Supreme Court or of the District Court of Appeals or any Senator or any Representative has been influenced in the slightest degree in any action he has taken in regard to the Rent Commission, if he has taken any action at all, and some of them have not taken any action, by the circumstances to which I am alluding. That is not the point. The point is the condition in which they are placed. There are thousands of things—perhaps that is rather an exaggerated number to state, but there are many relations which are prohibited by the law, even though it might be known that no dishonesty or wrong motive was involved, simply because of the relation and because as a matter of public policy it is considered unwise that people in those relations should act in regard to the matter in which they are concerned, even though they might be able to hold the scales balanced with perfect justice and evenness between the contending parties.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me that the important thing is not whether any Senator or Representative or judge has been influenced, but whether the law in its terms permits any such interpretation as to make possible even an effort to do such a thing as that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the open charge that is made by the party who furnishes me with the statement which I am now reading.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator give the name of the author of the document he is reading?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not care to give it now. If it should be necessary, I may state it. He is the owner of the property at this number, and I have the number here.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has been perfectly frank, and a frank statement ought to have a very frank reply. The Senator after making a statement here which reflects upon the integrity and honor of Senators and of a justice of the Supreme Court finally says that he meant no reflection. But it puts them in an embarrassing position. At the same time, he does not give the name of the man who writes this letter, but allows him to spill his bilge water into the Senate and to reflect upon public men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am informed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] that this information has all been published in the newspapers. My only desire in not giving names and the numbers of the apartments was not to bring in the names of individuals who are affected. If it is insisted upon having the names, I am perfectly willing to give them.

I want to say before proceeding further that I have stated certain facts. The Senator from Ohio says that I cast reflection upon the honor of Senators and justices of the Supreme Court. That is a conclusion which he himself has drawn. I state, and I do not believe it can be successfully contradicted, that justices and Senators occupy apartments, the rental for which has been fixed and, in some instances, reduced by the Rent Commission. The Senator can make what he chooses out of that. One does not remedy the situation by closing one's eye to it, or denying it if it actually exists.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I happen to be one of the unfortunate renters. My rent is not fixed by the commission. I recognize that if a fellow wants to spit out his venom against Senators he may do it, but I am not going to surrender my responsibility and put forty or fifty thousand tenants at the mercy of some shylocks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the Senator prefers, rather than putting 40,000 or 50,000 tenants at the mercy of some shylock, to relieve the situation at the expense of private owners of property rather than at public expense.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, of course, I understand that the Senator from Washington may make that argument. That same argument, however, was made by the railroads against the Interstate Commerce Commission at the time we established the commission and gave them the power to fix rates. This question has been passed upon not only by the courts of New York but it has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States has sustained similar laws not only in the District of Columbia but in the State of New York.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator from Ohio will make his remarks brief.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not mean to interfere. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] proceeds further, I desire to ask as to the document to which he has referred and which he has read, whether he has investigated the facts recited in that document in order to ascertain whether or not they are reported accurately?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have investigated them by very careful examination of plats and conversations with individuals.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then the Senator makes these statements upon his own responsibility?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I quote the statements from the parties whose names I will furnish if the Senator insists on knowing who they are.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not. Of course, we all know who they are. However, what I want to know is whether the Senator from Washington is prepared to assert that the facts are correctly stated in the document from which he is reading?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I am not prepared to make that assertion any further than that I have not any reason at all to doubt their correctness.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Has the Senator any reason——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. It would be quite strange, quite unusual, if such facts did not exist where so numerous a body as Congress is temporarily sojourning in a city and undertaking to regulate the rents of that city. It would be most strange if that should not bring about just the situation which is stated to me to exist, and the truth or falsity of which is very easily to be ascertained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator draws any inference from the general condition, I have no objection to his doing that; but what I wanted to know was whether he was assuming responsibility for the statements and is now quoting them as matters of fact?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I am not, personally.

Mr. MOSES. The facts which the Senator from Washington has read from the communication which he holds in his hand were published in full in the newspapers, and it is perfectly evident that nobody who has knowledge of the situation in connection with the proceedings which were held before the Rent Commission and the findings made by the Rent Commission could be ignorant of the premises referred to in this letter. I think the Senator from Montana is himself perfectly familiar with those premises.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana has no interest in such comparisons as are referred to in the letter, and he does not believe they are sustained by the facts. Is the Senator from New Hampshire prepared to assert the truth of the statements made in this report?

Mr. MOSES. I am prepared to assert this much: With reference to the particular premises described and characterized in the letter from which the Senator from Washington has read, I am prepared to state that it was a matter of public knowledge, which was published in the newspapers, that the Rent Commission made certain findings, reducing the rents of Senators and, I think, reducing the rent of a justice, and I am positive reducing rents for other officials of the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not the question; that is not the statement which is made in the letter at all. The statement is to the effect that the premises occupied by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States were favored against exactly the same tenements in the same row. Is the Senator from New Hampshire prepared to assert that that is true?

Mr. MOSES. I know nothing about the comparative rentals of the premises. I do know, however——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator does know that the house in question was a subject of consideration by the rent commission and certain rents were reduced?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is all he knows, is it not?

Mr. MOSES. Yes; and I know that certain people were——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator knows also that certain Senators have apartments in that house and a justice of the Supreme Court has an apartment in that house and a justice of the Court of Appeals of the District has an apartment in that house. That is all he knows about it, is it not?

Mr. MOSES. And I know that certain of the people in the category which the Senator has named had their rents reduced.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They had their rents reduced. That is all the Senator knows about it?

Mr. MOSES. That is quite enough to know.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But is the Senator prepared to say that tenants in the same row occupying identically the same kind of apartments were not required to pay exactly the same figure.

Mr. MOSES. I have not said that at any time; I am not prepared to say it, and there is no reason why the Senator from Montana should ask me to say it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has advised the Senate that all of the facts given in this report and now read by the Senator from Washington were made public through the press a short time ago.

Mr. MOSES. I think that is a fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Montana, who is familiar, he says, with the conditions, dispute the fact that the rentals of some of the smaller tenants have been increased?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the rentals of some of the tenants were increased.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the Senator admits the truth of everything that has been stated?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not admit the truth of everything that has been stated. I admit the truth of the statement that rents were very largely reduced by order of the Rent Commission, and that in some cases, I believe, there were increases; but I do not admit the important point to which the Senator adverts, namely, that the rentals of United States Senators, of a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of a justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia were set at a figure less than the rentals charged those occupying identically the same kind of apartments in the same building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not mean to be impertinent at all, but so long as the Senator has intervened and knows more about it than anybody else, I will ask him—he need not answer if he does not care to——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know as much about it as the Senator, if what he states from the report is true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator from Montana if his rent was reduced?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; my rent was increased. If the Senator wants to know, the rent of my apartment is less than the rent of other apartments in exactly the same row. I occupy the top apartment, and that apartment suffers by reason of construction details, and therefore I do not pay as much as others in the same row. The probabilities are that the Senator has been misled by that circumstance.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In other words, he is just giving us one side of the story, and he tells us the side of the story of the owner of the building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not quite understand the last statement of the Senator; but, as I understand him, he first stated that his rent was increased, and then I understood him to say that it was reduced.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator misunderstood me. My rent was increased over what I had been paying, but it was less than the amount demanded of me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is, the rent fixed by the Rent Commission was less than the amount the landlord asked.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; that was generally the case, I believe.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Also the Senator states that his rent was lowered, while the rents of some other tenants were increased?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; for reasons to which I have referred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is practically all that the article alleges.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; the Senator has not given the facts at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have given all that I was concerned about.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think that is right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not undertake to apply them in any way except the way in which anyone would apply them to satisfy his own judgment about the matter. I simply stated conditions which the Senator admits to be true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is quite evident, Mr. President, that the owner of the building is not satisfied with the adjudication made by the Rent Commission.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is also quite evident——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He has taken the proper course by an appeal to the higher courts. It is quite reasonable to assume that he would not regard with high favor the actions of the Rent Commission. I am astonished that the Senator, lawyer as he is, would come into a tribunal like this and quote what is said in relation to a decision of a tribunal by the defeated party before the court.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have been justified in it by the admission of the Senator from Montana that it was a statement of the exact facts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is in error. The Senator from Montana made no admission that it was a statement of the exact facts; on the contrary, he controverts the statement. However, I do not desire to get into any controversy over the matter with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator seems to think that the statement ought not to be quoted, because it is the result of the dissatisfaction of the landlord with the action of the Rent Commission. It might just as well be said that it ought to be quoted because of the intense satisfaction of the Senator from Montana with the action of the Rent Commission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I say that if the Senator came in here with a statement of that kind he ought to have told us that it was the statement of a dissatisfied owner.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It speaks for itself. I have quoted it as the statement of the owner of the premises. However, it is immaterial whose statement it is; the material thing is whether or not it is true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator quoted it as the landlord's statement after I drew the information out of him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to read a portion of this remarkable piece of proposed legislation. I read from page 7:

SEC. 106. For the purposes of this title it is declared that all (a) rental property and (b) apartments are affected with a public interest.

Of course, it is a question of law whether or not that can be done. The basis upon which it is done is that there are some people who are having difficulty in getting rental apartments; some people who claim that they are charged too much for them.

Mr. President, there are a great many people in the District out of money who are very anxious to have means to support their families or to carry on business. There are other people in the District who are well suppiled in that regard; so by the same token we ought to pass a law saying that all bank deposits of private citizens are affected with a public interest and appoint a commission to distribute them among those people who have not sufficient means. That would be somewhat parallel in principle to the bill which is now before us.

Then the bill proceeds:

and any unreasonable or unfair provision of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of such rental property or apartment, with respect to such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy. The commission upon its own initiative may or upon complaint shall determine whether the rent, charges, service, and other terms or conditions of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any such rental property or apartment are fair and reasonable.

Here is the definition of "service" contained in the act itself:

The term "service" includes the furnishing of light, heat, water, telephone or elevator service, furniture, furnishings, window shades, screens, awnings, storage, kitchen, bath and laundry facilities and privileges, maid service, janitor service, removal of refuse, making all repairs suited to the type of building or necessitated by ordinary wear and tear, and any other privileges or service connected with the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment.

In other words, if this commission, even after the term of a lease has expired, should find that the owner of the property, in addition to allowing the tenants to remain there, did not furnish adequate maid service or janitor service, or did not pay the bills for the heat or for the light or for the water, they could penalize him for not doing so. The bill not only puts the premises in a state of servitude, but it puts the owner of the premises in a state of servitude to this commission which is set up here in this bill, not only above other citizens of the community but above the courts, as I shall show by reading from the terms of the pending measure:

Such complaints may be made and filed by or on behalf of any tenant, and by or on behalf of the owner of any rental property or apartment, notwithstanding the existence of a lease or other contract between the tenant and the owner.

You may have a contract entered into voluntarily, with all the sanctions of a contract under the law. This remarkable bill, drawn up, I believe, by one of the beneficiaries of the act—namely, the attorney whose office is created and perpetuated by it—provides that this commission can ignore the obligations of the contract and fix such service and such rental as they see fit, notwithstanding these terms are fixed by a written agreement for a consideration with all the formality and sanctions of the law.

Then, the bill proceeds, in another part of it:

If the commission finds that the existing rents, charges, service, or other terms or conditions of the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment are unfair and unreasonable, it shall fix and determine the fair and reasonable rents, rates, or charges for the rental property or apartment under consideration, and may fix and determine the fair and reasonable service, terms, and conditions of the use or occupancy of the property, and may also order and require the furnishing of such service by the owner as it shall lawfully determine to be fair and reasonable.

If I know myself at all, I know that if I were in the position of one of the citizens of the District of Columbia affected by the terms of this bill and any commission set up under it undertook to order me to furnish service to somebody who was occupying my premises without my consent, I would see that the case went to the highest court of the land before I complied with any such invasion of the personal, as well as the property, rights of a citizen. I would rather live in a tent than to be the beneficiary of the strong arm of Congress reaching out to take another man's premises and give it to me for my benefit and pleasure, followed up by an order that he should not only allow me to use his premises contrary to the terms of an agreement which had been entered into, but that he should render service to me.

Reading again from the bill:

In any suit in any court of the United States or the District of Columbia involving any question arising out of the relation of landlord and tenant with respect to any rental property or apartment, except on appeal from the commission's determination as provided in this title, such court shall determine the rights and duties of the parties in accordance with the determination and regulations of the commission relevant thereto.

It not only degrades the citizens of the community, but it degrades the courts. Let me read that again:

Such court shall determine the rights and duties of the parties in accordance with the determination and regulations of the commission relevant thereto—

Not in accordance with what the court thinks would be reasonable or just. All through this bill you will find this commission magnified and its powers over private property swollen away beyond what is safe to vest in any officer or in any tribunal other than some judicial tribunal which is governed by the law and by the procedure of the law.

I want to emphasize again that the findings of this commission are made binding upon the courts in all collateral proceedings on any question arising out of the relation of landlord and tenant of dwelling houses or apartments.

But that is not all, Mr. President. Not only are the courts bound and tied by that provision in adjudicating the rights of citizens, but there is this provision on page 11 of the bill, line 15:

And said court shall not issue any injunction, permanent or temporary, restraining or enjoining the commission from fixing the rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, and said court is hereby divested of any and all power and jurisdiction to issue any such injunction.

I have heard a good many Senators—among them, it seems to me, some of those who are supporting this measure—animadvert upon the attitude of certain parties to industrial disputes in this country who took the position that the remedy of injunction by the courts should be abolished in so far as those disputes are concerned; and yet here we have a case where nothing but property rights is involved in which we propose to insert the long knife of congressional power into the jurisdiction of the courts and cut out from it the right to issue injunctions against a rent commission which is not even composed of lawyers, though its members are a law unto themselves, who are not governed by the rules of evidence in reaching their conclusions, who have no knowledge of that or of constitutional guaranties or the philosophy of the law.

Any final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term on appeal from any determination of the commission may be reexamined and affirmed, reversed or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, by writ of certiorari, to be issued by it, in its discretion, upon the petition of any party aggrieved.

That is another vice of this proposed law. Why should we burden the Supreme Court of the United States with jurisdiction of petty rent cases, which ordinarily would be tried in a municipal court under some ordinance passed by a city council? That is one of the absurdities of this bill. I think that is or ought to be offensive to the Supreme Court of the United States—that they are required by this bill to sit in every case which may be brought before them that arises from some order made by this rent commission, even though it may involve only $10, some trivial difference between a landlord and a tenant. The highest court in the world is to stop its great business and hear and determine a petty dispute of that kind! I am glad of the opportunity to point it out, whatever the vote may be upon his bill, in order that I may have the satisfaction at least of placing upon the records of Congress notice of the nature of this legislation.

I want to go somewhat further into the terms of this bill.

In section 109 of the original act, page 12 of this bill, there is a provision that—

The right of a tenant to the use or occupancy of any rental property or apartment, existing at the time this act takes effect, or thereafter acquired, under any lease or other contract for such use or occupancy or under any extension thereof by operation of law, shall—notwithstanding the expiration of the term fixed by such lease or contract, continue at the option of the tenant subject, however, to any determination or regulation of the commission relevant thereto.

Now, mark this language—

Notwithstanding the expiration of the lease, the bill provides that at the option of the tenant, so long as he complies with the terms fixed by this commission, he may continue throughout his life in the possession of the property of another man, or, at least, throughout the term of this law; and there is no reason to think that this law will not be upon the statute books long after we have all departed from these scenes.

If once a bunch of these beneficiaries, as one Senator said here the other day, get their teeth set into a job of this kind you have a propaganda and a lobby for its continuance every time it is about to expire, until it at last becomes a permanent law. That is the experience we have had already, and, as I pointed out a moment ago before some of the Senators came in, every time it appears in its reincarnation it is bigger than it was before; it contains a lot of additional offices. The last time it came in it provided a job for an attorney. This time there are jobs for two more commissioners and two more inspectors. That is the reason it is brought in now.

I read further from the bill, and I ask Senators to listen to it—and such tenant shall not be evicted or dispossessed so long as he pays the rent and performs the other terms and conditions of the tenancy as fixed by such lease or contract, or in case such lease or contract is modified by any determination or regulation of the commission, then as fixed by such modified lease or contract.

I wish the Senator from Kentucky would pay particular attention to that. I just read a moment ago a section which provided that notwithstanding the lease, at the option of the tenant he could remain in the building; that is, the lease is not binding on the tenant. The further provision I have just read is to the effect that the lease, while not binding on the tenant, shall be binding on the landlord. That is a new creation of law, a contract that is binding on one side to a contract and not binding on the other side. It is somewhat difficult to conceive that sort of legal obligation. Of course, it ceases to be a contract, and yet it is a contract in one sense. It is an obligation. The law takes the place of the contract and enforces the terms of the contract as against the landlord and gives the other party to the contract, the tenant, absolute liberty to disregard it entirely. I do not think that is fair; I do not think it is right. I think it is contrary to the fundamental principles of American law.

The bill reads:

So long as he pays the rent and performs the other terms and conditions of the tenancy.

"So long." How long will it be? It will be just as long as he wants to stay there. If he is a Senator, probably it will be as long as he is in the Senate. If it is somebody who has got what he considers a very favorable decision from the Rent Commission, if he has a permanent residence in the District of Columbia, it would be just as long as this law remains in effect, which will be for two years, if this pending bill is passed, and probably will be forever under the renewals which undoubtedly will be urged with equal force from time to time. Listen to this:

All remedies of the owner at law or equity, based on any provision of any such lease or contract to the effect that such lease or contract shall be determined or forfeited if the premises are sold, are hereby suspended so long as this title is in force. Every purchaser shall take conveyance of any rental property or apartment subject to the rights of tenants as provided in this title.

That is, every purchaser of property shall take possession of it, if he purchases it, subject to the right of the tenant to remain in it as long as he chooses to remain during the life of this legislation. The consequence of that has been, as the distinguished Senator from Delaware points out in his report, that it has defeated the purposes for which it was intended, and that the conditions sought to be relieved have grown worse, as I read a moment ago from the report.

I have upon my desk a large number of letters, from some of which I shall read briefly in a moment, to the effect that while there is a good deal of building of business property going on in the city, which is not subject to the terms of the existing law, and which, I understand, under a tacit agreement which has been reached, has been excluded from the terms of the pending bill—while there is a great deal of construction of business property, there is very little construction of rental residence property.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator give his authority for the statement that there is a tacit understanding that new buildings will be excluded from the operation of this law?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said business property.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand an amendment has been proposed the purpose of which will be to take business property out from under the operation of this law; but when the Senator says there is a tacit understanding, I resent it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know why the Senator resents it, because I was not referring to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. No; but I happen to be a member of the committee which has presented this proposed legislation. Of course, I recognize the fact that everybody who seems to favor it is committing an outrage upon the District of Columbia and upon some of these landlords. I understand the Senator's position, and I understand that he is reflecting upon anybody who may seem to differ from his judgment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator will not be so heated in the matter as to assume that. I credit everybody with honorable motives and base my argument upon the principles of law which I have stated, which I do not think can be disputed, upon my regard for the rights of American citizens, which I have always been taught to treasure, and upon certain facts, the essential features of which have been admitted here upon the floor of the Senate as to the situation in which we are all placed in regard to this. I do not reflect upon anybody's motives at all.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator apparently has not been very choice in his language when he has been referring to certain Senators and others. It is not to be assumed that judges are going to pass upon their own cases.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the reason why I suggested that Senators should not vote upon their own cases.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be so, too; but it may be that when it comes to the question of any taxation law no Senator ought to vote on any such law, because it might affect him. That is possibly true, and as a result there would not be any Senator or any Representative who could vote on any taxation law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think this is rather a special condition as to tenancy in the District of Columbia. At least, that is the basis upon which this legislation is sought. As the Senator at my side [Mr. MOSES] suggests, taxation laws recognize the validity of the constitutional guaranties. No one disputes the power of the Government to levy taxes. A tax does not set aside contracts. It does not set aside constitutional guaranties.

I have practiced law a long time, and I have very firmly fixed in my mind the principle that private property can not be taken for private use, either with or without compensation, without the consent of the owner. The violation of that principle is what I am objecting to and what I claim to be the effect of this bill. When the Senator comes to know me better than he does now he will understand that I do not impugn the motives of anybody who takes a different view from mine. I am too jealous of my own prerogatives to deny like privileges to others. I may state my position too vehemently. I try to state it emphatically.

I have very deep and profound convictions upon this measure. I believe it violates a principle which is the foundation of our institutions, to which I am attached. At the same time I have come to the time of life when I realize that about the most profound principle and about the most sacred things honorable men may differ, and I can not understand at times why Senators should assume that because we do differ there should be any impugning of motives. That is very far from my thought. At the same time I repeat that it seems clear to me that this legislation is a departure from those rules by which the government of our Nation has been guided from its foundation down to the present time.

Now I want to read somewhat further from this proposed act:

> The rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property or apartment shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property or apartment if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner provided by section 1223 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia."

In other words, if a man wants to get his house to reside in himself, he can not get it except with the permission of the commission, and upon a showing to their satisfaction that his application is made in good faith. He must humiliate himself by going and begging a petty tribunal to be allowed to have his own house for the residence of himself and his wife and children. I say that is demoralizing and degrading.

So, Mr. President, if he wants to construct new property by using a portion of the old building, he is not allowed to do that by the commission. He must tear it down completely, and yet, as a matter of fact, a great deal of the building which has been done in the District of Columbia recently—some of the most effective, some of the most valuable—has been accomplished by using a very large percentage of the old building and remodeling it into new property. But the commission can deny the owner the right to do that, because under the terms of the act he can only secure permission to rebuild if he shall tear it down or raze it.

In this connection I want to call attention to a statement put out under the name of Randall H. Hagner, a real estate man in this city. He said:

> A concrete case that I can cite is that of the purchase of an old building at the northwest corner of Fourteenth Street and Park Road by the Riggs Bank interests. The property was acquired for the purpose of immediately erecting a modern fireproof business building to cost in the neighborhood of $300,000, exclusive of the value of the land. This building was to be erected primarily to have a branch of the Riggs National Bank at this corner, and, secondly, to meet the demands for modern business accommodations in that section of the city.
>
> There was only one lease on this property when the bank purchased it. It was held by an Italian conducting a fruit store who paid $200 per month on a lease that would expire next September. As the new owners were very anxious to begin building immediately, they purchased the Italian's lease for the sum of $6,500. Upon receipt of this sum the Italian vacated his store. The bank then served notice on the other tenants of the building, all of whom held month to month agreements.
>
> At the expiration of this notice no one moved. The owners promptly took the case before the Rent Commission. It developed that under the law it is impossible to dispossess those tenants, because a portion of the building is occupied as apartments. Unless the new building which is to be erected contains a similar number of apartments, the occupants of the old apartments can not, under the law, be dispossessed. What could be more unfair than such a condition?

That is, if you have a building that covers an entire block and there are two apartments in it occupied by tenants, those two tenants can prevent the owner from tearing down that building in order to erect a new building, as was proposed in this case, and so tie up a business enterprise involving hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. MOSES. Involving a situation like the famous resolution adopted by a town council:

"Resolved, That we build a new jail;

"Resolved, That we will build the new jail out of the material of which the old jail is composed; and

"Resolved, That we will not tear down the old jail until the new jail is completed."

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is about the situation so far as this particular piece of property is concerned, as I will show by reading a few lines further:

> When the old building referred to was built, some 35 years ago, this section was almost in the country and was strictly residential in character. There are in the building half a dozen or more apartments renting for $25 or $30 a month.

And they want to put up a $400,000 branch of the Riggs National Bank.

> Under the present rent law the bank is prevented from making a $300,000 improvement—

And with the $100,000 for the land it makes $400,000—> without building a semiapartment house in what the District Zoning Commission now terms a business section.

In other words, they can not change an apartment house in an old residential section of the city, with the rapid growth this city has enjoyed in the last 10 years, into a business property under the terms of the act. I read further:

> An illustration is provided by the building, 1516 K Street NW. The development of this property was held up for two or three years for the above-mentioned reasons—namely, that the tenant who held a monthly lease could not be dispossessed unless the building was to be totally torn down. Ultimately the tenant purchased a house and gave up the premises. Apprehensive that they would again be unable to get possession, the owners kept this property idle for some months until they were able to sell. To-day it has the appearance of a new building, but 80 per cent of this building is retained from the original structure. The property was purchased for Redmond & Co., a New York investment banking house, who are using it as their Washington office.
>
> Another consideration which the proposed legislation is going to make more difficult is the financing of legitimate building enterprises. You realize that when a business building is erected ninety-nine out of one hundred owners need financial assistance. An owner takes his plans to an insurance company or trust company and gives a statement of the earning possibilities of the project. It is apparent that such financing is made difficult when there is no stability as to the rentals calculated, because they may be reduced to any point that the Rent Commission might deem proper.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Perhaps the Senator has already covered the point in his speech, which I have not been able to be present to hear in its entirety, but can he state from his investigation what the effect of the law has been thus far upon building operations?

That is the essential thing in the question that confronts the city. There are not enough buildings to house the people. Has the law thus far tended to encourage or discourage building operations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the best answer to that question is the report of the committee accompanying the bill. The Senator will bear in mind that the law has been in effect for over two years now. I read from the report:

> Your committee finds that the rental conditions in the District of Columbia which prompted the enactment of the original legislation, approved October 22, 1919, and the extension thereof, as approved August 24, 1921, continue to exist, if they have not grown worse.

There could not be anything more definite or specific as to the complete failure of the legislation, and I can not see how it would have any other result.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator will recall that when the bill was here for the last extension it was said it would not be necessary to ask for another extension, it being admitted that the legislation is really in violation of a well-recognized principle of business. It was said that that act would care for the emergency, but it is stated now that conditions have grown worse rather than better.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I remember very well the assurances which were given at the time the law was extended in 1921 that it would not be necessary to ask for another renewal.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Does the Senator know whether the statement made by the committee in regard to conditions being worse is true or not? Are conditions as bad now as they were two years ago, or does the Senator know?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have been inclined to accept the report of an adverse witness as the truth, as it is a well-known principle of law that when a witness testifies against his own interest great credibility should attach to his testimony. Personally I have made no examination. I am informed that conditions are at least as bad as they were, and I attribute it to this legislation, which discourages the building of apartment houses. I can readily understand how it would do so. Here, for instance, is another provision of the bill which I want to call to the attention of the Senator from New York:

> But in no case shall possession be demanded or obtained by such owner in contravention of the terms of such lease or contract.

That shows the one-sided character of the law. The owner can not violate the contract of the lease, and yet at the same time the tenant can ignore it and continue in possession indefinitely after the term of the lease has expired. When we pass a law of that kind, breaking down the safeguards of contracts which probably have been drawn with very great care by the owner of the property, telling him that it is of no benefit to him and at the same time that the tenant can enforce its provisions against the landlord while ignoring them himself, I do not think that there is much inducement to people to build rental property.

Mr. CALDER. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that in New York we have the same sort of rent law which we have continued under a recent act of the legislature, but we have also passed a law which has given to the man who builds houses to be occupied for dwelling purposes complete freedom from taxes on improvements for a period of 10 years. That has offset in a measure the injury brought to property by the rent legislation which we have there as well as we have here.

At the same time it seems to me that while perhaps against every rule of business, there might have been some provocation during the war for legislation of this character, when we were bringing into the Capital City tens of thousands of people and when rents were increased abnormally. But that condition has passed away and we are getting back to normal times again.

From my observation there are some houses for rent; there are some rental signs up that did not appear a few years ago. I think the time has come when we can do away with legislation of this character and come back to ordinary conditions of business again and encourage people to construct houses and to progress along lines that were workable before. I am listening to the Senator's argument with great interest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are a great many houses for sale, so I am informed, and I have noticed some of them myself. The statement was made that the owners of the houses would not rent them because they can not get a tenant out once they get him in, and if they want to sell they have to sell subject to the right of the tenant to continue there indefinitely as long as the law exists. Of course, under those circumstances they prefer to let a building remain vacant for a considerable time in order that when they do sell they can give possession.

Mr. CALDER. As the Senator suggests, the law has worked contrary to every rule and custom of business and has been most damaging to the city at a time now when the war emergency has long since passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I attach a great deal of importance to the judgment of the Senator from New York, because he is much more familiar than I with the subject of buildings and uses to which buildings are put. I am very glad, indeed, to have him corroborate the conclusions I have formed in regard to this legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator from New York give us any information about the amount of building now going on in the city of Washington compared with the amount during the last 10 years?

Mr. CALDER. With the permission of the Senator from Washington, I will state that I have made no inquiry in regard to that matter. I do not know just what the condition is here. I have had no occasion to inquire. I know that in the city of New York there are more building operations than in any other portion of the State.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How long has the rent law been in force in the Senator's State?

Mr. CALDER. Since 1918.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no figures on the matter, but I fancy there is more building going on in the city of Washington to-day than at any time during the time I have been here—for over nine years. I speak of the residential property and apartment houses.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can give the Senator that information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have a statement from Mr. John T. Healy, inspector of buildings, under date of April 7, 1922, showing that during the year 1918 there were 3,795 building permits issued, representing a valuation of $7,172,818.

In 1919 there were 6,920 permits issued, representing a valuation of $20,403,392.

In 1920 there were 7,581 permits issued, representing a valuation of $19,511,928.

In 1921 there were 9,290 permits issued, representing a valuation of $24,327,434.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator know what percentage of that is business property and hotel property and what percentage is individual residence property?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I could not give that, but there were 9,290 permits in all during the year 1921, and from our general information I would say that only a comparatively small portion of that represented the larger buildings.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Many of them are very small buildings for individual family use, to be occupied by the owners.

Mr. CALDER. May I make a further inquiry of the Senator from Washington? These rent laws, of course, apply to new buildings as well as old, but do they apply to the new buildings in their first occupancy? Can not the owner of the new building charge whatever rent he pleases for the new building?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; not what he pleases at all.

Mr. CALDER. When it is first occupied he can do that, can he not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; when it is first occupied by a tenant for residential purposes it is subject to the law. The tenant going in there when it is first built can stay there until the building comes down or until the law expires.

Mr. CALDER. Do the Rent Commission have the fixing of the rent in the first occupancy of the buildings?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They may or may not have. They may do it upon their own initiative, or upon complaint of the tenant.

Mr. CALDER. Under the operation of the New York law, when a house is completed and advertised for rental, the landlord can ask whatever rental he feels disposed to ask. After the tenant has come in, if an effort is made to increase the rent, that brings the property under the rent law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a very different law from this one. I have just been reading the clause which provides that the terms of the contract are not binding on the tenant at all. If a man builds a new house and rents apartments in it, and makes a written contract with those tenants, next week a tenant may go before the Rent Commission and allege that the rent is too high and the Rent Commission ran reduce it, and the tenant can remain there as long as he pays that reduced rent, even after the term of his lease has expired; and he, in the meantime, can require the owner of the property to furnish him service as it is defined in the act.

The commission may on its own initiative, if it sees fit, change the rent of the occupant of the building. Even though there is no complaint about it, they can make the complaint themselves; and when they make a finding the proposed act provides that that finding shall be conclusive upon the courts. I am glad to say that one of the courts of the District of Columbia has held that when the rental fixed reaches the point which they regard as a confiscation of the property they will not be guided by the rental so fixed by the commission.

However, the commission in many instances have fixed rentals upon property—so I am informed, and I have no reason to doubt it, because the tabulation is very much in detail—which yield less than 1 per cent upon the investment; there are other instances where the rentals yield between 1 and 2 per cent upon the investment; and yet, unless the owner has means to carry his case into the court and get a decision that that is confiscation in principle, he has to be content with the income fixed by the Rent Commission.

Mr. CALDER. May I suggest to the Senator from Washington that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has referred to the number of building permits granted last year. Does the Senator from Ohio know whether or not the buildings for which permits were granted were constructed? I know it is very often the practice for very large numbers of permits to be taken out and yet the buildings not be constructed.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I can not say as to that. I have here the figures for two or three months of this year. The permits are increasing all the time, but I have not gone into that question at all.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that the building department usually gives out the figures of the number of permits granted, but it does not always indicate the number of houses which are built. Of course, I know in some of the large cities of late a great many permits have been granted, but difficulties have been had in financing the buildings, and perhaps they have not all been constructed.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be true, but the permits have been gradually increasing here from year to year. I have not checked them up and I have not asked anybody else to check them up, but I thought the number of permits would give some fair conception of the building operations.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that it is information, and valuable information, but it is not always conclusive.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as to the exercise of the unusual powers which are possessed by the commission, I want to call attention to the remarkable exemptions granted to the commission by this proposed legislation from requirements which are imposed upon ordinary litigants. The commission are not required to give bond.

> The commission is hereby authorized—> to bring such actions without the payment of costs, and no bond shall be required in the case of any appeal taken by the commission from any judgment of the said municipal court in any such case.

Reading from the proposed act—

Why should the Rent Commission in litigation with an humble citizen be relieved of the same requirements that are imposed upon him in the way of giving bond or paying costs of the courts? I have already spoken of the imposition of personal service upon the owner, and I want to read just what the proposed act says on that subject. In an additional provision it is stated:

> If * * * the commission finds that at any time after the passage of this act, but during the tenancy, the owner has, directly or indirectly, willfully withdrawn from the tenant any service agreed or required by a determination of the commission to be furnished, or has by act, neglect, or omission contrary to such lease or contract or to the law or any ordinance or regulation made in pursuance of law, or of a determination of the commission exposed the tenant, directly or indirectly, to any unsafe or insanitary condition or imposed upon him any burden, loss, or unusual inconvenience in connection with his use or occupancy of such rental property or apartment, the commission shall determine the sum which in its judgment will fairly and reasonably compensate or reimburse the tenant therefor. In any such proceeding involving a lease or other contract, the term specified in which had not expired at the time the proceeding was begun, the commission shall likewise determine the amount or value of any bonus or other consideration in excess of the rental named in such lease or contract received at any time directly or indirectly by the owner in connection with such lease or contract.

So the convenience of the tenant is conserved and must be supplied by the owner, but the tenant himself is at perfect liberty to pay no attention whatever to any of the obligations which he assumes under the lease.

Here is another feature of the act. Ordinarily there are various forms of leases. If a man has a property which he wishes to lease, he or his business advisers determine what the nature of the lease shall be, what sanctions it shall contain, in what language it shall be framed; but that liberty is taken away from owners of property by this bill. There can be no lease of such property made at all except in accordance with the form of leases devised by the commission which is created under this act. The proposed act provides:

> The commission shall prescribe standard forms of leases and other contracts for the use or occupancy of any rental property—

That is a curious provision of the bill. In addition to the fact that it deprives the owners of the freedom of contract in the making of such leases as they prefer, it provides that the owner shall be required to use the forms prescribed by the commission—> and any such lease or contract in any proceeding before the commission or in any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia shall be interpreted, applied, and enforced in the same manner as if it were in the form and contained the stipulations of such standard form.

There never was such a playing of ducks and drakes with the ordinary sanctions of the law of contract as is proposed in this bill. If a man draws up a lease in a certain form, the bill provides that that lease shall be construed as if it were in another form.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, the bill makes two classes the beneficiaries: The tenant occupant and the law stationer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the officeholders under the act. The remainder of the people suffer from it.

These beneficiaries are among the active propagandists for this bill. It is difficult to understand otherwise the tremendous pressure that there is for its passage.

However, here is the peculiar feature which I started to point out: The bill carefully provides that the commission shall prescribe a form of lease, which is a contract between the owner and tenant, and then it is provided subsequently throughout the bill in the most specific terms that the lease, though made in the form carefully prescribed by the commission, shall not be binding upon the tenant but only upon the landlord. The tenant may stay after the lease has expired, may refuse to pay the amount of rent required by the lease, the form of which is prepared by the commission, and the commission, in their discretion, may support him in that attitude.

Mr. MOSES. It is wholly jug-handled.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; there is only one handle to it.

Now, I think I have come to the real divine spark out of which this flame of enthusiasm for the alleged benefit of the "dear people" has originated. I refer to paragraph D, on page 20, which reads:

> The Attorney General may, after the termination of this act—

After its termination—

> appoint the attorney last appointed by the commission under the provisions of section 103 to assist in the enforcement of this act. Such attorney shall continue to receive compensation for such services at the rate of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly.

Under that provision in the bill, very carefully inserted by the gentleman who evidently wrote it, even after the law has expired and had its obsequies, his office shall continue to live. He is astute, at least, in looking out for his own interests.

Mr. MOSES. That is a fitting provision to bring in at the Easter season.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it is a time of joy and hope. So, Mr. President, I submit this matter, there having been an agreement to have a record vote upon it. I feel that I have accomplished the purpose which I had in view of pointing out clearly the real terms and iniquities of the bill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 19, after the word "Senate," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the following:

> and three of the commissioners appointed shall be learned in the law and shall have been engaged in the actual practice of law before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for a period of at least five years prior to their appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to discuss the pending bill. I shall pass by those animadversions which were cast against Senators and the Justices of the Supreme Court, because, I think, when the Senator who uttered them has an opportunity to read his remarks in cold print he will regret that they were uttered.

Many of the provisions which the Senator from Washington has discussed were contained in the old law. They were, of course, considered at the time they were before the Senate and the House of Representatives, and they have been passed upon and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

I, perhaps, ought to say a word with regard to the provisions of the bill which relate to the fixing of prices for service, electric light, water, and so forth. Provisions concerning such items are contained in many of the leases, and the rentals agreed upon before any legislation on this subject went into effect included these services; and, for that reason, if it is thought advisable to grant any relief as between landlord and tenant, it is necessary not only to include the rental of the rooms or the houses, as the case may be, but to include these other services; otherwise the purpose of the law would be circumvented by permitting the landlord who furnished the light or the water or the heat to make such charges as he saw fit.

Mr. President, we can talk as we choose about the wisdom or the unwisdom of laws of this character. I recognize that there is room for an honest difference of opinion, and I say very frankly that I do not like such legislation. I would rather that the conditions were such that it would not be required; but, as I see the situation here in the District, the question is whether the Government shall control the affairs of the District or whether the tenants shall be at the mercy of a few exacting landlords. That is the only question here.

I recognize the fact that this legislation was for a temporary purpose only. When the original act was about to expire, a joint resolution or bill was presented which extended the provisions of the law for a period of eight or nine months—I have forgotten the exact time—and that time will expire, I think, some time in May of this year. It was thought by the District Committee, at the time the bill providing for this extension was presented that that would be a sufficient period within which normal conditions might be resumed.

Very much to the surprise of the committee, as well as of others who have considered this question, after this extension was adopted and the end of the rent year was in sight, which was October 1, many of these landlords who were renting to tenants, and particularly to the poorer class of tenants, refused to enter into any lease whatsoever, and many of them said that their reason was that the moment this rent act expired the rents of these tenants would be greatly advanced, or they would be set out on the street. I am not guessing at this. I know whereof I speak.

There must be thirty or forty or fifty thousand tenants in this District who are employees of the Government. Most of them are obliged to rent their apartments. The question for Senators to consider, it seems to me, is this: Shall we sit silently by and allow these tenants to be thrown into the street or permit these excessive exactions, or shall we try to give them some assistance?

This is not taking property from the landlords. That could not be done. A rent commission was appointed for the purpose of doing justice between the landlord and the tenant.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like the Senator from Ohio, if he can, to point out the difference in principle between arbitrarily fixing rents in Washington and doing the same thing in Chicago, Boston, or New York.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is a very pertinent question. There is no difference at all. The only difference in our jurisdiction is this: Here in the District the Congress is vested with plenary power, subject only to such limitations as are contained in the Federal Constitution. In the different cities to which the Senator from Georgia has referred the State legislatures act under the power that is invested in them by their constitutions; or, to express myself perhaps more accurately, they can exercise any power which is not prohibited to them either by the State constitution or by the Federal Constitution.

The Senator has suggested a very interesting question. Away back a number of years ago the State of Illinois passed a statute to regulate the charges which might be made by grain elevators, and there were distinguished gentlemen in that day who loved the Constitution more than they loved themselves who said that the legislature was interfering with private property when it attempted to do that; that these gentlemen who had builded these elevators had the right to charge anything they saw fit to charge, because the elevators were their property. This case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, however, and in Ninety-fourth United States Supreme Court Reports, on page 113, is reported the case of Munn against Illinois, sustaining the power of the legislature to fix these rates, and taking the position that when the elevator man held himself out in a public capacity, inviting the storage of grain, his business was clothed with a public interest, and therefore the Government had a right to regulate it.

Let me read just a paragraph from the opinion. I read from page 126:

> Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but so long as he maintains the use he must submit to the control.

I shall not take the time to read the long opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Waite; but it is the law, and it has been followed from that day to this.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator pardon me for just a moment?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Here is the situation: If some one were to come to the District of Columbia and put up an elevator, and other men wanted to have their grain—their wheat, their corn, their oats—put in this elevator, Congress would have the right to regulate those charges; but, according to the logic of some of these constitutional lawyers, if a man builds a great storage house in which he intends to rent out apartments for the shelter of human beings, then they contend, "No; we can not do that."

In my humble judgment if the Congress of the United States has the power to regulate the price that can be charged by a landlord for the storage of corn and of wheat, so also can the Congress regulate the price that he may charge when the father of a family wants to house his babies and his wife. That is the constitutional question involved, and it does not disturb me very much.

More than that, the constitutionality of this act was passed upon by our Supreme Court by a majority of 5 to 4. Among the four was Mr. Chief Justice White. Since that time there has been a change in the membership of the court, and recently, about the 20th of March, this same question was before the United States Supreme Court in a case which arose under a statute of the State of New York. I think the cases were the same from a standpoint of fact. The Supreme Court of the United States sustained the New York law by a vote of 6 to 3, Mr. Chief Justice Taft joining with the majority.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator has now taken the position that the regulation of the charges of an elevator is analogous to fixing the rents of a private dwelling or apartment house. The Senator, of course, sees that his logic carries him to the proposition that Congress could then fix the rents in Boston, New York, Chicago, or any other city.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I do not go to that extent at all. The Senator, I think, has overlooked the fact that under the Constitution, which provided for the organization of the District of Columbia, the Congress was given plenary power; it has the sole legislative power here in the District. We do not have that power in the States; and let me say, further, that the case to which I refer involved the constitutionality not of a Federal statute but of a State statute.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But, Mr. President, if there is any analogy between the running of an elevator and the renting of a private house that would apply to every city in the Union.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I think not. I do not think we would have the right to go outside of the District in a matter of that kind, and I think the Senator will agree with me after he shall have taken the time to investigate that question further.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time to refer to a number of letters that I have here, or to information which was brought to other members of the committee as well as myself as to the enormous increases in rents which were to be put into effect by these landlords on the very day of the expiration of the present rent act. That has all been gone into before. The question is whether or not we want to leave these people at the mercy of some of these landlords.

This act provides for reasonable rentals. One of these real estate agents called me up the other day and said to me, when the question was up as to whether or not this bill was to apply to business property, "Why, we have made more money under the rent act than we ever did before." Now others speak for them and say that we are taking private property without compensation.

Another argument they have used is that it interferes with building, and we have heard much of the law of supply and demand. The figures which I read a little while ago demonstrate conclusively that building in the District has been increasing. When the legislation for an extension of the act was pending before, probably 8 or 10 months ago, the argument was made that there was less demand for houses in the District, because a good many people had gone out. The fact is that the rents have been increasing. I think there can be no question about that.

I am just as anxious that the landlord shall have a square deal here as I am that the tenant shall have a square deal, and I think the machinery of this law demonstrates conclusively that that was the purpose of the framers of it, as well as of Congress, when it was originally passed.

The law provides that the rent commission shall hear these cases. They can be brought either by the landlord or by the tenant. If the tenant thinks he is paying too much, he can have a hearing. If the landlord feels that he is not getting enough, he can have a hearing. There have been some changes made here as to the course of appeal. Those were made largely because of the recommendation of the attorney for the rent commission. In his judgment, the cases could be more expeditiously heard on appeal if the appeal went to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia rather than to the United States Court of Appeals for the District.

It is true that we have provided for an increase in the number of the commission from three to five, and the reason for it was that there was such an accumulation of business before the commission that it was thought that if the membership were increased to five, and they were permitted to hear the testimony in sections, there could be a quicker determination of the issues involved. Those were the only reasons for these changes, and with the knowledge which the committee had we thought that they ought to be adopted.

I do not think I care to discuss the matter further at the present time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into any discussion of the general merits of this legislation. It has justified itself repeatedly before Congress, and, so far as the arguments to which we have listened this afternoon are concerned, they were made ineffectively against the legislation before the supreme court, and I do not desire now to review them.

There are some features of the bill, however, which I am sure ought to be changed. I invite attention particularly to the provision on page 15, to the effect that judgments of the municipal court, in cases brought before that court, shall be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. That section provides that whenever an adjudication shall be made fixing the rent of any building, and the landlord shall charge more than the amount of the rent so fixed, the tenant paying the rent may begin suit in the municipal court, and there recover double the amount of the excess rent which he has paid. Then it is provided that from a judgment in a proceeding of that character an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The Judiciary Committee some time ago conducted extensive hearings for the purpose of relieving the congestion of business before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and we increased the jurisdiction of the municipal court so that it took cognizance of cases of a civil nature involving sums not to exceed $1,000, and appeals were permitted from that court to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia instead of to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as had been the case theretofore. That plan has worked out admirably, and so appeals are now taken in all cases from the municipal court to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. I see no reason why appeals from judgments of this character should be taken to the supreme court, while appeals on judgments in all other cases are taken to the Court of Appeals of the District.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I move to strike out from section 12 the language to which I have referred. It destroys the symmetry of the system which was devised by the Congress for the correction of a great evil which existed here arising from the congestion of business in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. I do not believe there is any reason whatever for that particular provision of the bill, and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will consent to an amendment.

Mr. BALL. As I understand the Senator, he refers to language in the bill providing that where an increased rent has been paid by the tenant, he can recover it. I see no objection to taking the appeals referred to to the court of appeals, and if the Senator will offer an amendment to that effect, I will accept it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the question on the amendment be put, unless there is further discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state his amendment again?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move to strike from the bill the language on page 15, beginning with the word "The," in line 17, down to and including the word "commission," in line 21.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, beginning in line 17, strike out the following:

> The judgments of the said municipal court in such cases shall be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term in the same manner as determinations of the commission.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to invite attention to another court feature of the bill, beginning on page 11, adverted to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. It begins on line 21 and extends to and includes line 6 on page 12. It reads:

> Any final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term on appeal from any determination of the commission may be reexamined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of certiorari to be issued by it in its discretion upon the petition of any party aggrieved by said final decision, or by the rent commission, within 30 days after said final decision, but if said writ of certiorari shall be denied, said final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term shall remain in full force and effect.

That also introduces an anomaly in the judicial system of the District of Columbia. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia occupies in the judicial system practically the same position the ordinary district or circuit court occupies in the State system. The Court of Appeals of the District occupies generally the same position the supreme court or the court of appeals of a State occupies.

It would be just as reasonable to allow an appeal from the district court of a district in the State of Montana to the Supreme Court of the United States as from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no case anywhere in our system of jurisprudence which permits an appeal from a trial court jumping right up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I see no reason whatever for introducing that anomaly in this judicial system.

We have created a Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which bears the same relation to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia which the supreme court of a State or the court of appeals of a State bears to the lower courts of that State, and why now permit a writ of certiorari directly to the Supreme Court of the United States? The proper place for that to go, obviously, is to the Court of Appeals.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the provisions to which the Senator is now referring were prepared with a great deal of care, and we accepted the judgment of the attorney for the rent commission upon this subject. We had hearings upon the matter, which were reported. It was his judgment that, as this act was limited for a short period of two years, necessarily we ought to have these cases heard and determined as quickly as possible, and if the appeals went from the commission direct to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, they could be more quickly heard and determined than if the appeals were to lie, as now, from the commission to the Court of Appeals.

I think the committee felt persuaded that that was the right thing to do. I have not changed my mind about it. I do not think two appeals should lie—that is, one from the commission to the Supreme Court of the District, and then another from the Supreme Court of the District to the Court of Appeals of the District—but recognizing the fact also that there might be serious legal questions presented, it was thought that we should provide for a writ of certiorari to be allowed by the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the reason which prompted the committee to present it in the form in which it now stands.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. On the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, I had a talk with the attorney for the commission, and have heard him express his views concerning the wisdom of this provision. Of course, if you could appeal directly from one of the inferior courts of a State to the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case which can get there, it would be in the interest of expedition, no doubt; but nobody has ever thought of suggesting anything of the kind. It would, of course, cut out the supreme court of the State. Suppose I begin an action in the district court for my county. The question, we will say, involves the matter of the construction of a Federal statute, and if I could go immediately from the district court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States it would be a very happy thing to do, but it is not deemed advisable to permit that.

Let me call attention to the fact that whatever is gained in that way is lost otherwise. We are now asked to legislate to relieve the Supreme Court of the United States from the excessive burden of the litigation which is now before it. Indeed, a bill is now pending which I understand has the approval of the Chief Justice of the United States, providing that there shall no longer be an appeal or writ of error as a matter of right to the Supreme Court of the United States, but all matters shall be reviewable there by writ of certiorari in the discretion of the court. It is thus proposed in order to relieve that court of the burden of the business which is constantly accumulating in that court. Now, here it is proposed that in the case of every final decision of the supreme court of the District, which, bear in mind, is the trial court, the case shall go to the Supreme Court of the United States, it is true by writ of certiorari, and the court will issue this writ only in such cases as it thinks advisable to bring there for the purpose of appeal; but there is imposed upon the Supreme Court the duty in every case of examining the record upon the appeals, for the purpose of determining whether it shall issue the writ of certiorari or not.

I do not see why it should be desired to introduce that kind of anomaly in our judicial system. I do not think it is fair to the Supreme Court of the United States to impose upon it the duty of considering appeals from the inferior courts of the District of Columbia. I think that provision ought to go out, and I think that a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in one of these rent matters should take just exactly the same course as any other judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, namely, that it should be reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States as other cases are reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no reason, so far as I can see, why the regular course of procedure should not be followed in these cases.

But I also find no reason on earth for the language immediately preceding that to which I have now addressed myself. It is provided in the same section, on page 11, as follows:

No owner or tenant shall apply to the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review any determination of the commission fixing the fair and reasonable rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, except by appeal, as hereinbefore provided, and said court shall not issue any injunction, permanent or temporary, restraining or enjoining the commission from fixing the rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, and said court is hereby divested of any and all power and jurisdiction to issue any such injunction.

Mr. President, a right of appeal from the commission to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is given by the act. Then, why provide that no other method of review shall be resorted to or that an injunction shall not lie? An injunction could not lie in a case of that kind where there was a right of review by appeal, nor would any other method of review lie. So I see no reason for that provision at all. It might be construed into what I conceive to be a denial of justice.

If a case should arise in which the commission is proceeding in some manner beyond the law, in a way not provided for by the law, why should not the commission be enjoined from proceeding to the detriment or injury of anyone who is hurt? I can not very readily conceive of how they might do so, but if they should do so, why should we take away from the court the power to issue an injunction and restrain the commission from doing something that the law does not authorize them to do? That is the only case in which I can conceive an injunction to enjoin the commission could possibly be issued.

So I shall move to strike this language out, but I address the motion first to the matter of judicial review. I move to strike out so much of the language of the bill as appears on page 11, after line 20, and so much as appears on page 12, down to and including line 6.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, and it will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Strike out beginning in line 21, page 11, the following:

Any final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term on appeal from any determination of the commission may be reexamined and affirmed, reversed or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of certiorari, to be issued by it, in its discretion, upon the petition of any party aggrieved by said final decision, or by the rent commission, within 30 days after said final decision, but if said writ of certiorari shall be denied, said final decision of the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term, shall remain in full force and effect.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I likewise move to strike out the other clause, beginning in line 11, on page 11, down to and including line 20 on said page.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, line 11, strike out the following:

No owner or tenant shall apply to the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review any determination of the commission fixing the fair and reasonable rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, except by appeal, as hereinbefore provided, and said court shall not issue any injunction, permanent or temporary, restraining or enjoining the commission from fixing the rents, rates, or charges for any rental property or apartment, and said court is hereby divested of any and all power and jurisdiction to issue any such injunction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to say an additional word before the vote is taken. Of course, if it had not been already determined that the act is constitutional, we could very readily conceive of some litigant going before the supreme court and asking that the commission be enjoined from proceeding in some particular case upon the ground that the act is unconstitutional. But it has already been adjudicated that it is constitutional. Under those circumstances what is the reason for taking away the power of the court to issue a writ of injunction, which can be issued only in case the commission endeavors to do something the law does not authorize to be done? So long as it is proceeding under the law it ought to be permitted as a matter of course to go on, and it is not conceivable that the court would issue an injunction in such circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The READING CLERK. Strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The term "rental property" means any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto in the District of Columbia rented or hired, and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission, to be furnished in connection therewith; but does not include (a) any portion of an apartment building, (b) a garage or warehouse, or (c) any other building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose other than the subleasing or otherwise subcontracting for use for living accommodations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word with reference to the amendment. The law as now framed does not apply to business houses and general business property. I am willing to vote for the extension of the law as it is now, but I am not in favor of extending its provisions to make them apply to business properties of various kinds in the District of Columbia. I think that would be extremely unwise. The extension as proposed in the bill pending before the Senate not only extends the law as it is now but also makes it apply to various business enterprises in the District of Columbia. The amendment which I have offered strikes out that proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this matter was decided on by the committee after hearing from a number of people upon the subject. I have before me a letter which was written by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, which I am going to ask to have incorporated in the RECORD. It shows very great increases in the rentals. Many of those rentals have been increased, in my judgment, exorbitantly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

The letter is as follows:

MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION (INC.),
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1922.

Hon. L. H. BALL,
Chairman Senate District Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BALL: At a meeting of the board of governors of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association held yesterday afternoon the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas business property rents are being increased to an abnormal and unreasonable extent; and

"Whereas probably 75 per cent of Washington business houses are lessees: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the board of governors of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, assembled this 14th day of February, 1922, That the president of this association is directed to appoint a committee to advise Congress of the necessity of immediately including business property in the provisions of the Ball Rent Act and to make such representation to Congress direct or in connection with other organizations."

President Anton Stephan appointed the following-named committee. The said committee having given the matter serious consideration, we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States as follows:

While the special committee on business property rents believes that control and supervision of business and the person should be limited at all times, we are nevertheless conscious that when an extraordinary situation arises, the effect of which is to impair the common good, Congress should and must enact legislation to exercise a corrective influence.

Information has reached this association that during the last five years business property rents have mounted to heights absolutely beyond reason. Increases have ranged as high as 300 and 400 per cent, entirely out of keeping with the actual value involved.

It must be borne in mind that in practically every business property lease the lessee must bear the burden of all improvements and repairs, and indeed some of them carry provisions involving taxes and assessments.

The value of the dollar decreased 50 per cent in the most trying period that we have passed through. But that situation long ceased, due to the fact that practically everything except property rentals has dropped. Therefore those who are disposed to interfere with the common welfare through arbitrarily maintaining fictitious value should be made to peremptorily desist. The practice can only tend to operate to the disadvantage of the entire community.

One of the great mercantile agencies has reported that the total business failures, according to their records, for 1921 were 19,602, an increase of 155 per cent over the previous year, of which 13,999, or 71⅓ per cent, were among retailers. A substantial part of these calamities were due, we believe, to the inordinate rents that were assumed by retail merchants.

Experience has proven that a large part of the propaganda operating to increase rents has been developed through some of the large national chain-store systems, in addition to the selfishness of certain individuals who are unmindful of the consequences of their acts.

Straight-thinking men and women in America, from President Harding to our humblest citizen, are looking forward to the return of what Mr. Harding has so well termed "normalcy."

Such a much-desired situation can not be realized in the face of rising business-property rents, particularly where deflation has taken place in all other departments of business.

Your petitioners ask nothing more than a square deal from the business-property landlord.

If business-property owners are entitled to a greater return on their holding, they should have it; but we submit that in instances where tenants make repairs, and, indeed, have actually created entirely new buildings, with modern equipment, such as, no doubt, will last for 50 years or more, and did this upon the ruins of age-old buildings, abnormal and unreasonable increases in rentals should not be permitted.

The present admitted shortage of buildings is in no sense due to a lack of enterprise upon the part of the business community, but came about through the exigencies of war, when the necessities of the Government and the Nation demanded that there should be a cessation of building to conserve man power and materials for the then more necessary undertakings.

Excessive and unreasonable rents have the effect of increasing prices, increasing unemployment, and of generally creating a situation wherein discontent is nourished.

We believe that in the former amendment of the rent control act a grave mistake was made in exempting business property.

Since the absence of control demands have been made on lessees for increases, the undertaking of which can only spell disruption of established businesses and the increase of unemployment.

It is our individual conviction that if all parties join hands we Americans, and particularly in the Capital of the Nation, can develop a spirit of enterprise that will have a most heartening effect upon all the activities. But this is impossible if the landlord is to get the "lion's share" of the increment of business.

There is no reason why any business should be run solely for the benefit of the landlord or any one individual.

We trust that you and your confreres in the Senate and House will take immediate steps to bring about legislation correcting this great abuse of excessive rents for business property in the District of Columbia.

Yours very truly,

R. P. ANDREWS, Chairman,
LOUIS LEVY,
GEO. E. HEBBARD,
GEO. P. KILLIAN,
FRANKLIN W. HARPER,
Special Committee on Business Property Rentals of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Washington, D. C.

Mr. POMERENE. I have another letter which indicates rents demanded after the present law expires. I have the locations, but I will not give them.

In one case the present rent is $150, and it is proposed to be increased to $300; in another case it is $125, to be increased to $250; another $200, to be increased to $300; another case $150, to be increased to $325; another case $150, to be increased to $400; then follows five different places where the rentals are given as $75, which are to be increased to $250 each; then one of $140, present rent, to be increased to $500; one of $85, to be increased to $350; another one of $150, to be increased to $300.

It has seemed to the committee that while we did have objections to extending the rental law to business, there were very strong reasons why it should be extended to these business properties as well as to others.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, do the figures before the Senator give us a basis for comparison, showing what the same apartments rented for in 1915, 1917, 1919, and 1921?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I have not that information.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator has he any figures to show the prices charged in these shops back in 1915 and 1916, as compared with the present time?

Mr. POMERENE. I have not.

Mr. MOSES. It is a little difficult, in view of present prices, to waste much sympathy upon the poor, oppressed shopkeepers of Washington.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was simply curious to know from the Senator. I thought, perhaps, he would be able to give us that information. We are informed from time to time that prices are being reduced, that the cost of living is being reduced, that the cost of food supplies for the family is being reduced, and that the cost of clothing is being reduced. I wanted to know from the Senator whether there is a corresponding reduction in rents.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not heard of any corresponding reduction in rents. I have before me a three-page letter, which I would be glad to have read. I have already obtained permission to incorporate it in the RECORD, but I will read just one brief paragraph from it:

Information has reached this association—

That is, the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association—that during the last five years business property rents have mounted to heights absolutely beyond reason. Increases have ranged as high as 300 per cent and 400 per cent, entirely out of keeping with the actual value involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, to come in at the end of line 13, on page 20, of the bill. The amendment relates to hotel charges.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the committee amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 20, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 17. That the proprietor, manager, owner, or other person in charge of and conducting any hotel in the District of Columbia shall post in a conspicuous place in each room thereof a card or sign plainly stating the price per day of such room, and a copy of such rates for each room shall be filed with the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia. In case the hotel is conducted on the American plan, the rates for meals shall be posted in a conspicuous place in each room of the hotel. Such cards or signs, both with reference to rooms and meals, shall be dated as of the day on which they are posted. The rates charged for rooms shall not be advanced in less than 30 days from the date of the approval of the said commissioners of the written application therefor, and in the event an advance in rates is granted the same requirements with reference to posting of notices and filing copies thereof with the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, as above provided, shall apply.

Any person, firm, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this act or who shall charge any guest a rate in excess of said posted rates shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each offense.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby charged with the enforcement of this act.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment in explanation of the amendment to the amendment. I am not seeking to thrust upon the rent commission the duty of trying to ascertain whether hotel charges are just or unjust; I am simply seeking to provide some means of preventing hotels from advertising, in case of conventions and other meetings in Washington, that there will be no increase in the prices charged by them in order to induce people to come, and then practicing all kinds of extortion.

I have in mind an instance which occurred not a great while ago. A convention was to be held here and certain persons asked me to engage rooms for them at one of the best hotels in the city. I did so, the price agreed on being $4 a day. I offered to pay in advance, but I was assurred that it was not necessary; that the rooms would be reserved. When the people came—and they came more than a thousand miles—they found their reservation had been canceled and they were charged and compelled to pay $20 a day for their rooms.

The only object I desire to accomplish is to prevent hotel keepers, if a certain price is agreed on at a hotel for a room, taking advantage of conventions and other unusual gatherings to charge a higher price without notice and extorting all kinds of unfair and unreasonable prices from people who come here believing that prices are not to be changed by reason of such conventions.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that I caught the phraseology of the Senator's amendment, but as I recall it there is a criminal penalty provided for.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is true.

Mr. POMERENE. And that applies to the entire bill. My suggestion is that the Senator only intends it, probably, to apply to this particular provision of the proposed act?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest to the Senator that he make that modification of his amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I see the point of the Senator from Ohio, and ask permission so to modify the amendment that it shall provide that the penalty shall apply only in case of a violation of the provision dealing with hotels.

Let me say, in conclusion, that I have discussed this amendment with the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. BALL] and also with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and, while they did not examine the amendment, they expressed no opposition to the principle.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be modified as suggested.

The amendment to the amendment, as modified, is as follows:

SEC. 17. That the proprietor, manager, owner, or other person in charge of and conducting any hotel in the District of Columbia shall post in a conspicuous place in each room thereof, a card or sign plainly stating the price per day of such room, and a copy of such rates for each room shall be filed with the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia. In case the hotel is conducted on the American plan, the rates for meals shall be posted in a conspicuous place in each room of the hotel. Such cards or signs, both with reference to rooms and meals, shall be dated as of the day on which they are posted. The rates charged for rooms shall not be advanced in less than 30 days from the date of the approval of the said commissioners of the written application therefor, and in the event an advance in rates is granted the same requirements with reference to posting of notices and filing copies thereof with the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, as above provided, shall apply.

Any person, firm, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this act relating to hotel charges or who shall charge any guest a rate in excess of said posted rates shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each offense.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby charged with the enforcement of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], which I transfer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent on official business. I have agreed to pair with him for the day, but I understand that on this bill he would vote as I have voted. Therefore, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCNARY. My colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] is absent on account of public matters. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that my pair, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is absent, would vote as I have voted if he were present, so I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], which I transfer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and will let my vote stand.

I also wish to say that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is absent on business of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I have heretofore announced that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. Because of his absence, I had to withhold my vote. I now find that I can obtain a transfer. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired on this question with the Senator from Maryand [Mr. WELLER]; that if the Senator from Delaware were present he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from Maryland were present he would vote "yea."

I have also been requested to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Gooding	Lenroot	Spencer
Ball	Hale	Lodge	Sterling
Bursum	Harris	McNary	Sutherland
Capper	Harrison	Nicholson	Townsend
Caraway	Heflin	Norbeck	Trammell
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kendrick	Pittman	Warren
Dial	Keyes	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Glass	La Follette	Rawson	Willis

NAYS—17.

Broussard	Moses	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	Myers	Reed	Williams
Harreld	New	Sheppard
King	Newberry	Stanley
McKinley	Oddie	Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—43.

Borah	Fernald	McCumber	Shields
Brandegee	Fletcher	McKellar	Shortridge
Calder	France	McLean	Simmons
Cameron	Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Smith
Crow	Gerry	Norris	Smoot
Culberson	Hitchcock	Overman	Stanfield
Cummins	Johnson	Owen	Swanson
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Underwood
du Pont	Kellogg	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Ladd	Ransdell	Weller
Elkins	McCormick	Robinson

So the bill was passed.

SERVICES FOR SOLDIER DEAD AT BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, when the transport Cambrai, the last ship bringing home from France our precious dead, reached New York, I was one of the members of the Senate committee to meet these boys coming home to await the final reveille in their own beloved land. Pvt. Charles W. Graves, of Rome, Ga., was the last one to come ashore, and for that reason was selected to symbolize the thousand and forty-one soldiers who came with him. The President of the United States was represented by the Assistant Secretary of War. Both Houses of Congress were represented by committees. Several governors of States and many thousand soldiers marched behind the caisson. On the line of march there were several hundred thousand Americans who stood with bowed heads. On some of the streets through which we marched in Brooklyn the residents were all foreigners; most of them could not even speak our language, but their people had helped win the war. They removed their hats and stood with bowed heads as the solemn procession passed. Pvt. Charles W. Graves's remains were taken to Rome, Ga., his old home, and laid to rest by his boy-hood friends and fellow soldiers of the American Legion, who had offered their lives to their country. Nothing I can say will add to the glory and honor of Charlie Graves and those who gave their lives to their country—they made the supreme sacrifice. They saved our country and the world; yes, civilization for all time; and for all time the heroic deeds of our soldiers will be the proud heritage of the people of our country.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to-day to say more about Charlie Graves and those he symbolized—the whole Nation mourned their loss; but I wish to say a few words about the people of Rome and northwest Georgia, among whom he lived, and whose aspirations inspired him to noble deeds which cost his life on the battle field.

Rome is the commercial and educational center of northwest Georgia, and situated where the beautiful Etowah and Oostanaula Rivers meet to form the Coosa. The city is surrounded by hills overlooking beautiful valleys. It is one of the oldest cities of Georgia, and is the home of Shorter College for young ladies, which is the pride of our State. It is also the home of the famous Martha Berry School for mountain boys and girls, which has attracted the attention not only of our country but of others. Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, and many others prominent in this and other countries have visited this school, and judging her by the good she has accomplished, I consider Miss Martha Berry one of the most wonderful women of our times. Rome was the home of the beloved Doctor Axson, for many years pastor of the Presbyterian Church, whose daughter was the wife of Woodrow Wilson. It was here she grew to lovely womanhood. Her mortal remains rest in beautiful Myrtle Hill Cemetery, and the memory of her life is dear to all who knew her.

Mr. President, there are no better people in the world than the people of Georgia. It has been my good fortune to spend my life among the people of northwest Georgia, part of the time residing in Rome, and it is in that section, among those people, I hope to spend my last days. That section of Georgia was the home of the Cherokee Indians, and when they left the white pioneers who settled this section were strong men and women, who loved God and obeyed His commandments. Their forefathers had been soldiers in all of the wars of our country, from the Revolutionary to the World War, and their records in war and peace had reflected credit on themselves and their country.

Members of the Rome bar have always been among the leaders of the many great lawyers of our State. I was born and reared in the adjoining county of Polk, which was a part of the Rome judicial circuit, and many of the judges of this circuit would have graced with honor and dignity the Supreme Court of the United States. As a boy I looked with reverence on Judges A. R. Wright, John W. H. Underwood, Joel Branham, and John W. Maddox when they held court in my home county. Judge Wright was a member of the Confederate Congress, and Judge Underwood was a member of the first Tariff Commission. They have long gone to their rest. Judge Branham is one of the grand old men of our State. Judge Maddox ably represented the seventh district in Congress. He retired voluntarily and has the esteem and confidence of our people. He was succeeded by Congressman Gordon Lee, whose devotion to the interests of the people he represents is so well known to you.

Rome was the home of Dr. H. V. M. Miller, one of the most eloquent and talented men of his time, who was elected a Member of this body just after the Civil War. He was the only Senator elected from this section of Georgia until my election. The late Judson Clements, who so ably represented his district in Congress and served as a most useful member of the Interstate Commerce Commission for so many years, lived at Rome. In my public career I have been thrown with many of the leading statesmen of our country, but in my judgment the men I have referred to are the equal of any.

These and many others I could mention have distinguished our section. I would refer to others, but I must not trespass upon the time of the Senate. All of these men were self-made and accomplished great things by earnest effort, and their lives are an inspiration to the youth of our State. I have mentioned only a few of the many thousand I might name of both men and women whose heroic deeds, self-sacrifice, and devotion in their daily work have been equal to any of these. These men I have selected as a symbol of the lives of the people not only of northwest Georgia but of the entire State, just as the body of Charlie Graves was selected as a symbol of the thousand and forty-one soldier dead.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up for consideration House Joint Resolution 268, extending the present immigration law for a period of two years. I shall not ask to go on with it to-night.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before that motion is put, may I ask whether the Senator is going to proceed to-night with the consideration of the joint resolution in case it is taken up?

Mr. COLT. Not to-night.

Mr. LODGE. The purpose is to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this matter is one of a great deal of importance. Recently the President appointed Mrs. Moore, an expert on immigration, to make a visit abroad and study this subject. When the committee met to consider this joint resolution it was hoped by some of us that she might be invited to come before the committee and give us her views, but the committee did not see fit to invite her. Her report has just been filed, I think only a day or two ago. Some of us have not had time even to read the report, and it is most important that it should be considered in connection with this joint resolution. The Commissioner of Immigration has submitted some amendments to the present law; and I had hoped that the Senator from Rhode Isalnd would not move to take up the joint resolution for consideration until Monday, so that we might have at least two days to read the report of Mrs. Moore. I think courtesy not only to Mrs. Moore but to the President, who delegated her to go abroad and make this study, demands that we should have time to study the report.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator from Mississippi guarantee to read the report between now and Monday?

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped the Senator from New Hampshire might have time to read it. I have read most of the report, but I really want to study it.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator another question? Is there a ball game to-morrow?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether there is a ball game to-morrow or not, but I know that if there is a ball game no Senators on the other side will be here to transact the public business.

Mr. MOSES. I know that the Senator from Mississippi will not be here if there is, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Mississippi is generally here, but he never sees the Senator from New Hampshire here.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Mississippi has defective eyesight, I know, but I am positive it is not that bad.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask whether the Senator will not defer taking up this matter until Monday?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President. I think this is a very important matter that ought to be disposed of, because the present law comes to an end on the 1st of June. Has the joint resolution been taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration, with an amendment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, April 15, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 14, 1922.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Mrs. Addie B. McLennan to be register of land office, Wausau, Wis.

POSTMASTERS.

ALASKA.

Theodore Diederick, Tanana.

COLORADO.

Roy H. Horner, Wiley.

FLORIDA.

Walter D. Griffin, Bradentown.
George W. Gleason, Eau Gallie.
Hattie M. Flagg, Lake Wales.
Mary C. Thornton, Ormond Beach.

KENTUCKY.

Robert R. Burnam, jr., Richmond.

MASSACHUSETTS.

James R. Tetler, Lawrence.

MICHIGAN.

Henry M. Cosier, Bear Lake.
Benjamin F. Scamehorn, Bloomingdale.
Jesse M. Green, Roscommon.
John M. Klipp, Watervliet.

NEBRASKA.

Fred H. Herrlein, Deshler.
John T. Bierbower, Giltner.
Allen A. Strong, Gordon.
Harold Hjelmfelt, Holdrege.

NEW MEXICO.

Roy H. Smith, Tucumcari.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Gabriel A. Connor, Belhaven.
James L. Sheek, Mocksville.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Charles H. McCrossen, Ashton.
Alice S. Esget, Lily.
Ira D. Winter, Wall.

WYOMING.

Charles A. Ackenhausen, Worland.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 14, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thy name, our heavenly Father, for the hallowed associations of this day. We are reminded of the tragedy of divine love and the memorial everlasting of the Teacher of men. Clothed with humility, yet filled with power, it is the Father's heart struggling for infinite expression. O merciful God, may we have a noble conception of sacrifice and service. Impress us with the highest ideals of our national life. Strengthen us with a fixed and solemn determination to judge and measure all problems with intelligence and conscience. When life's day is done and it is evening time; when the sunset is flushing the river, the hill, and the shore, by the light of the cross may we find our way to the Father's house. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 275.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL M. BRINSON, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 21.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 27,000 additional copies be printed, of which 10,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 15,000 for the House document room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate Concurrent Resolution 21 was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 21.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 27,000 additional copies be printed, of which 10,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 15,000 for the House document room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House—to the Committee on Printing.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it the intention of the gentleman to press for a vote on the personnel question to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We will move right along and let that come wherever it may.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman does not propose to adjourn over if you do not complete the bill?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is not the intention.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will recall that when the Army bill was before the House, by agreement the controverted matters were put over until the last, and the uncontroverted matters were passed upon first.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In the case of the naval bill that could not be done, because everything else hinges on the size of the personnel.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding for the Navy Department, $212,250, including not exceeding $50,000 for the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call attention to a matter connected with the printing and binding that seems to me is the greatest abuse that comes under any department of the Government. Under the vocational educational arrangement that we have, the other day a young man who had already taken his degree of A. M., as I am informed, was prepared to take his Ph. D. I did not know that in the national training we were going quite as far as that, and I challenge the wisdom of the policy that does so, but he was required to print his thesis. Here is a soldier we are educating, and we have great cries about the soldiers, and under the requirements he had to print 150 copies of his thesis, which is required by Cornell University. They had to ask the Joint Committee on Printing to approve a bill of $482 for printing the thesis of a man we are training to get back to work. I do not know where the trouble is, but the amount had to be approved or the man would not get his degree. So the committee approved it. It seems to me that that is an abuse in handling the printing and handling all the matters with relation to vocational educational training. Such training should stop at least with an A. M. degree. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the proforma amendment

The Clerk read as follows:

TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT FOR WEST INDIAN ISLANDS.

For expenses incident to the occupation of the Virgin Islands and to the execution of the provisions of the act providing a temporary government for the West Indian Islands acquired by the United States from Denmark, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917, to be applied under the direction of the President, $250,000.

Mr. FESS took the chair.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TOWNER: Page 6, line 7, after the word "President," strike out the figures "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$343,440."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is the additional sum proposed by the gentleman from Iowa sufficient to make up the difference between the amount carried in this bill and the amount that we appropriated for the Virgin Islands last year?

Mr. TOWNER. The estimate, as the gentleman from Michigan knows, made by the officer now acting as Governor of the Virgin Islands, was $384,500. The amount appropriated for this year was $343,440. The Budget arbitrarily cut the amount to $250,000, which is carried in the bill. Really the amount estimated ought to be carried, but I have not offered that amendment, I will say to the gentleman, I have only offered the amount appropriated for the present year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say that the only reason the committee did not include the same amount this year as was appropriated last year was the fact that the Budget Commissioner arbitrarily made a deduction to the amount carried in the bill. The committee has no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. MANN. What was the reason the Budget Bureau made the cut?

Mr. TOWNER. Nothing except the fact that they were making reductions all along the line. In this particular case it would be utterly impossible for the Governor of the Virgin Islands to continue with the appropriation recommended by the Budget Committee.

Mr. MANN. The Budget did not recommend a cut in every case. There are many cases where they recommended the amount of last year's appropriation, and in many cases where they recommended in excess of last year's appropriation. Now, was this just a hit and miss, a guess of the Budget Bureau, or a recommendation wholly without any information whatever?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I know, there was no information except the estimate and the showing by the governor of the islands, which was very complete. That afforded not the slightest ground for a reduction from the amount asked for.

Mr. MANN. Without any reflection upon the Director of the Budget, it sometimes happens that there are cases where some employee of the Budget Bureau, looking over these items, says to himself, What is the use? Cut it out; and that is all they know about it.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman is very nearly correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER resumed the chair.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. I desire to discuss the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. May I inquire if the gentleman is going to stick to the text of the bill?

Mr. LONDON. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the broader aspects of the controversy which centers around the question of the increase of the personnel of the Navy. Instead of Wilson's fourteen points we have a multitude of treaties. The treaties are confined to the problems of the far Orient. These treaties mean that the United States has announced to the world that it is ready to fight for a place, if not in the sun, then for a place in the Orient; that it is ready to contend for a market in the Orient; that it is ready to fight for the open door to China, so that the Chinese door should be open to anybody and everybody who is ready to invade China. We have openly committed ourselves to the policy which has been followed by European nations, to fight for markets, colonies, and spheres of influence on other continents. Simultaneously with this announcement there has come an agreement that the number of dreadnoughts in the Navy be limited in the ratio of 5 to 3, so far as the principal Asiatic power is concerned.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Does not the gentleman think that this is an improvement upon the policy announced by Mr. Josephus Daniels of wanting to go ahead and develop the Navy until it overtops every other navy in the world? Does the gentleman not think this is an advance really toward peace?

Mr. LONDON. It is better than an unlimited increase of the Navy. It is undoubtedly better than an unchecked rivalry of armament; but the thing that is of primary importance in the consideration of this question is whether the great masses of the American people realize the importance of these treaties, whether they understand their meaning, whether they are ready to indorse this declaration made to the world that the United States will contend for spheres of influence and for markets in the Pacific. That is the really big question involved in the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I have never believed that the Navy of the United States could ever be strong enough to overcome the navy of Japan in Japanese waters. All the experience in the last war has demonstrated that for purposes of defense a small navy is sufficient. In spite of its overwhelming superiority, the British Navy has been unable to successfully attack a single German fort. In spite of overwhelming advantages, the German Navy was never able to capture a single Baltic port from Russia.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The British Navy was successful, however, in protecting the coast of Great Britain during the war.

Mr. LONDON. For defense purposes, as I said, the insignificant Russian fleet offered successful opposition to the infinitely stronger German fleet. What I am arguing is that for purposes of defense no large navy is necessary, and those who speak in the name of the defense of the Nation have no right to ask for a large Navy. That is the contention that I make.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then, why a Navy at all?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, the gentleman may as well argue that because he wants a steak he is ready to swallow the ox. From the standpoint of defense, Mr. Chairman, this question of the increase in the personnel is not relevant.

A very strange thing occurred in connection with this discussion, and that is the bringing in of the opinion of the Secretary of State. That is rather significant. What has the Secretary of State to do with this question? Has the Secretary of State agreed to maintain the ratio of 5–5–3? Is it an alliance in spite of the declaration of the Senate that these treaties shall not be considered as treaties effecting an alliance? The argument of the Secretary of State would be relevant only in case we agreed to maintain that ratio instead of providing that the 5–5–3 ratio should be the maximum. The Secretary of State has nothing on earth to do with this question, unless we take it for granted, as argued on the floor the other day—and, by the way, it was by a Democrat—that we must bow to the Secretary of State; that the Secretary of State knows things that we do not know; that the President knows things that we do not know. If it is to be a question of faith in the Secretary of State or in the President, let Congress abdicate its powers. If our legislation is to be based on admitted and voluntary ignorance, we may as well stop legislating.

Mr. Chairman, in spite of all these treaties, the expenditure for the Navy to-day is larger by nearly $200,000,000 than the pre-war expenditure. How can you justify it, not only from the standpoint of economy, from the standpoint of dollars and cents, but from the standpoint of good faith with the world? Is not the United States supposed to lead in the work of peace; and if you are to lead in the work of peace, how can you think of increasing armaments?

When I was interrupted I was about to develop the thought that the United States could never hope to maintain a Navy strong enough to overcome Japan in her own waters. It can not. In order to accomplish that the Navy of the United States would have to be many times larger than that of Japan. Nor is it desirable to keep alive the thought that the United States has any reason to wage war against Japan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary employees in the Office of Naval Intelligence, $13,380; Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except two persons at $2,000 each.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

There has been so much question raised with reference to the accuracy of certain information which has been given out both by the Navy Department on the one hand and by the chairman of the committee that presents this bill on the other hand that under this item with reference to naval intelligence I wish to discuss for a few moments the question of the accuracy of that information.

In the first place, I want to say that nothing in my remarks ought to be considered as any reflection upon the officers of our Navy. It is greatly to their credit that they are wrapped up in their profession; that they look at everything through naval spectacles, magnifying the dangers which threaten us and minimizing the resources of our own country. And it is greatly to their credit that they should think that over and above all the matter of naval affairs transcends everything in importance. But it would be little to our credit if we accepted every statement that is made by them without verifying the information so given.

I make this statement in view of the fact that we have had repeatedly in the past wrong information given us by the Navy Department, information that has been in turn given here on the floor by members of the Naval Committee and those that are interested in the bills which were before us. A very striking example of the carelessness, at least, of giving us information is found on page 456 of the hearings, from which it appears that in 1919 Captain Leigh presented the committee with a table showing there were 3,000 chief petty officers in the Navy. As a matter of fact it is now conceded that at that time there were 12,600. In the discussion on the naval bill in 1920 that occurred in this House a member of the committee stated that France was building nine dreadnoughts. Why did he state that? Because he had received the information to that effect from the Navy Department. Was it correct? It was not. France had not so much as laid the keel of any dreadnought, had not as much as lifted a hammer on any dreadnought.

During the course of that same discussion I stated that England was not then building any capital ships, and a member of the Naval Committee on the other side rose and corrected me. He said he hoped I would not place any credence in newspaper rumors that England was building no battleships. The gentleman was entirely incorrect. And why did he make that statement? Because the officers of the Navy had informed him that England was building capital ships at that time. Was it a fact? It was not. England had not laid down any capital ships since 1914 or been engaged in building any, and everyone now knows that to be the real fact.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have had some dispute here as to the number of men in the personnel of the English Navy. On March 16, in the House of Parliament, Mr. Amery, the financial secretary to the admiralty, gave out the official statement that the number of men in the English Navy would be 98,500, which is the number that was given by Mr. KELLEY, the chairman of the committee that presented this bill. Did the Naval Intelligence Bureau know this? If they did not they were woefully ignorant. If they did, why did they give the Members of this House the statement that has been repeated here on this floor that the personnel of the English Navy was 104,000? When they talk about England maintaining 18 capital ships in commission——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes further. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. When they gave the Naval Committee the information that England expected to maintain 18 capital ships in commission, did they know that in this same statement made by Mr. Amery, and also in the statement made by Lord Lee, the First Lord of the Admiralty, in the British official White Paper, it was said that only 15 capital ships would be maintained in full commission? If they did not know these things they were woefully ignorant. If they did know them, they have been misinforming the House and the Members of the committee in the same manner as they have before.

The trouble is that these gentlemen are so much interested in their profession—and it is to their credit—that they are——

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that it was officially stated that on the 15th of March of this year by the first English admiralty officer that England only intended to keep 15 ships in commission this year? I did not understand exactly what the gentleman said, and I would like to have him repeat it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That statement was made on March 1, as I remember, and published in the London Times of March 2 by Lord Lee, the First Lord of the Admiralty. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] can verify it. He has the paper right on his desk—if the gentlemen wish to look at it—that contains the information that only 15 capital ships would be kept in full commission.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank you very much.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will you please explain what you mean by full commission? Does that mean that the same number of men shall be on the ship that were on the ship during the time of war, looking through binoculars for submarines, and so forth?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. ARENTZ. What do you mean by full complement?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know how many men England places on a ship that is held in reserve, but even the ships which are rated as being in full commission in times of peace do not carry their war complement. The same statement which was made by Mr. Amery, and to which I have before referred, carried also the information that the complement of the Atlantic Fleet would be reduced by 16 per cent, and that the complement of the Mediterranean fleet had already been reduced in proportion.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the war complement of the Queen Elizabeth?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will have to ask the gentleman for that information, as I am not sure I could give it exactly. It is about 1,200. I can not give offhand the complement of each British battleship.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I understand about 1,200. Fifteen per cent of that would bring it down to about 1,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To be exact, it is a little over 1,200.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think it is about 1,200. We put on an average, in this bill, 1,014, and 100 marines besides.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is well aware our ships carry, as a rule, a larger complement than those of England. I do not understand why. I do not know why the American sailors are not just as competent in their work on a ship as those of England, but for some reason they have always carried a larger complement than the ships of England.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I trust in the discussion on this bill we will use a little common sense. We expect the naval officers to be not only somewhat prejudiced by reason of the fact that their advancement and success is to a certain extent wrapped up in these bills, but also by their zeal for their profession, and are inclined here, in England, and elsewhere to magnify the dangers and also the numbers of the forces of the foreign nations.

Now, a table has been given out as to how many men Japan has. I do not know where anybody got that. I do not understand how it can be obtained. Japan gives out no official figures in reference to the number of men she has on her ships. A chart has also been presented here showing the number of tons that England will have in commission and the number of tons we will have in commission under this bill and the number of tons Japan will have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know any way in which it can be figured out, taking the 15 largest ships that England possesses, that they would have the number of tons in commission that are given on that chart, nor, do I know any way, using the number of tons that represent the largest ships of Japan and the number of capital ships Japan has, by which it can be shown that Japan can have that many tons in commission.

Mr. Chairman, in no other country are statements of naval experts accepted as final. If we are to accept them as final, we might as well abdicate our function, so far as the Army is concerned, because on the same principle we should accept all that the Army experts say, which we have refused to do. In every first-class power the civil authority is above the military authority, and in every first-class power and by every legislator of such power it is recognized that the civil authorities not only control but they ought to consider the natural prejudices which exist in the minds of military and naval experts, and which influence the statements which they make. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the statement that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has just made relative to the testimony given by officials of the Navy at one time and another as to the number of petty officers in the Navy brings to mind a series of more or less painful recollections. If one questions why some of us take with some little measure of allowance the statements made by so-called experts, if there is any question in the mind of anyone as to whether or no we should accept as gospel what some of the experts say, let them search their own experience with regard to so-called expert testimony.

One in a position of responsibility here has, first and last, a good many more or less trying experiences. One is frequently called upon to take a position which subjects him to criticism, which frequently presents him in a false light before the country and often tends to make life uncomfortable. I remember one such experience when in the late fall of 1919 a great drive was started for the increase of the pay of the officers of the Navy. I was in sympathy with all that was said and all that was urged in behalf of these officers, for certainly the world never saw a more gallant set of men, the world never witnessed more heroic service than that rendered by the American fleet and the American Navy during the war [applause], and particularly that portion of the Navy which operated in the North Sea with the British fleet and that served in the sea lanes haunted by the sea wolves. And so these appeals found a sympathetic echo in my mind.

But I felt some responsibility to the taxpayer, to the man who pays the bills, as well as to these gallant sailors. It was said, "The high sea pay of the war no longer prevails; prices are high; the cost of living is great; these men must have an increase." Well, I may have been stubborn in my opposition. I was, I admit, hard to convince.

I found it difficult to bring myself to believe that under all the circumstances there should be an increase in the pay of all the officers of the Navy. But finally the appeal took a somewhat different form. It ceased to be made on behalf of the higher officers of the Navy. It come to be urged only on behalf of the commissioned officers of low rank and with great earnestness on behalf of the petty officers, the men down in the stoke room, the skilled men doing the hard work and having the heavy responsibility; the men of fine ability and capacity as skilled machinists or engineers, as practical workers, the men upon whom we must depend to keep the great complicated fighting machines of the Navy afloat. I listened to the appeal of some of the individual members of these corps, and I finally concluded that whatever might be the fact with regard to the commissioned personnel, there was a condition which warranted and demanded an increase of pay for these efficient, brave, working forces of the Navy.

The man who above all others, at all times and under all circumstances, urged these increases was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. He haunted my footsteps. He appealed to me with great earnestness, but always in perfect good nature. He was insistent; he was persevering; he never let up. He said, "This must be done, at least for the noncommissioned officers of the Navy. These fighting, working, efficient men must be better paid." In the meantime a large part of the press of the Union was aimed at Congress to compel us to increase the pay of the Navy all along the line, and as it was understood that other gentlemen in positions of responsibility were favorable to the increases asked the pressure came on the floor leader, the chairman of the steering committee, and for several months I was perhaps the best abused man in the Union.

The Navy would sink; the Navy could not function; the Navy would have to be tied to the dock if this was not done. This and much more along the same line was dinned into our ears continuously. Officers of the Navy, from admiral to captain, urged the increase of pay.

Gentlemen appeared before the committee of Congress, and Captain Leigh, in the presence of the Secretary of the Navy, gave testimony in support of Mr. KELLEY's bill, and his contention was that the pay was so low and the demand elsewhere at high wages for these trained men was so great that they were being drawn from the Navy into private employment at a rate that imperiled the Navy and the Nation. He said their numbers had been reduced to 3,000. That is the number; 3,000. Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Captain Leigh, experts, said, "We must save the Navy from this peril." I agreed that the pay under the circumstances for these men was low, and I was greatly impressed with the statements that the Navy would cease to function if the skilled men deserted in such numbers. I finally said to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], "So far as I am personally concerned, I will help you increase the pay for the petty officers, but for the present for no one else," and eventually a bill was introduced and passed this House to increase the pay of the petty officers. During that discussion we understood that this would cost a few millions. That is my recollection.

The bill passed the House to increase the pay of the petty officers. It did not increase the pay of any petty officer. "Add a few millions to the pay of the Navy, or the Navy can not function. There are only 3,000 of these highly skilled men remaining." That was the statement that was made. The bill passed the House and went to the Senate. In the Senate it was broadened and expanded and increased just as the bill now before us will be, until it embraced not only the petty officers but a large part of the commissioned personnel of the Navy, the Army, the Coast Guard, the Public Health Service, and it came back to the House. As the bill passed the Senate I have no idea how much it might have cost. Again we were subjected to criticism by practically all the maritime newspapers of the country because we were not willing to pass the extravagant Senate bill. Finally we reached a compromise under which the increase of pay covered the petty officers and the lower grades of all these establishments, the commissioned officers as high as commander in the Navy, and lieutenant colonel in the Army, as I recall.

Mr. BUTLER. Colonel.

Mr. MONDELL. Colonel in the Army.

Mr. BUTLER. And captain in the Navy.

Mr. MONDELL. And that increase was insisted upon on the claim that the cost of the increase would be less than $40,000,000 per annum. That was stated repeatedly on the floor of the House. We had it on the highest authority, expert authority of the War Department and the Navy Department, that under no circumstances would it go over $40,000,000. Our increase of a few million meant for the real workingmen of the Navy had grown to $40,000,000, but that was the last dollar that it could possibly amount to according to the testimony of all the experts of all the services. The fact is that legislation has cost us or will have cost us up to the 1st of July $140,000,000, or at least $70,000,000 a year. In the beginning it was to cost perhaps $10,000,000, according to the expert testimony, and it was urged by everyone in these establishments, aided and abetted by all the metropolitan newspapers of the country, abusing Congress and particularly abusing a few men in Congress as hard-hearted and shortsighted. Now it is costing at least $70,000,000 a year.

Now, how about the 3,000 men on account of whom we were first persuaded to give these increases?

During the discussion of the bill now before us Captain Williams appeared before the committee. This was just a few weeks ago, in the consideration of this bill. He said:

> In the hearing on November 12, 1919, in connection with the pay bill of 1920, Captain Leigh submitted a table showing that there were 3,000 chief petty officers in the service; also certain requirements for various sized navies. These figures, according to Lieutenant Commander Soule, are based on estimates of a very vague character. They were so manifestly in error that a count was made as of November 15, 1919, and it was found that there were 12,668 chief petty officers in the service.

It will be noted the statement of Captain Leigh was November 12—three days later the count was made.

Did they come to Congress and correct the mistake as between 3,000 and 12,668? They did not. When the statement was made it was probably not an intentional misstatement, but when it was allowed to go into the printed record when it was known it was not true, it must have been intended to mislead, and it did mislead the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. As further evidence of the value of the testimony of experts, Captain Williams, who gave this testimony, went on and said, referring to the difference between the two statements—

> I have no more faith in 12,668 than I have in any other figure.

He did not know whether either of them was correct. Yet gentlemen follow the experts and tell us we must.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman read the remark that I made in connection with that proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I will read it:

> Mr. KELLEY. Does that say that there were 12,000 chief petty officers at the time Captain Leigh made this statement?
>
> Captain WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.
>
> Mr. KELLEY. I think Captain Leigh's statement is nearer correct.
>
> Captain WILLIMS. Maybe so.
>
> Mr. KELLEY. Otherwise there would not have been any occasion for your coming down here and getting an increase of pay. That was the basis on which it was made.

The increase of pay was based on the facts, practically sworn to before this committee, that there must be an increase of pay because the men were leaving the Naval Establishment and there were only 3,000 of them left, and we must increase the pay in order to keep the Navy afloat. That statement was made in every newspaper published in this eastern section. "You have got to do it to keep the Navy afloat. There are only 3,000 of these men."

Mr. MADDEN. Captain Williams is Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, is he not? So he ought to know.

Mr. BUTLER. No; he is assistant.

Mr. MONDELL. Captain Leigh was sent here as the expert to testify before Congress, and he did testify, and his figures were just one-fourth of the figures said to have been developed by an actual count. On those figures of Captain Leigh Congress passed the bill which has cost us $140,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I wish the gentleman would read what I said further.

Mr. MONDELL. I will if I have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Now remember that the man who took more interest in this increase of pay than any other, the man who is largely responsible for the act, was urging it on the statement of the experts, because he felt his responsibility under the circumstances. That man, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], made this statement at the recent hearings, when Captain Williams testified:

> Mr. KELLEY. I know that we started in 1919 to readjust the pay because the number of skilled mechanics was not sufficient. That was in 1919, and it took us quite a little while to get it through. It was a difficult job, but we finally did get it through, and we based the whole argument—I made the argument at the time—to the House on the fact that there was a tremendous shortage of skilled mechanics. If you had had 12,000 chief petty officers at that time, I would never have taken control of the bill.

That is the statement of the gentleman from Michigan. Now I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask this for information: Did the gentleman state that the increase in the Navy alone has been $140,000,000?

Mr. MONDELL. No; in the four services.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the increase in the Navy?

Mr. MONDELL. About $15,000,000 I am told. I am under the impression it is more. That is not provided for in this bill because the pay bill expires on the 1st of July.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I sat on that conference on the bonus bill, and does the gentleman mean to say that the increase was $140,000,000?

Mr. MONDELL. Up to the 1st of July.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But only $15,000,000 for the Navy.

Mr. MONDELL. It started just as the demand for modifications of this bill started. It started on a claim that all that was wanted was a few millions "absolutely necessary to keep the Navy afloat"—those were the words that were used repeatedly. It was absolutely necessary, we were told, or the Navy would have to be tied up, and it finally reached four services and all the officers up to colonels.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Navy represented that there were only 3,000 petty officers when in fact there were 12,000?

Mr. MONDELL. We have the testimony both ways.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Was there not anyone on the Naval Committee that keeps posted so that they know whether there are 3,000 or 12,000 officers?

Mr. MONDELL. They were taking the testimony of experts. And now it is said we must take the testimony of experts. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10864. An act to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion, and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau; and

H. R. 10429. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credits to and relieve certain disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments in the settlement of certain accounts.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. I occupied no time in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, those of us who are interested in this bill are wondering why the sole question involved here of what enlisted personnel we need in the Navy should be shifted, and we go back an untold period of years to determine something about some petty officers. [Applause.] On the unsupported testimony of one side it would seem that they were not able to count the number of petty officers. That is not a matter of expert opinion at all; that is simply counting. Why should these gentlemen, if they are willing to face this question of personnel, seek to befog the issue and go back two years to talk about petty officers? Have we not enough here of this question to engage our attention? Is not this enlisted personnel question confronting us? What has that to do with the petty officers some unknown years ago?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is a distinguished lawyer. Does he not think that it tends to illustrate the value, or the lack of value, of expert testimony?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think so at all, and I do not think that the gentleman, who is an able lawyer, if a mistake was made by some unknown person on a question would claim that it should be taken as a precedent in a court of law. He very well knows that it would not, and that it would not carry a feather's weight.

Now, gentlemen, let us take the statement of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, for whom I personally, and I believe this House, has the highest respect. If the figures in this bill are to succeed, if the chairman of the subcommittee is to carry this number, it must be upon his speech. He addressed this House with rare eloquence. The question is whether he did it upon logic, upon figures, and that is what I want to examine and not the petty officers of two or three years ago. [Laughter and applause.]

First, let us take the chairman's first statement. The committee does not come in here urging that we must stand by the Budget. They could not defend that claim, because the first statement of the chairman of the subcommittee was that this bill carries $233,000,000, and that that was a cut of $192,000,000 under the Budget estimate. Ah, but you say the chairman afterwards said that that was previous to the settlement of the disarmament conference. That is true, but as the result of the disarmament conference, what was cut out? Simply the construction program, and we appropriated last year $90,000,000 for the construction, and that was all. So they have cut off $102,000,000 from the Budget, aside from construction, and they can not urge the Budget as a reason for sustaining the bill.

The chairman next says, "I assume we should maintain an 18 capital ship program." And then he says—and I call your attention to his language—"on this, and this only, we were in accord with the department." He says the naval experts disagree as to the number of men needed to man the battleships, and what does he say about them? In the next sentence the chairman of the subcommittee says "they are capable and patriotic men." They are not the kind of men described by the Republican leader; they are not the kind of men described by the gentleman from Iowa. We have the characterization of these men by the chairman of the subcommittee, and his is the language I have quoted. He says these experts are not only "capable but patriotic men." So we start out with these men—"capable and patriotic men"—advising a larger enlisted personnel than the chairman of the subcommittee reports.

The chairman, however, rejects the advice of all of the naval experts, and says that the way to determine was to count and see how many men they had on the battleships on a day which he selected, and he says they had 48,000 men on the capital ships. He says they had 19,861 men on the subsidiary ships, and he says the subsidiary ships were "only half manned," and then he asks why should not the Navy Department have drawn from the ships only half manned enough men to make up the full complement for the capital ships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Did the gentleman say——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. Let me give the gentleman's own words. Here is what the gentleman said:

> If they had not enough men on the capital ships, would they not have taken off enough from their surplus destroyers?

The surplus destroyers in the gentleman's own language were only half manned.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Certainly, and they should not have been manned at all; simply laid up with caretakers. They are a surplus above the treaty Navy.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, in the name of common sense, in the name of all that is fair and reasonable, how in the name of the eloquence, even defying logic, which the gentleman used, can he say that the destroyers of the United States, all of the ships except simply the capital ships, should be absolutely abandoned, to go to destruction? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a moment——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, I have not finished my quotation. When I do I shall yield.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a moment right there, before the gentleman goes on.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Wait a moment, and then I will yield. Then the gentleman followed that by this statement:

> Do you think the naval officers permitted the capital ships to go unmanned when 19,181 were carried on vessels only half manned?

And he called that a reservoir. He calls this well, which has been half exhausted, these ships which were half manned, these ships that did not have enough men on them to protect them—he calls them a reservoir. In the name of common sense, in the name of anything except the great eloquence with which the gentleman from Michigan presented this question, how can you draw from such a reservoir as that? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do. And I am going to ask for five minutes' additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The suggestion that I made the other day was that if they were short of men on the capital ships the natural thing would be to take them off the destroyers, which were only half manned anyhow, and could have been laid up entirely.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman said that 204 of them were half manned, and he would draw the men off these ships that did not have enough men on them to preserve them.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But the Navy Department does not propose to keep them in commission next year, does it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, that does not answer it. They are going to abandon all but 103, but that is no answer at all, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I just want to get the thing clear in the gentleman's mind——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, there is no doubt about that. The matter is clear in my mind. There is not even a fog. Even the gentleman's eloquence could not obscure it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The gentleman has quoted the exact language of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have quoted it literally from the RECORD.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is the point I want to call to the gentleman's attention——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I don't think the gentleman has a point.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That might be so. A point is not large. This is what I would like to ask the gentleman: If next year they are willing to place 200 destroyers out of commission entirely, without any men on them, how does the gentleman say that it would have hurt those destroyers to have taken enough men off them to make up what they claim they were short on the capital ships?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think that is in line with the gentleman's logic.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would be under great obligations to the gentleman if he would answer the question, if he can.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am going to answer it. Give me a chance. The gentleman says that because we had these ships and we had not agreed to give up any of them, because the disarmament conference had not been called and had not sat, because we did not know that we were going to abandon one of those ships, because we were only then equal to Great Britain and far below Japan, before we had made any agreement at all we should have abandoned a large part of the Navy of the United States. Is that logic? Is that anything but eloquence? Does that stand examination? Does that stand a calm review of reason? That is the reason he says they could have taken men off these ships, because before we had decided on any policy of abandonment of any of them we should have abandoned a part of them.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, all of the gentleman's speech is founded on just that kind of logic and is not a whit more substantial.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman will recognize that last year we had in commission many submarine chasers and what are known as Eagle boats, and that the Navy Department recognizes now that they have no military value whatever. Does the gentleman think it would have hurt to take the men off those ships that have no military value and transfer them to the battleships?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, the gentleman from Alabama has asked a question which, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, he ought to know is not fair. He knows that on the ships of which he is talking there were a little over 3,000 men. Could you draw 12,000 men from 3,000? The gentleman knows it could not be done.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman thinks it would be better to take them off the battleships and leave them on the subchasers?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think that that statement, illogical, unsound, having no relevancy to anything that has been said, is just as sound as any part of the gentleman's argument. Here is the gentleman's conclusion. He says:

> If they had that reservoir of men from which they could have drawn and failed to do so, it convicts them either of having enough or else not properly administering the Navy.

Let us answer the two charges. Let us take the charge of not having properly administered the Navy, and to answer let us quote the very next sentence of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I answer the second charge of improperly administering the Navy in the language of the gentleman from Michigan. He followed what he said by this sentence:

> And I know they are capable and patriotic men.

So, being capable, having the ability to administer the Navy, being patriotic, wanting to administer it well, there can not be any question that the charge that they administered it improperly is without any foundation of fact whatever. He says it must have convicted them of having men enough in this great reservoir. We have examined that charge of the reservoir, we have found of what the reservoir consisted, and we have found there was not any such reservoir at all. So the gentleman is wrong in both of his bases for bringing in the 67,000 men.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman quoted the gentleman from Michigan as stating that with the complement of men he allowed the battleships would be only half manned. I am sure the gentleman did not intend to do that?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said that the destroyers were only half manned and that he was going to draw from the destroyers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman considered the number of men it requires to man a battleship?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am no expert on that; neither is the gentleman. He lives so far away that he knows that these far-shooting guns can not reach him. [Laughter.] He feels secure, and does not pretend to be an expert, and his opinion is not worth anything.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman knows that I did not state those matters as a matter of opinion. I stated the official figures.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They are all against you. You have not a man with you who is an expert on the question. Every officer in the Navy, the Secretary of the Navy, the President, and all others who have knowledge and experience are on the other side. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The same gentleman that told us that France was building nine battleships.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know anything about that except what the gentleman from Iowa said on the floor this morning, and we are not going to decide the case on an ex parte statement. You may just as well be wrong in your statement as the other side. I heard the gentleman the other day in a colloquy with the gentleman from Texas as to helium, and we found out when he came on the floor that he knew the facts and that the gentleman from Iowa was mistaken. And we are confident that he is mistaken this morning, able and experienced legislator as he is and as I recognize him to be.

The gentleman says there are 48,000 men afloat on the battleships. I would like the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to this. The chairman of the subcommittee stated positively that there are 48,000 men afloat on battleships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no. I never said anything of the sort. The report gives the exact number, 18,250.

Mr. DEMPSEY. You said there were 48,000 men——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Not on capital ships.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Afloat in the Navy. Which did you say?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What class of ships is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Here is what he said:

So we have allowed 50,000 men for the Navy afloat, which is a couple of thousand more than are carried to-day on the ships comprising the 18 battleship fleet, as set forth in the committee's report.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is very positive in that statement, but I would call his attention to the fact——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Those figures were furnished by the Navy Department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me show you that you were probably wrong about that, and that you admit you are wrong about it. A little later in the debate the chairman of the subcommittee was asked how many men there were afloat in the Navy to-day, and he said:

Why, I have been trying to find out for weeks and months. I have been making all the investigation possible for a man to make, and I am unable to this present hour to ascertain. One report is that there are 67,000 and the other is that there are 71,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman say that the discrepancy I point out does not exist?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it is correct that you do not know; yes. [Applause.] I think it is correct that you do not know in both instances. I think it is correct that you do not know enough about the men on the capital ships, and that you do not know any more about the men afloat. I think you do not know about these matters, and that you ought to rely on the experts and officers that do know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman deny the fact that these figures set down in the report are the figures furnished by the department as of the number on those various ships on the date mentioned?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] say that these officers of the Navy do not even know how to count. That is the basis on which you are going to the House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What do you say?

Mr. DEMPSEY. You say they can not even count the number of men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I asked a simple question. Is the number set down against each ship in this report the number the Navy Department gave the committee or not?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think the gentleman is correct, because he says he has been trying to find out the number of men afloat for weeks and months past, and that he is utterly unable to find out.

Now, gentlemen, just one moment and I will conclude. As the result of a great conference which marks a period in the world's history the United States, the most prosperous and, without boasting, let us say, the greatest Nation in the world, for the first time in its history of over 130 years has reached the proud position where it is conceded an equality upon the seas with Great Britain, although we have heard time out of mind that Britannia ruled the waves. And having gained that great position, having won that proud eminence, having been placed where we have the right to be equal to Great Britain, it is now proposed——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will yield in a moment.

Having reached that proud position, it is proposed that we voluntarily abandon it.

Now, figures are not misleading. You can not disguise the fact that, taking the figures of the chairman of the subcommittee, of 98,500 there are 38,000 men—civilians—who man the English colliers and the other subsidiary ships, and so it brings the number of men in the English Navy far above 67,000, even if we include the marines, which properly should not be included.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman did not mean 38,000 men, did he, on the British colliers?

Mr. DEMPSEY. On the British colliers and subsidiary ships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is that the statement of the Navy Department?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, whom I regard as the best authority on this question in the United States.

Throughout this debate there has been underlying it a criticism of the officers and enlisted men of the American Navy, on the ground that they are wrong in their estimates, and willfully wrong; that, in the language of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], they have failed to make corrections when they discovered mistakes; and for that reason it has been urged that we should abide by the committee's report. Why, there is not one of us who is not proud of the record in history of the American Navy. [Applause.]

There is not one of us who does not look with pride at the Navy from the time of John Paul Jones down to Admiral Sims, and with the confident and unfaltering belief that the American fleet of the future will equal the Navy of the past in its glory and in its defense of the United States. [Applause.]

Miss ROBERTSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, later I wish to be recognized in opposition to the pending motion.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, you know when a woman goes into a new room and waits awhile she is always looking around and thinking what she would do to improve its furniture. [Laughter.] I would like to improve the furniture of the House of Representatives. On either side, both on the minority and on the majority side, and in view of every Member, I would have a map of the United States. [Applause.] If that map were there to-day, as I would like to see it, at the center of the United States I would put the great big red heart that is the emblem of Kansas City. [Applause.] That is because it is the center of the country. You know east and west on the two coasts you have the arms and legs. New York may claim to have the brains, hidden in a careful skull. But we in the Middle West have the great pulsating heart that sends the red blood throughout the body. We raise the food to nourish the national body. We are not to be despised, and we are not necessarily in favor of a small Navy, even if we are inland.

I have some figures here, but I am not going to read them. They say figures do not lie. These figures tell how many men were in the Navy from those States of the Middle West, reaching over as far as Wyoming, where the great plains, spreading like the waves of the sea, would call upon the young men to think of the sea, perhaps, and hear its call. [Applause.] Of our boys in Oklahoma there were 637 who went from my own district, composed of eight counties, and Oklahoma had about 7,000 men in the Navy during the war.

I saw many of those boys go. They went and made a splendid success of their service. I was laughing a little not long ago about our boys who went to war. I said, "It cost me a little more to send a sailor boy to the war than an Army boy, because the Army boy had only to have a Testament; that is all he could put in his old kit bag, while a Navy boy's pack would take a whole Bible. [Applause.] They came back well trained, so many of them, and it is good training, this training that the boys receive in the Navy, where Oklahoma still had last year 1,500 in the service.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would like to call attention to the fact that the number of men in training is cut down from 5,000 to 2,000 in the bill as reported by the committee.

Miss ROBERTSON. I thank you. I can not give you more figures now, for lack of time. I have just had my orders through one branch of the most powerful lobby in Washington. "The most powerful lobby in Washington," the woman's lobby—these figures I have not time to give—put down here all the millions of expert women who say what Members of this House are expected to do. Here are the orders that I got this morning from one branch of this lobby of women experts. [Laughter.] I read:

1749 Corcoran street, Washington, D. C., April 13, 1922.

It was addressed on the outside "To the Hon. ALICE M. ROBERTSON," but it says here "Dear sir." [Laughter.] And there is going to be one less member, probably, of the American Association of University Women. I plead guilty to membership.

That association has a number of local branches in your States, too, gentlemen. I read:

1749 CORCORAN STREET,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1922.

DEAR SIR: The American Association of University Women, which has a number of local branches in your State, in convention assembled on April 8, 1922, in Kansas City, Mo., passed a resolution earnestly urging Congress to take immediate steps for the reduction of our Army and Navy. We therefore ask your support for the Kelley naval appropriation bill now pending before the House.

Respectfully,

LAURA PUFFER MORGAN,
MRS. RAYMOND MORGAN,
Legislative Representatives.

It seems the Army bill and the Navy bill did not give to some members of "the most powerful lobby in Washington" all they wanted in the way of high-priced welfare jobs. They had women in the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments. We understood they were of the utmost value in helping out in that conference; that they collated facts and figures, I believe. We have heard that the estimate for the Navy is based largely on what grew out of that conference. Kansas City, holding still another convention, is again heard from. I quote this from last evening's Washington Star:

PROPOSED AS VICE CURE—DR. VALERIA H. PARKER ADVOCATES WOMEN'S ACTIVITY IN POLITICS.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 13.—Active participation of women in politics as a cure for vice was urged by Dr. Valeria H. Parker, executive secretary of the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, at the public health institute being held in Kansas City.

Doctor Parker said she did not advocate "women of the type of Representative ALICE ROBERTSON, of Oklahoma, for office." Miss ROBERTSON, she said, "has not the viewpoint that women want, but purely a financial view. Women who will push legislation against all forms of vice are needed."

[Laughter.]

You will note she says, "Miss ROBERTSON has not the viewpoint that women want, but purely a financial view." [Laughter.] She has been too economical to suit the most powerful lobby in Washington. She has not voted to carry out extravagance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the lady from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the lady may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Miss ROBERTSON. She has not met the approval of the most powerful lobby in Washington because she has felt that in these times of need and stress she, who has lived close to the farm women and children of that most wonderful State which she represents, should consider their condition. Ours was not a profiteering State, because Oklahoma gave everything in the war and received no financial gains from it. In eastern Oklahoma we had not a military camp. In the whole State we had not a munition factory, nor airplane works, nor steel mills; we had absolutely nothing to bring us easy money, but we raised the food, and we sent our red-blooded men to help. [Applause.] And because I have been near to these farm people who sent me here—it was not the rich towns of my district; it was the men and the women on the farms who sent me here—I have voted to reduce in every way that I possibly could the taxation that would come on our people. [Applause.]

Miss ROBERTSON—

She said—

has not the viewpoint that women want, but purely a financial view.

Am I so rich from saving the money that might have been spent on educating children, and that sort of thing; they doubtless have looked into my record and found how much wealth I have accumulated by withholding from those who needed help.

Women who will push legislation against all forms of vice are needed.

[Laughter.]

And so I am thinking of those red-blooded boys down there and thinking of the people of Oklahoma. We believe in the Navy. We believe in our country. Look at the map with me. We have no shipyards. [Applause.] We have no labor question, of votes of men working in the shipyards, to consider at all in this. But the administration gave the women a representation in the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. As I understand, the personnel of the Navy that is asked for is based upon the report of that committee. It was made in good faith. We took our place as assigned us there. We could have had first place above all others, for undoubtedly we had power to, but we were willing to be on an equality with the once greater power, and I for one am one woman who is never willing to see us yield that equality and to take a second place. [Applause, the Members rising.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

TRANSPORTATION AND RECRUITING.

For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force to and from duty, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation; expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties; transportation of dependents of enlisted men; in all, $4,151,775.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall use few or no figures except those contained in the committee report. A report can not absolutely cover up what is really done. That report at the top of page 7 says:

The committee has declined to make provision for the deadwood of the Navy. It should be laid up and wherever possible sold. It constitutes a millstone around the neck of the Navy.

That would be right if that were true. They did more than remove deadwood. This committee has reduced to the utmost, I think to the extent of 20,000 men, the live wire of the Navy, which is the force of destroyers—on page 5 of the report. They have allowed 9,575 men for 103 destroyers, with none laid up in ordinary to help them as a reserve.

At the bottom of page 7 I find the subcommittee saying as to what they call deadwood—

The chief drain, however, has been the destroyers. Of these craft we have 301, of which 219 are exclusive of those built prior to and under the big program authorized in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917. These war-built destroyers—

That is the 219—

call for a total of 24,966 enlisted men when fully manned, and during the last completed fiscal year it cost to maintain and operate the entire number of destroyers the stupendous sum of $75,869,098.92.

Mr. Chairman, if 219 destroyers took nearly 25,000 men, 301 destroyers took over 30,000, and they propose now to allot only 9,569. It is more than 20,000 reduction.

Let me call your attention to what the destroyer does. There was a careful statement handed in by the Secretary of the Navy to the Committee on Appropriations. It is indorsed as having been handed on the 6th day of March; and because there were 91 typewritten pages they did not print the paper. We do not know why it was not printed. It shows the need and use of every kind of ship in the Navy. It would seem to be the most valuable of all documents to be printed, and 91 typewritten pages would not take more than 20 pages of the fine print in which they put communications. The Secretary of the Navy says in part as to destroyers:

3(d). Since the United States Navy possesses no light cruisers and no battle cruisers until more scout cruisers are provided, destroyers will have to take the place of these. To offset the loss of power due to the absence of scout cruisers and battle cruisers the destroyers must be in relatively larger numbers. No attempt will be made to estimate the number of destroyers that is equivalent in value to a single battle cruiser or to a single light cruiser, because this is indeterminate, but the number of destroyers that are necessary for use in connection with the movement of a force of 18 battleships and its train must be sufficient to provide for the necessary scouting and screening operations as well as to afford the protection against submarine attack in the vicinity of the main body itself.

The Navy possesses 283 destroyers of the first line. The importance of this powerful force and its value to the United States can scarcely be overestimated. It is the most powerful destroyer force in the world, and it forms in itself a defense for this country which every nation in the world knows must be reckoned with in case aggressive action is contemplated. These vessels possess mobility of action, high speed, long cruising radius, and powerful offensive—defensive qualities. They are seaworthy to the highest degree, although their speed may be reduced by bad weather, and can be relied upon to strike quickly, surely, and at long distances. They are armed with high-powered guns, the latest torpedoes, and with depth charges that are so deadly to the submarine. The exploits of our destroyers during the late war are fresh in our minds. It is not necessary, therefore, to dwell upon the value of the destroyer as such, but I desire to impress upon you the great asset which this country has in possessing these splendid craft in such numbers.

If the United States Navy, instead of the British Navy, had been engaged with the Germans in the Battle of Jutland, all of the preliminary fighting would have been between the United States destroyers, on one hand, and the enemy's battle cruisers, light cruisers, and destroyers, on the other hand. It can easily be imagined that whatever number of United States destroyers might have been present, this number would not have been excessive.

In addition to the number of destroyers required for operations directly connected with the movement of the main body, which number it has been shown must be abnormally large because of our deficiencies in battle cruisers and in light cruisers, another large number of destroyers will be necessary for convoy escort work. The number of destroyers that were employed by the Allies in supporting the actual operations of the Grand Fleet in the North Sea was large. Another large number was engaged in carrying on the convoy escort work. Considering that the total number employed was greater than the number we now possess, although its entire effort was directed against only one first-class naval power it will be seen that the destroyer force we now possess is none too strong for strictly destroyer service, irrespective of demand for their use as cruisers.

With the greatest reluctance and with deep regret I have made arrangements to place about 150 of these vessels out of commission, thereby reducing the number which can be considered as instantly ready by about one-half and thus weakening the position which this country holds in this respect. I have done this because I recognize the need for national retrenchment and because I do not feel that the national defense is imperiled in view of the amity of our international relations. When it is recalled that only in destroyers is our Navy materially superior and that this superiority is more than counterbalanced by our deficiencies in battle cruisers, scout cruisers, and destroyer leaders, the reason for my reluctance in taking this step will be the more apparent. Plans have been drawn by which I believe the destroyers to be placed out of commission can be placed out of commission in such a manner that the deterioration will be reduced to a minimum. They are, however, bound to deteriorate, and with these vessels taken from the active list of the Navy the defense of the country, available on short notice, must be considered as having been reduced accordingly.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the history of the destroyer is a romance. In 1897 Admiral Meade, who was among the best officers in the Navy at that time, said he was not afraid of a fight about Venezuela, because if we had 300 torpedo boats not an English fleet would come anywhere near our shores. At Port Arthur the destroyers went in the harbor and broke up the Russian fleet in port, and when the World War came on the British, remembering this fact, withdrew all their battleships to the north end of Scotland, because they had less than 100 destroyers and they could not patrol the North Sea and keep off the German torpedo boats, and so their great ships had to stay in a posture of defense except when the German fleet came out and could be attacked. Meanwhile commerce was left without protection. The United States built destroyers. I remember some of us went over in 1917, and those who were with me in that congressional party—I see one of them here—will remember how pleased we were after we got into the danger zone, 300 or 400 miles from Liverpool, when two American destroyers took their places on either side of us and saw us into port. Our hundreds of destroyers, with radio, with torpedoes, with depth charges, and the use of the wireless, established a patrol about the British Isles which drove away or sank the submarines. Their convoy gave the fleet of merchant vessels protection to carry supplies of food. These 300 destroyers gave and give our young officers what is not given on our battleships, training in independent command. Men can not shoot straight with torpedoes and guns from a destroyer that is rolling around in the sea unless officers and men are seamen already trained to the backbone. They can not be run and fought merely by men from a reserve. If we are to keep up that fighting force, it must be kept active as a live wire. It is monstrous that the committee say that they have removed deadwood when they destroy that force. They say they will leave us 103 destroyers in commission, but the Secretary of the Navy and his assistant stated repeatedly that with 65,000 men they could only keep 65 destroyers in commission and 50 in ordinary with half crews waiting, so that they could be put in commission after the crew was filled up.

Mr. Chairman, it is suicide to get rid of officers and men who know their duty and who are trained for it. It is suicide to give up the live vessels of the fleet, for some people do not believe much in battleships or in having a fleet of slower vessels in some respects, like our old fleet of monitors. These destroyers are the live ships of the Navy. We have 301 of them. There were 267 in commission last year. We do not know how many men were on them, but certainly one hundred and odd to a destroyer. They propose to reduce from 30,000 men to man these 300 vessels down to only 9,567 men.

This bill will destroy the live part of the American Navy, on which we will rely in case of war. The first attack is made by destroyers and light cruisers. The cruisers are faster. The Secretary of the Navy asked for the building of 10 light cruisers of 30 or 35 knots, and that is not provided in this bill. In addition, the bill reduces the 301 destroyers in commission to 65 in commission and 50 in ordinary. We will not stand for such a reduction of force that is taken from the live, active, mobile fighting Navy of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I challenge any man to know less about the Navy from personal investigation than I do. I stand here and expect to cast my vote as the result of the evidence introduced before this committee, and the facts that I am able to ascertain from the discussion of this bill on the floor. I believe in keeping the Navy up to 5-5-3 ratio, at least for this year, agreed to by the treaty. So far, there have been very few speeches on the floor that threw any light on the question whether this bill would do that. I do not think it is an argument for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] to come before the committee of this House and say or intimate to us, first, "I am pretty close to the administration and the department, and have a letter from the Secretary of State, which I want to read." I want those who attach any importance to the letter and his standing with the Secretary to read the letter that he wrote the Secretary to get that letter. It is printed in the RECORD.

Second, he says as an argument against the committee bill, the Secretary of the Navy will by reason of being a representative of the Commander in Chief of the Navy place the men you appropriate for, and if you do not let him tell you how many men there should be for ships in the Navy he will not man the ships provided for in the treaty; he will unman the 18 ships. I say to you, gentlemen, if I believed that the department was saying to me through that representative a thing of that kind, I, as an American Congressman elected to represent my people, would resent the insinuation from the department. Think what that implies. That here is a department that will violate the good faith of the four-power treaty, violate the faith with our Allies in the reduction of the armament unless the American Congress will forget its constitutional right and duty to fix the size of the Navy and let the department fix the size.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I can not yield now.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts said to the gentleman from Michigan, "Did you talk with the British Embassy, and what did they say?" The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] said he declined to answer. Why did he decline to answer? Of course, Mr. KELLEY talked with the British Embassy, and got all the information he could as to the size of the British Navy. He talked with the Japanese Embassy upon the size of the Japanese Navy, but any man with brains enough to come here ought to know that the gentleman from Michigan could not say on the floor of the House what the British Embassy said to him, for that would not have a tendency to make the British Embassy popular with the powers that appoint, it not being a part of the duties of the embassy to inform a committee of Congress.

I wonder how Mr. ROGERS claims the experts got their information.

But how does my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] handle that? Like a boy in the sixth grade debating society at school. He says, "Traitor. Let England fix the size of our Navy." That is the way he handles that. All that stuff does not go with full-grown men. It might go with some fishing community up in Massachusetts and it might go with a class of people who meet on the green and resolved during the disarmament conference that we were about to ruin the country by following the President and Secretary Hughes in the conference for disarmament. That does not go here. We do not believe that PAT KELLEY is a Benedict Arnold because he tried to get some information as to the size of the English Navy. [Applause.]

Now, I have fondness for Massachusetts reasoning and I know I will get a rise. Before 4 o'clock this afternoon some man will be talking about the Kansas cyclones. I remember as a boy when we had a debating society out on the plains there was one little fellow who always walked up in front of the audience, no matter what the subject was, and said, "I will now answer the argument made by that Benedict Arnold who preceded me." [Laughter.]

There has not been any showing either by figures or fact to warrant the statement that they can not man the 18 capital ships with 67,000 men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have earnestly listened to a goodly portion of the debate and I have read parts of the hearings. I have conversed with men who claim to know, but I am in much the same condition as the gentleman from Kansas who just preceded me. I shall be compelled to vote upon this bill without any full and adequate knowledge of the facts in the case. As a matter of fact, that is no reflection either upon the committee or upon the man who states his position. It is true that very few men who will vote upon this bill will be able definitely to give the number of men on the ships, the number of men ashore, and the men on the auxiliaries and say "we know." Now, gentlemen, it does seem to me that the argument will rest on what we are willing to take as authority in the case. It is childish upon this floor to twit Members with the fact that they have navy yards in their districts. [Applause.] The question is infinitely larger than that. In my judgment, the situation is really grave, and from the intensity with which men speak to me about it I am convinced that no man on either side but wants to vote honestly for the thing which he thinks the country ought to have. The disarmament conference was the most notable event in many long years of modern history, and in that conference the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, was compelled to rely upon the expert knowledge of the men in our Navy Department. No man on the floor of this House raised the question at that time as to whether these men were competent or not. The problem now is: Are they venal, are they competent? When I am compelled to believe that the men at the head of the Navy Department are so venal that they will come before this body and on a matter of fact state that they know 86,000 men or 90,000 men are needed to carry out the provisions of that treaty, when in reality they do not need that many, then I say, God help the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I prefer not at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he knew——

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have refused to yield. A little later I may. A gentleman honored in this House, for a number of years chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and now on the minority side, a man for whom we have the highest respect, stated only the other day that the committee's bill will not take care of what we agreed to do in the disarmament conference.

On the other hand, the gentleman who is leading the fight for the committee bill states positively that it will. I do not look upon either of these men as venal. I think that they are honest, but here we have two men of equally long service, presumed to know as much about the matter, one as the other, and yet diametrically opposed to each other on a matter of fact. If we knew the facts in the case of our own certain knowledge, there would be no need of this discussion. What, then, is a man to do who does not only not know the facts but who, in order to thoroughly understand the matter in detail, would require to devote six months study to it? I think the average Member is reduced to a consideration as to what authority he will follow in the case.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to yield yet. The experts in the Navy Department say this will not carry out the provisions of the disarmament conference. The Secretary of the Navy says the same thing. The Secretary of State, who had to rely upon these men during that most intricate and difficult conference that has taken its position among the great events of the world, says that while he is not an expert, he yet relies confidently upon the judgment of the men who guided him at every step in the way. I understand that President Harding has taken the same position, although I am not at liberty to say that, for I do not know definitely that he has done so. While it is true that we may discount the judgment of the head of the Navy Department when a matter of opinion is involved, yet I ask gentlemen to remember that this is a matter of fact. If I am to vote upon a bill as to matter of fact, I say to you that I am not ready now to take the position that the men who state that this naval bill as reported by the committee will not take care of the disarmament conference, do not know what they are talking about, and neither am I willing to say that they are venal or that they will mislead us. [Applause.] I shall support a personnel of 86,000.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I have never been a militaristic man; I have always opposed a large Army but have favored a big Navy. Large armies sometimes Prussianize a country, but large navies never do this. I favor sweeping reductions in the Army, for, if we maintain a sufficient corps of trained officers, in time of trouble we can soon equip any army of the finest soldiers in the world. Our country is fortunately situated geographically, with an ocean between us and any country that might jeopardize our national security and defense. If American rights and American security is ever assailed, the foe must come from across the sea; therefore I have always believed that America should have the best Navy of any country in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the technical details and needs of the Navy or how many men it takes to equip and maintain ships in commission. I can truthfully say that I have the greatest love for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], but I do not think that he knows anything more about the Navy or the needs of the Navy than does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], who for eight years was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs when the Democrats were in power. They differ diametrically as to the number of men required to maintain a Navy on the 5-5-3 ratio. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] in a speech stated that 63,000 men authorized by the Appropriations Committee bill will maintain our Navy on a basis of the ratio of 5-5-3 and give us practically as many men as are in the English Navy. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], who is a profound student of the navies of the world, disputes this. In a speech on the floor of this House he said:

> Now, the British Navy and marine personnel, not including reserves, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1923, officers and men, 98,500; colonial navies, 7,289; also one-third of the aviation personnel were cooperating with and constituted a part of the naval personnel, 11,969; making a total of 117,758. There is no information of the number of men in the naval communication service, naval recruiting service, or the Royal Indian Marines. They are not counted in the 117,758. I want to call attention to another matter. England had a reserve on January 1, 1922, officers, 10,332; men, 38,808; making a total of 49,130. They are not counted in the figures I gave a moment ago. And yet what? They operate 35 oilers, 1 repair ship, and 1 supply ship. In other words, those reserves operate 37 ships and are not counted in their 117,758. Add the 38,808 to your 117,758 and you have got 156,556 men in the British Navy available to operate their ships. And yet they come before this Congress and say that with our 67,000 that may be provided by this bill and our 19,500 marines we have got as many as the British have, but you can not make the figures tell any such tale as that.

It is frequently said here in debate that we can not pay any attention or give credence to the recommendation of naval officers as to the needs of the Navy, for they are biased and unreliable. I know very few naval officers. Those whom I have had the good fortune to meet are honorable men, and I think they love their country and desire to serve their country just as much as does the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, myself, or any other Member of the House. I think when it comes to technical knowledge as to the number of men required to operate the Navy, they know very much more about it than any of us. [Applause.] We are perfectly willing to rely upon naval officers and entrust millions of dollars of property and the precious lives of our boys to these gentlemen when they are baring their breasts to the bullets of the enemy, to the storms of the seas, when the country is at war. Why are they not entitled to some confidence and their opinions entitled to some weight as to the needs of the Navy when we are at peace?

Appealing now to my Democratic colleagues, we have a right to be proud of the American Navy, because our party has played a conspicuous part in it. It was during the Cleveland administration, when Mr. William C. Whitney was Secretary of the Navy, that the American Navy first took a prominent place on the sea.

And it was during the last Democratic administration, under the Democratic program of 1916, that the American Navy became the best one in the world. Why should we follow the Republican majority leader and take any chance or cast any vote that may reduce it to a second-class Navy?

Now, gentlemen, as I said before, I do not know the number of men required to maintain this Navy on the ratio of 5-5-3, which we all want to maintain. Now, if there is any doubt about the number of men required to do this, without criticizing any of my colleagues, I, for one, shall resolve the doubt in favor of giving the number of men that the naval officers and the Navy Department, the Secretary of State, and all those who have studied the matter from the Government's standpoint, declare it is necessary to give, to wit, 86,000 men. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another thing I wish to call to the attention of this House. When we adopted the Budget system and consolidated the appropriations in one committee, the Committee on Appropriations, it was expressly stated and argued on this floor that the Committee on Appropriations was not a legislative committee. In bringing in this bill the Committee on Appropriations has transcended its authority and is usurping the prerogatives of the Committee on Naval Affairs by legislating for the Navy. The bill legislates by providing that the personnel of the Navy shall be only 63,000 men. The Committee on Naval Affairs, which under the Rules of the House has charge of legislation relating to the Navy, after two months of hearings, has reported a bill recommending that the personnel of the Navy be fixed at 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentices. The question for us to decide is whether we will follow legislation suggested by the Appropriations Committee or by the Naval Affairs Committee. Are we willing, by accepting the report of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that the Naval Affairs Committee and the other former appropriating committees of the House shall be reduced to mere nonentities?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir; I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The present authorized strength of the Navy is 137,000, and upon that authorized strength the number of officers are determined. It was my understanding, and perhaps the gentleman will correct me if I am wrong, that the Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill fixing 86,000 as the maximum for the purpose of fixing the officers' personnel and not with the view of fixing the minimum strength of the Navy.

Mr. CRISP. I am going to say very frankly to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], as I said when I started out, that I am not familiar with the details of this legislation. My information was from prominent members of the Committee on Naval Affairs that their bill authorized a personnel of 86,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCPHERSON] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] are both distinguished members of the Naval Committee. Both have risen and perhaps they will be willing to state whether or not it was their intention in fixing the authorized strength of the Navy at 86,000, that that should be the minimum strength of the Navy?

Mr. MCPHERSON. The purpose of fixing the Navy at 86,000 is stated in our report. It is to carry out the intention of the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let us get it straight in the RECORD, if the gentleman will permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In order that it may be perfectly straight in my mind and in the RECORD, I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCPHERSON] to state that it was the intention of the Naval Committee in reporting the bill that the minimum strength of the Navy should be 86,000 men?

Mr. MCPHERSON. To comply with the treaty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I see that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] shakes his head. I presume the chairman might have some views on that subject, but of course had better do that in his own time and not in the time of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If I may, in the gentleman's time——

Mr. CRISP. I must decline to yield.

Now, to sum up and not take any more of the time of the House, it is my intention to vote to increase the personnel to 86,000 men. [Applause.] And I shall do it for the reason that the Naval Affairs Committee, which is the proper legislating committee for the House on this subject, after exhaustive hearings has recommended 86,000. I shall do it because the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby; the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt; Admiral Washington, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; and all other naval officers who are charged with the duty of managing the Navy have said it was necessary to have 86,000 to maintain our Navy on a 5–5–3 ratio, which we are authorized to do under the disarmament treaty. I shall do it because the Secretary of State has advised this House that the naval board that was intrusted with the responsibility of advising our peace commissioners when the international conference was being held say it requires 86,000 men to maintain the 5–5–3 ratio. [Applause.]

The present strength of the Navy, as I understand it, is 104,000 men. If it is reduced to 86,000 there will be a reduction of 18,000 men, which will effect a large saving to the taxpayers, and if you give the 86,000 there is no question but what our Navy will be efficient and be equal to the Navy of Great Britain. I have no criticism of any colleague who differs with me, but I shall take no chances for my country's safety. I shall give the country the benefit of any doubt in my mind by voting for 86,000 men, the number that those charged with the responsibility say is necessary to maintain the 5–5–3 ratio. [Applause.]

Mr. MCPHERSON. Gentlemen of the committee, I desire to further answer the question asked me by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]—what the views of the Naval Committee are on this question? It is well expressed in their report in favor of the bill fixing the number of men needed at 86,000 in these words, reading from the report to accompany H. R. 11002:

> The authorized enlisted strength of the Navy shall be reduced to 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentice seamen.
>
> This reduction has been provided for in this bill for the purpose of carrying out the spirit of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments held in Washington, D. C., at which it was agreed that the naval forces of the several contracting powers should be established at such point as might be required to fully conserve the national defense of each.

It seems to me that ought to make plain to the House the views of your Committee on Naval Affairs, that make a study of the necessities of our Navy. The Committee on Naval Affairs has determined that to carry out the treaty will require 86,000 men.

Mr. MONDELL. When was that report filed?

Mr. MCPHERSON. That report was filed in this House on March 25, 1922.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Am sorry, but I can not yield further at this point.

Much has been said here about this particular bill and about how it was made. The subcommittee on appropriations have told us that in preparing this bill they have tried to provide a force sufficient to man the treaty Navy.

There is much evidence in existence that no attention was paid to provide a Navy equal to that of Great Britain. In fact, there is much evidence which to my mind strongly indicates the bill was drawn at a time and under circumstances when the Committee on Appropriations knew nothing about what the treaty would be and what size fleet the United States would be entitled to maintain under it.

The present bill was not proposed by the full Appropriations Committee, as we all know. It is supposed to be the work of a subcommittee of five members of the Committee on Appropriations.

We changed our rules in the Sixty-sixth Congress. Prior to that time all the bills relating to our Naval Establishment, including the appropriation bills for the Navy, were passed upon and proposed by 21 men constituting the Committee on Naval Affairs. That committee had serving on it many men of long service in this House and who had for years studied the needs of our Navy, and were familiar with it in all its aspects. Men selected for service on that committee had duties so exacting they were not permitted to serve on other committees of the House, but were required to give their entire time to the Naval Establishment and the study of our Navy's needs and betterment.

We were induced to make the change in our rules and intrust the work of proposing naval appropriation bills to the Committee on Appropriations upon the argument that such change was a necessary part of our Budget system. That argument was a deception upon the country.

Our present method is not a necessary or proper part of our Budget system. Under the existing rule there is no effort to coordinate expenditures. The country has not the advantage of having a Committee on Appropriations to intelligently appropriate for the different services, but, on the contrary, we have several subcommittees consisting of one, two, three, or four men, none of whom may be familiar with the needs of the particular service, which hurriedly bring in appropriation bills instead of having those measures carefully prepared by a full committee of 21 men selected to study specially the very subject in hand.

The present bill is an apt illustration of the evils of our new method. This bill is the work of one man, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. It appears to me proper that the country should know this bill was not the work of the 35 men of the Appropriations Committee in an effort to provide a treaty Navy. I want the country to know our appropriation bills, all appropriations, are made by a few men, many of whom have had no connection with naval affairs or with the department appropriated for. They have had no opportunity even to study its needs.

Who prepared the present item in debate providing for 67,000 men? Was this bill prepared by men who had studied our naval requirements in order that it should comply with the ratio of 5–5–3 agreed upon in the limitation of arms conference?

I say it was not, but is the work of the gentleman from Michigan.

We all know that the conference was called to meet on the anniversary of the armistice, November 11, 1921. It held its first session on November 12, 1921.

On November 13, 1921, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]—who, I claim, made this bill—was quoted by the New York Times as saying that expenses of maintaining the Navy would be reduced $150,000,000 to $200,000,000. The naval appropriation of last year was near $430,000,000, and this bill makes a reduction of about the sum Mr. KELLEY named on November 13, 1921. In other words, the bill we have is the very one Mr. KELLEY declared on last November 13 we would have. Again, in the New York Times of November 18, 1921, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] is again quoted as saying the conference will make possible a reduction in naval expenditures of $200,000,000. We will have a navy of fifty or sixty thousand men. Again, I call your attention to the fact that the bill does not provide a treaty Navy, but simply carries out the threat or prophecy of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations made in November, 1921.

Again, on February 20, 1922, the gentleman from Michigan was quoted in the Washington Post as saying we would have a Navy manned by fifty or sixty thousand men and he would effect a saving of about $200,000,000. The bill proposed is for a Navy of about 60,000 and effects a saving of about $200,000,000. The hearings were not begun by the subcommittee until March 6, 1922. The treaty had not been made, and under those circumstances no one could, of course, know what would be required to carry out the understanding made later. Therefore the bill does not appear to have been proposed with a view to maintain the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. On the 18th of November, 1921, the gentleman from Michigan knew how many men should be in the Navy. He had then decided to make a reduction from the $422,000,000 appropriated last year of $200,000,000 and he had decided upon a Navy of from 50,000 to 60,000 men. On February 20 he again predicted that we would have a Navy of 60,000 men, according to a statement published in the Washington Post.

He filled the newspapers with interviews, not as to how many men were needed to maintain our Navy at the ratio of 5-5-3, but he was giving notice in advance of subscribing the treaty or hearing the evidence as to the very sums in money and of men as provided in his bill. When we saw his bill we see he had saved his many arguments, although it appears in doing so he had lost us our position under the treaty. By his conduct I am reminded of an experience of an old Missourian of Clay County during the Civil War. This old man owned a number of slaves, and decided as the war progressed that if he remained in Clay County, where the Union forces came frequently, he would lose his slaves and that to save them he would leave Missouri and remove to Texas.

Down in southwest Missouri he was captured and brought to General Lane's tent, who inquired of the old man as to what was the matter. The old man said, "General, I am an old man, and, as you see, my fortune is all invested in these slaves. If I stay in Clay County, I will lose them. I am on my way to Texas, where I hope to keep them."

The general said, "Return to Clay County, obey the laws, take no part in the effort to destroy the Union, and your slaves will be as safe in Clay County, Mo., as they will be Texas." The old man said, "What! General, are you not going to take my slaves from me?" The general said, "No; do as I say."

The old man replied, "I am not going to do it. I have told all my neighbors up there in Clay County that you would take our slaves from us, and I am not going back there after seeing you here, for I would a darn sight rather lose my slaves than to lose my argument." [Laughter.]

After the many statements by the gentleman from Michigan that we were going to have a 60,000-man Navy, made before the ratios of the treaty were known, and when we examine the item it is apparent the gentleman from Michigan has not lost his argument of November 13 or 18, 1921, or of February 20, 1922, although it is certain they have lost our Navy the position provided for it in the treaty. I have been pained to hear those who favor the bill of our friend taunt Members of the House whose arguments they could not answer with, "Oh, such are the arguments of those who have navy yards. He comes from a district with a navy yard." Those who represent such districts have shown they have as much patriotism as the rest of us. Such taunts are unmanly, it seems to me. One of our Members has recently been engaged in trying by public addresses in Texas and elsewhere to lessen the confidence of the people in their Representatives and thus undermine our Government. His conduct is not unlike that of those who have no other argument or answer to the logic urged here against those who have for patriotic reasons opposed this bill than the charge that such are influenced by the fact they represent districts in which navy yards are located. It is a poor defense of yourself to cry "Navy yards!" in answer to appeals to your judgment and reason to preserve our Navy the equal of that of the foremost navy in the world and carry out in both letter and spirit the treaty.

You ought to accord us the same interest in our country, its finances, and its honor as you claim for yourself. Answer our appeals to your judgment if you can, but I hope we will hear no more of navy yards.

Gentlemen, if the known character of your colleagues were less exalted than they are known by you to be, your imputation lacks logical connection. The subject of our debate is the personnel. We are talking about men, not ships or machines. Navy yards build and repair ships, not men. Their work, if they have any, would be neither increased nor diminished by this bill. It adds or subtracts no ships or material thing from the Navy. Its passage will not increase the earnings of any navy yard in the United States by one cent. If we increased the number of men on the ships to a hundred thousand, and the ships being no more nor less than they are, would make no difference in the work of the navy yards of the country. Navy yards do not work on the men.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that if we do not have men enough on the ships to take care of them it would increase the work in the navy yards because they have got to repair them all? [Applause.]

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes; the lack of men might have that effect. I believe in increasing the item under dispute to 86,000 to provide the treaty Navy. The question is not whether we will have certain ships but whether we will have enough men to man those ships to the highest state of efficiency, or whether we will have such an inferior number as that we will be playing second fiddle to England at least, and perhaps to Japan.

I am a great believer in the benefits to our country and the world to flow from the limitation of armaments treaty. I am unwilling to vote our country into a secondary position when by the treaty we are entitled to first place with England.

I am proud of our naval officers, whose advice is being rejected if we agree to this item. I have confidence in their ability, their honor, and their patriotism. They are worthy of our confidence and that of the American people. Have they the confidence of our people? That confidence has been manifested over and over again.

In 1916 the American people trusted them to plan and build a Navy in which they were to invest billions of money. They believed our naval officers were sufficiently skilled to plan and build for us a Navy second to none, although first-line ships had advanced in cost from $304,000, when the old Constitution was built, to $40,000,000 for the Pennsylvania. When war comes they are always willing to give their sons in whatever numbers are needed to fight on the ships our naval officers plan and build against the enemies of the United States. The people trust them, why should not we?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have seen the American people manifest their confidence in these naval officers in the late war by sending their children to man our ships under the command of these naval officers in confidence of victory, and victory came.

I believe, and the American people believe, in the capacity, patriotism, and skill of our naval officers. They have all agreed that to properly man the fleet we are allowed to maintain under the treaty will require more men than the 67,000 provided by the pending bill, and as proposed in the bill submitted by our Committee on Naval Affairs to carry out the provisions of the treaty requires 60,000 men.

I am like my colleague from Oklahoma [Miss ROBERTSON]. I represent a district that has not a dollar's worth of naval property in it, and never had; but I am unwilling, as I believe the proud people of my district and of my State and of our country are unwilling, to put the United States second to any nation on earth, and I shall vote, as a country Member from a country district, without navy yards or naval activities or salt water, and about as dry as that from which our beloved majority leader comes, so dry that you have to prime your eyes before the tears can flow [laughter]—I shall vote to maintain our Navy equal to that of any other nation on earth. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I may be in error as to my conception of the issue which is involved here, but I do not think so. It seems to me that the gentlemen who are arguing for the increase in personnel to 86,000 are predicating that argument wholly upon the proposition that we are bound by treaty to keep the Navy up to a certain strength. I do not think so.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In just a moment, please. As I said the other day, immediately after the reading of the letter from the Secretary of State, I think we are morally bound not to go beyond a certain ratio, but I do not subscribe to the doctrine that the Congress or the country is bound by the treaty to keep the Navy up to that ratio if the Congress and the country choose to go below it. Now, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have been present, I think, at practically every moment of the debate upon this bill, and I have not heard anyone argue that we were bound to have a Navy equal to that of England, which Mr. Hughes, Mr. Root, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. LODGE have obtained for us. We can have no Navy at all if we want to, and can yield the equality with England which they gave; but I understand there is nobody who is willing to yield that equality.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is not the question after all whether we are in danger if we do go below that, and is there anybody here prepared to say that we are in danger if we go below it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; we are always in danger.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. From whom?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Can you anticipate whom the lightning will strike in the next storm? Can you tell from what portion of the sky it will come? The gentleman's question is just as logical as that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I was present the day that the Conference on the Limitation of Armament opened. I heard the address of the Secretary of State. I interpreted that address to mean that this limitation that was proposed, and which has been substantially carried out, was not for the purpose of making war but for the purpose of moving toward the assurance of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. And have we not taken a long step in that direction in reducing the tonnage to the extent that the disarmament conference agreed to that reduction? Is not that what they did, and have they not made a memorable step in history? And shall we voluntarily go on and abandon the Navy altogether because they have limited it to certain figures?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, the proposition of the committee does not provide for abandoning the Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It is the gentleman's understanding, as it is mine, is it not, that the committee insists that this provision will take care of the 5–5–3 treaty provision?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I so understand. But let me say to my friend from Indiana with entire frankness that after all to my mind is not the important question here. But they say it takes care of it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If by virtue of that arrangement we sustain a position of equality and, therefore, of advantage in our diplomatic relationships, does the gentleman think that the Members of this House have a moral obligation to the country in seeing to it that that position is maintained beyond any doubt and that safety is secured by an increase, if there is any question as to the probability of our being in danger?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I understand my friend from Indiana correctly, if there are any evidences whatever that the country is in danger, of course the moral obligation rests upon the Congress to protect the country. But if it is meant that there is a moral obligation growing out of the treaty to keep it up to a 5–5–3 proposition, I do not subscribe to that doctrine at all. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If the gentleman will permit, perhaps he did not get the first phase of my question. Granting, as I think most men will admit, that our position was such that we could have built more largely than any other country—and, therefore, our judgment was gladly acquiesced in—is there not a moral obligation upon this body to see to it that the relative position of the country be maintained, so that in the future we can also take the initiative, if need be, toward further reduction?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think so.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman approve of the opening address of the Secretary of State and then think it is logical that a matter which grows out of the things that the Secretary of State was after in the beginning should be neglected and his advice disregarded?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Neglected and disregarded now, does the gentleman mean?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that the Secretary of State was moving more along economic lines, in so far as his address in regard to the Navy was concerned, than along any other lines. And I want to follow that up by saying that the conference was called as a Conference on the Limitation of Armament. Presumably all that was involved in the call was presented by the Secretary of State in his address upon the opening day of the conference. But eventually the conference went far beyond that and negotiated other treaties; particularly, if I may mention it, the four-power pact, which was made the corner stone of the whole program evolved. That principle which the builders had formerly rejected became the keystone of the whole arch. [Applause.] Now, if that four-power pact meant anything, if that is worth anything to the world, it meant a progress toward peace. Therefore, unless we are threatened with danger, why are we bound by the treaty to keep the Navy up to the 5–5–3 proposition? And yet these gentlemen who report it say that this bill does that. I do not know whether it does or not, and do not care.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter fact, has not the country accepted the 5–5–3 ratio itself?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT.

For ferriage, continuous-service certificates, discharges, good-conduct badges, and medals for men and boys; purchase of gymnastic apparatus; transportation of effects of deceased officers and enlisted men of the Navy, and of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force who die while on duty; books for training apprentice seamen and landsmen; packing boxes and materials; books and models; stationery; and other contingent expenses and emergencies arising under cognizance of the Bureau of Navigation, unforeseen and impossible to classify, $16,000.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with profound interest to the distinguished leader of the minority [Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee], knowing that he was an exceedingly astute legislator, a logical leader, as well as a patriotic man, and knowing that he was deeply interested in securing the future peace of this country and would not consciously leave undone anything that would, so far as his power and influence went, add to the defense of the Nation in the time of war or threatened great danger. But I was somewhat surprised to hear from him, notwithstanding the fact that we entered into the covenant of the arms limitation treaty on the basis of 5–5–3, that it were unnecessary that this Government should undertake to see that our preparation should lead to the very maximum efficiency allowed us under the treaty. I was also surprised to hear from this distinguished leader of the minority—and I admire him, regarding him as one of the very strongest men from the South—that it were unnecessary to make preparation until confronted with danger. When is the time to begin preparation? When the great guns of the enemy are near our shores, bombarding our coast cities? [Applause.] When there is an actual invasion of our country? Is it at the time when we are helpless and unprepared that we should begin preparation? We have already had a signal evidence of the want of preparation; a great war that came upon us without preparation cost us in increased expense billions of extra dollars, as also extra lives and human suffering. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. From what enemy are we now likely to hear?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. It would be useless for me to speculate on that. What enemies hitherto have come across our pathway—enemies that we have had to fight?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the only ones that you fear would be England or Japan as naval powers—if there is any reason to fear either of these, we rendered ourselves ridiculous by making ourselves simply equal to one of them in the treaty. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman's logic and his argument would lead him to the abolishment of the entire Navy.

If you have extreme confidence in England and Japan, abolish your Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. That was the question I wanted to ask the gentleman—if the logic of the gentleman from Tennessee would not lead just as clearly to the abolition of all of the Navy.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman is clearly right; the question is, Shall we have a personnel of 96,000, as has been recommended by the administration—the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy at the head of the executive department, the State Department, and the Navy Department—or only 67,000 men, as has been advised by the subcommittee of the House? So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take the advice of the administration on this point and abide by it. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Following the logic of the gentleman's argument, instead of having 12,000 men as at present occupying the Coast Artillery, why not have 20,000, which the Army organization prescribes as war strength?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman's query is not pertinent. I have been always opposed to a large Army, but have been for a strong Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the difference between the fortifications along the coast and the floating fortification on battleships?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. That is not germane. [Laughter.] We should give heed to Theodore Roosevelt's advice, "Speak softly and carry a big stick." We are limited as to the size of the club, but we want it to be the very best club that human ingenuity can devise and money can buy.

Remember the words of Patrick Henry—I may not quote him accurately:

> The next gale that springs from the north will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms.

This was an argument for preparedness. [Applause.]

I think we should have just as an effective "big stick" as we can get hold of. I want to give the Navy every dollar it requires in order that it may develop every pound of power and every ounce of strength obtainable. The Navy is entitled to funds sufficient to enable it to make a supreme effort to reach the very maximum of efficiency and perfection. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to correct what I think are inaccuracies in some of the statements made by two of my good friends, one of them, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and the other the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], and I respectfully invite their attention to the same. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] seemed to feel that the Appropriations Committee was trespassing on the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, because the pending bill appropriates for only 67,000 enlisted men, while the Naval Affairs Committee has recommended to the House the passage of a bill fixing the authorized strength of the Navy at 86,000. My friend from Georgia failed to recall that under existing law the authorized strength of the Navy is now more than 137,000. The act of 1918 fixed the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy at 131,000, plus 6,000 apprentice seamen, and an additional number of Hospital Corps men. Last year no one questioned the authority of the House Appropriations Committee to appropriate for only 100,000 enlisted men, although in fact the authorized enlisted strength was then more than 137,000. The number of men finally appropriated for in the bill was 106,000 men, more than 30,000 less than the authorized strength of the Navy at that time under existing law. The gentleman from Georgia no doubt voted first for 100,000 and later for the 106,000 without protest.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MCARTHUR. The question was not raised, because it did not propose to do what this does, to make the Navy inferior to that of Japan. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. I will be very glad to discuss the question submitted by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] when the section of the bill to which his remark may be considered appropriate is reached. I am now endeavoring to give to the House the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy under existing law and to convey to the House the information that the House has always favored the action of the Appropriations Committee in limiting the amount appropriated to the actual number of enlisted men needed, even though the number appropriated for may be greatly less than the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy.

In the bill carrying an appropriation for the Army you fixed the number of enlisted men in the Army to be appropriated for, although that number was less than the number which the existing law authorized.

The House approved it, and doubtless the gentleman from Oregon voted for it, just as he did the naval appropriation bill of last year. Certainly no one was heard last year, or more recently, when we passed the Army bill, to claim that the Appropriations Committee was trespassing on the authority of any legislative committee of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Alabama know whether the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] still fears Japan, notwithstanding the four-power treaty? [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. I will yield sufficient time to the gentleman from Oregon to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Oh, no; I do not fear Japan; but I think that the United States ought to have a Navy, if not superior, then equal to that of any power in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield to enable me to ask a question of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman say that the number of men allotted here will make our Navy inferior to that of Japan?

Mr. MCARTHUR. Yes; that is the broad statement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And the gentleman understands that this number of men is the number of men carried on these ships. Then, I ask the gentleman, if, therefore, our Navy has already sunk below that of Japan?

Mr. MCARTHUR. Oh, that is not the number of men carried on these ships at the present time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes; we are giving the number now carried and about 2,000 more.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I think that the gentleman is in error.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, under the bill referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCPHERSON], and which he states sought to provide that 86,000 enlisted men should be the actual strength of the Navy, I wish to call his attention to the error into which he fell. This is most evident from the mere reading of the first part of section 1 of the bill, to which he refers, and which reads:

> That the total authorized enlisted strength of the Navy shall be reduced on July 1, 1922, to 80,000 plus 6,000 apprentice seamen.

The bill nowhere states that its purpose is to hereafter fix the actual number of enlisted men in the Navy at 86,000, but follows the language of like bills by simply providing what the enlisted strength may be.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has the gentleman read any reason given by the naval authorities for the fact that there is not now carried on the fleet a full personnel? What is the reason that they are not now carrying more men than they are?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, I would prefer that a discussion of that matter be deferred until the section of the bill to which it very properly relates is reached. I am now desirous of submitting to the House some facts which I think will serve to correct some inaccuracies into which one or more gentlemen have fallen.

I know that it is the desire of the House, irrespective of what may be the final attitude of this or that Member on the present bill or on any of its provisions, to have accurate information as to the matters here discussed. As further showing that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCPHERSON] was in error as to the statement he made, the House will recall that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], the chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, stated that his understanding of the purpose and effect of the bill referred to by Mr. MCPHERSON was absolutely as I have stated; that is, that it simply sought to fix the authorized maximum strength of the Navy and did not undertake to require that this number should constitute the actual enlisted number in the Navy at this or any other time. Perhaps never in the history of our country have we in peace time had in the Navy its full authorized enlisted strength. Prior to the war the actual enlisted strength was much less than its authorized strength. If the House should now vote an appropriation for 86,000 men, this would be more than 50,000 less than the present authorized strength of the Navy.

May I again remind the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] that if he feels the Navy would now be weakened by appropriating for only 67,000 enlisted men, then the bill brought in by the House Naval Affairs Committee, of which he is a member, serves to deal it a much severer blow, because the bill which the gentleman from Oregon favors proposes to cut the officer personnel strength of the Navy from 5,500 to 3,400—this last number to include all officers carried as additional or extra numbers. Naval officers must be trained along very technical lines, and it is important to maintain a proper officer personnel, and far more important in peace time than a large enlisted personnel. Certainly no naval officer has been found who recommended to the House Naval Affairs Committee that the officer personnel be reduced to 3,400.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman just made the statement that at no time in our history has the authorized personnel of the Navy been at its full quota.

Mr. OLIVER. In peace times.

Mr. LAYTON. Then it necessarily follows that if we adopt the 67,000 personnel we will have a still weaker Navy, one below the 67,000.

Mr. OLIVER. If you should later pass the bill recommended by the House Naval Affairs Committee which seeks to fix the authorized enlisted strength at 86,000, then 67,000 would be a very fair percentage of the actual authorized strength in peace times.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman does not get the point.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I do.

Mr. LAYTON. The experience of the country is that whatever the authorized personnel we always fall below it, so that if we establish a personnel of 67,000 we are going to fall below that.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman evidently misunderstood the statement I have just made. I undertook to say, and I think I did, that the actual strength of the Navy was usually short of its authorized strength, and that in providing appropriations for the enlisted personnel in Army and Navy we have always endeavored to ascertain the number of men actually needed and to recommend appropriations for that number, irrespective of the authorized enlisted strength under existing law.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], in speaking of the remarks made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], stated that Mr. MONDELL had taken up the time of the House in discussing a matter long past and probably forgotten—that the House was not interested in past mistakes, even though they may have been the mistakes of naval officers. Permit me to say that the House may find that it is very much interested in the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] before it has finished its consideration of the pending bill, for the reason that the bill carries a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to retire a large number of chief petty officers and hereafter carry them as fleet reservists. This is made necessary because of the large oversupply of chief petty officers now in the service and to which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] refers. If the House should approve that provision of the pending bill which seeks to separate these officers from the service on retired pay as fleet reservists, it would involve a large amount of money during the lifetime of the men so retired.

A letter from the Bureau of Navigation on April 7 shows that we have approximately 12,000 chief petty officers, a number very much larger than a Navy of 96,000, 86,000, or 67,000 requires. Something must be done to get rid of this large number, because the pay of a chief petty officer mounts rapidly into high figures, with his allowances, and if the Navy is oversupplied some method must be found for reducing the number. There seems to be no question raised even by naval officers as to having a very much larger number of chief petty officers than are now needed, and they likewise recognize that we may have too large a number in the warrant grades and in the higher enlisted grades. These constitute the men of the enlisted service who draw the larger pay. I think you will see at a glance why the House may be greatly interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming.

My understanding is that the bill reported by the House Naval Affairs Committee also seeks to provide for the retirement within a fixed time of commissioned officers, some chief petty officers, and some in the warrant grades. The House bill undertakes to authorize the retiring of these to the reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it is the view and has been recommended by the Appropriations Committee that these chief petty officers should be retired? Where will the Treasury come in?

Mr. OLIVER. My understanding is——

Mr. BUTLER. My friend is usually extremely accurate. I hope he is mistaken.

Mr. OLIVER. My understanding is that in this bill——

Mr. BUTLER. That is pure legislation, to begin with.

Mr. OLIVER. To complete what I started to say, I understood, Mr. BUTLER, that your committee had reported the bill providing for the retirement of some in the warrant grades and also some chief petty officers.

Mr. BUTLER. In the bill that was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs we sought to retire commissioned officers, not from 5,500 and down—that many authorized by law—but from 4,140 down—six or seven hundred. But we did not provide for the retirement of warrant officers.

Mr. OLIVER. The Appropriations Committee was certainly under the impression, and we gathered that impression from my friend, Mr. BUTLER, the distinguished chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, that the Naval Affairs Committee had reported a bill authorizing the retirement not only of commissioned officers, but providing for the retirement of some in the warrant and chief petty grades. If I am in error as to that——

Mr. BUTLER. No; the error was mine. Of course, my friend knows I would not mislead him. I endeavored to say at that time what I now endeavor to say, that we had agreed to have the President take from the warrant officers' list as many as he thought was necessary and return them.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, as I understand, the bill reported by your committee does authorize the President to retire warrant and chief petty officers, and in that connection I will state that the Appropriations Committee, while carrying a provision of this kind in the present bill, does not undertake to recommend it to the House, but simply to bring this important matter to the attention of the House, and let the House take such action as it may deem wise in the premises. We were simply following the bill reported out, as we understood, by the House Naval Affairs Committee, and it is the purpose of the chairman now handling this bill to make that statement to the House when that section of the bill is reached. My purpose in giving the information at this time is to show how it was pertinent to the remarks made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and that it is an important matter for the consideration of the House, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] that the gentleman from Wyoming had been speaking of a matter wholly abstract to the present bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The "gentleman from New York" did not say the committee should forget at all. The "gentleman from New York" said that the fact that one man had made a mistake in counting at some indefinite, uncertain time, as claimed by the gentleman from Wyoming, did not prove that all the experts in the Navy would make mistakes. And, the "gentleman from New York" said, further, that the question in this bill was not the question of petty officers but the question of enlisted men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from New York evidently does not know that petty officers are enlisted men.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I can yield no further.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. He does not know what they are.

Mr. OLIVER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from New York if he will read the hearings——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will not find anything on the question of enlisted strength at all.

Mr. OLIVER. If the gentleman will only wait until I finish, I feel sure he will see that the information I am endeavoring to give him is material. If he will examine the hearings to which I will refer him, he will get very helpful information along the lines he now professes interest in. The gentleman from New York did say that he was criticizing the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] because he had alluded just to the mistake of one naval officer, and further stated that that amounted to but little. Now, if he will read the hearings had before the House Naval Affairs Committee in the fall and winter of 1919, which covered a period of about two months' time, and which hearings related to increased pay for the enlisted and commissioned personnel of the Navy, he will find that not one officer but many officers of the Navy, not at one time but many times, made what he, the gentleman from New York, now designates as a mistake of a single officer. Statements were made to the House Naval Affairs Committee that a number of chief petty officers and officers in the warrant grades and enlisted men in the higher grades were rapidly leaving the service because of better pay on the outside, and that unless something was immediately done to retain them in the service it would be simply impossible to operate our fleet. Of course, the committee accepted these statements as correct, and the officers doubtless felt at the time that they were correct. I know they felt they were honest in what they said, but, unfortunately, it seems they then had and now have an oversupply of men in these two grades.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Alabama have five minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I know that the gentleman is a very distinguished member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will desist.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I know that the gentleman from Alabama is a very distinguished member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I want to ask him one question in all sincerity. I want to know if he honestly believes that either England or Japan will maintain under this agreement anything less than a navy of the very highest efficiency? I want you to answer that question.

Mr. OLIVER. May I state that when the provision of this bill to which this question may be pertinent is reached I will be very glad to discuss it, but I am now simply endeavoring to give some information as to other matters to the House.

Mr. LINEBERGER. You have only to say yes or no in order to answer the question.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be very glad to answer more at length when the section of the bill to which it may be appropriate is reached.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I am sorry that the gentleman sees fit to evade an answer to that question.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no desire to evade answering the question, but my purpose in refusing is simply to avoid entering on the discussion of a matter that is wholly foreign to the information which I have been endeavoring to give the House on other subjects. I will say to the gentleman from California, however, that I feel sure that both Japan and England will not do less than what we will always do, and I know that is what the Appropriations Committee now purposes to do by this bill, namely, to keep their navies in an efficient condition.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Then I assume that the gentleman insists that the committee's report maintains our Navy at the very highest point of efficiency.

Mr. OLIVER. I think we will be able to show that to the satisfaction of the House, if the gentleman from California will only remain here when the personnel section is reached, and I hope that he will give fair consideration to what is said, even though he may now entertain an opinion entirely different from the views of the committee. The committee has no desire to in any way hurt the efficiency of our Navy, and we will very frankly and freely discuss the entire question, giving you our views as to why we limited the enlisted personnel to 67,000 men, when that section of the bill is reached. You must recognize that this is the most orderly way of proceeding in the consideration of a bill of this importance.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman from Alabama believes that we ought to throw aside all the recommendations of the Navy Department because of past mistakes which the Navy Department has made, what in the name of heaven should we do as to the House of Representatives?

Mr. OLIVER. Permit me to say that the premise on which the gentleman predicates his question is not one that I concede to be correct. The committee will be glad to discuss fully the limitation on the enlisted strength when that provision is reached, and I hope that the gentleman will concur with me that it can be better discussed when the appropriate section is reached.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama to advise the committee where the members of the subcommittee obtained their information about the British and Japanese Navies? There is nothing in the hearings about them.

Mr. OLIVER. If the gentleman will only content himself until this section of the bill, to which his question relates, is reached, I think that members of the committee will very gladly give him such information as they have. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Oregon that he is doing far greater hurt to the Navy by undertaking to reduce its officer personnel to 3,400 than can possibly be done by limiting the enlisted personnel to a figure which the gentleman from Oregon seems to feel is inadequate. Certainly the gentleman has found no naval officer who will recommend or indorse the bill reported by his committee to reduce the officer personnel to 3,400.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The testimony of the Naval Intelligence Bureau, even by the Naval Committee, has always been regarded as more or less secret. They always wanted us to lock the doors and prevent anybody from peeking in at the windows, so that their testimony is not public but is printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he thinks that the 96,000 men recommended by the Secretary of the Navy would be a violation of the terms of the treaty providing for the 5-5-3 ratio?

Mr. OLIVER. No. There is nothing in the treaty limiting the enlisted personnel of the Navy. The treaty only seeks to declare a naval holiday and fix a limitation on the number, size, and character of capital ships of the navies of the countries involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, from time to time during the debate gentlemen who do not approve the committee's figures have stated that they are not willing to take the judgment of the committee in the matter, but insist on taking the judgment of experts, and particularly the experts of the Navy Department. Curiously enough, some of the gentlemen who have made that statement have then added that they were therefore for an enlisted personnel of 86,000. I desire to ask gentlemen if any of them know of any time or place when the experts of the department or anyone in the Navy Department agreed to or suggested a personnel of 86,000, or anything like it?

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield for an answer.

Mr. SWING. All right. As between 67,000 and 86,000 all the experts are in favor of 86,000. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. That does not answer my question at all; and, furthermore, it is not an accurate statement, for none of the so-called experts have proposed a personnel of 86,000; they are for a personnel of from 96,000 to 120,000. I have the latest statement that is to be found anywhere from the Navy Department, the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, of date of April 5, in which the Secretary says:

> The General Board of the Navy have recommended as the necessary complement to our treaty Navy approximately 120,000 men.

Mr. SWING. I know; but——

Mr. MONDELL. I decline to yield. There the experts contend for 120,000 men. The Secretary then adds, in this letter to the President, the latest we have heard from him—

> I have recommended to the Congress an enlisted personnel of 90,000 men and 6,000 apprentices, with which personnel I believe the Navy can be maintained for the present with a reasonable degree of efficiency.

Now, what do the experts stand for? Will they be any happier with 86,000 than with 67,000? Nay, verily, the suggestion of 86,000 did not come from any expert, unless the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] qualifies as an expert.

Mr. McARTHUR. He is just as much of an expert as the gentleman from Wyoming. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. That comes from the imagination of the gentleman from Oregon. [Applause.] If we were to give the Navy 86,000, which is some 20,000 less than they have asked, they will be bombarding the doors of the Senate for the additional 20,000 men.

Mr. SWING. No.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from California shakes his head. They will; and if they ask it the gentleman from California will probably vote to give it to them. He will, no doubt, say then, just as he does now, "I am following the experts."

Mr. BUTLER. Let us be fair all around. I know the gentleman will be fair. My friend from California [Mr. SWING] will agree with me that no naval authority ever mentioned the figure of 86,000. It is not to be found in the hearings.

Mr. MONDELL. The Navy Department has never suggested a figure less than 96,000. It has never suggested an expenditure of less than $350,000,000, and if you are to follow these experts your vote must not be for 86,000 but for 94,000, and you must raise this appropriation to approximately the expenditure of the present fiscal year. Then, instead of having appropriations reflecting the economies expected as a result of the treaty, we shall be spending for our Naval Establishment as much, if not more, than we did before the treaty on the limitation of armament. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 15 minutes. I took no time in the general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the Chair kindly inform me when I have consumed 10 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is always with great hesitation that I take a position at variance with the conclusions of the great Committee on Appropriations, headed as it is by the ablest chairman since Uncle JOE CANNON. [Applause.] In this particular instance I have hesitated all the more to set my judgment against that of the chairman of the subcommittee, master that he is of the subject of naval affairs, whose speech when presenting this bill was one of the most brilliant I have ever heard in this House. [Applause.]

It is only after the most thorough investigation and mature deliberation that I have reached the conclusion that in your laudable efforts for economy you have in this instance cut too deep. You have cut below the quick. I fear that in the saving of a few millions you have created a situation which might cause a loss of untold billions. I fear that in your effort to protect Uncle Sam's pocketbook you have come perilously near to injuring dangerously his strong right arm. [Applause.]

I come from Ohio. There are no navy yards or naval stations there, but there are thousands upon thousands of people in Ohio, including her first and the Nation's first citizen, who insist upon the maintenance of an American Navy adequately manned, adequately equipped, and second to none in the world. [Applause.]

It may be superfluous then to assert that my advocacy of a Navy larger than that provided for in this bill is not influenced by any thought of local advantage. I would be reluctant to believe—I do not believe—that any man here is for an adequate Navy merely because he lives in a seacoast State any more than I would believe that he is for an inadequate Navy because he lives in an inland State. Not a man has spoken here, not a man will vote here when the time comes, and I care not which way he votes, whom I would suspect of being governed by motives of other than the highest patriotism.

It is many years since I have listened to a debate so vigorous, so enlightening, so frequently brilliant, as the debate upon this bill, and it has served a most useful purpose. Instead of muddying the issue, as debates sometimes do, it has immensely clarified it, and reduced it down to a plain, vital question, keen as a knife-edge, and not to be evaded or misunderstood. That question is, Does this bill provide for a treaty Navy?

Practically every leader on either side of the question has asserted his purpose to stand for a Navy which will fit with exactitude the terms of the naval treaty recently ratified by the Senate. The one important exception is the gentleman from Tennessee, the distinguished and able leader of the minority. He takes the position that while the treaty, so far as Congress is concerned, binds us both legally and morally not to exceed the ratio provided in its terms, it in no wise binds us to maintain that ratio. I can follow the gentleman from Tennessee only part way in his conclusion. I concede that we are obligated to the high contracting parties not to exceed the 5-5-3 ratio, but I vigorously dissent from the proposition that we are under no obligation to maintain it. On the contrary, I hold that we are under the most definite and solemn obligation to the American people to provide for a Navy which will at least equal Great Britain's and be to Japan's as 5 is to 3. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, you sat with a great majority of both Houses of Congress in the gallery of the now historic hall where the representatives of the powers were gathered to agree upon some plan for the limitation of armament. The air was tense. Not one of us knew whether the conference would be a success. Many of us feared that it might drag on many weary months, to eventually fail. We were hoping that something might happen to relieve our fears. And happen it did, and right off the bat! [Applause.]

Charles Evans Hughes [applause], one of the very greatest ministers of foreign affairs that this or any other country has ever had [applause], arose in his place at the head of the table to address the delegates, and within 20 minutes the clouds of doubt had cleared away and the successful issue of the conference was assured beyond peradventure, for Secretary Hughes had laid America's cards face up on the table, and his proposal was so unselfish, so just, so eminently fair, that its immediate acceptance was a matter of course. [Applause.]

You all recall the wave of applause that rocked the galleries when America's offer was revealed. Every Member of the Senate and every Member of the House jumped to his feet and acclaimed the proposal that America's Navy should be the equal of Great Britain's and be to Japan's as 5 is to 3. Do you suppose that there was one of us who would have applauded a proposal that our Navy should be the equal of Japan's and be to Great Britain's as 3 is to 5? Yet that is precisely what this bill as reported does propose. No, Mr. Chairman, instead of cheers there would have been hoots and hisses. Enthusiastic approval would have given place to righteous indignation. [Applause.]

The question is to-day, Shall we now sanction a proposition which we would then have contemptuously spurned?

Suppose further, Mr. Chairman, it had later developed that our delegates were weakening under pressure and were ready to cast their votes to cut under our own proposed naval strength. Do you not know that the American people with the slightest suspicion of such a weakening would have swept those delegates out of the Hall? [Applause.] Gentlemen of the subcommittee, you can not do now what you could not have done then. You can not put across this second-rate lame-duck Navy that your bill proposes. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Pardon me, please, because I have only a few minutes. I will try to yield to the gentleman later.

The American people then, the American people now, demand a Navy which shall be in man power and efficiency the equal of any in the world. And they are going to get it. [Applause.]

How about the other great navies? Does anyone suppose that Great Britain or Japan will cut their personnel one iota below the number required to efficiently man every single vessel to which they are entitled under the treaty? Is there any man here who would have the hardihood to assert that Great Britain's 18 capital ships and Japan's 10 will not be kept in full commission? Yet you propose by this bill to create a situation where but 13 of our 18 capital ships can be kept in full commission and the other 5 will be compelled to lie idle in a state of innocuous desuetude, so to speak, with but 200 men aboard, one-sixth of their proper complement. Of our 13 cruisers but 10 will be in full commission, and of our 103 destroyers but 65.

You will have crippled the American Navy, gentlemen. You will have made of America a second-class or maybe a third-class sea power.

These are not things which might happen. They are things which will happen, and you can not prevent it if your bill goes through. Congress has the power to limit the number of men to man our ships, but it has not the power to regulate their placing. The Navy Department has informed us that if the number of men be limited to the 67,000 provided in this bill, the things I have enumerated will happen. They have informed us that a personnel of 86,000 is the irreducible minimum necessary to keep all the ships to which we are entitled under the treaty in full commission. In other words, the difference between 86,000 and 67,000 is the difference between having in full commission 18 capital ships instead of 13, 13 cruisers instead of 10, and 103 destroyers instead of 65. It is the difference between a treaty Navy and a lame-duck Navy. I am for a treaty Navy, and I firmly believe that the American people are for a treaty Navy. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Michigan has repeatedly challenged any man on this floor to quote the President of the United States. I accept that challenge. [Applause.] I read from a letter I received this morning:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
April 13, 1922.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN LONGWORTH: I have to acknowledge your letter of inquiry addressed to me on the 10th instant. If I were to address the Congress formally, I could say only what I have already said informally, because I am well persuaded that it is not wise to make so drastic a cut in the naval appropriations as has been proposed in the measure now pending in the House.

[Applause.]

I do not doubt the good faith of the committee majority in believing a suitable Navy can be maintained under the limitations fixed in the pending bill, and I am heartily in accord with every consistent effort to deepen the cut in governmental expenditure. At the same time, I must believe in the good faith of the Navy Department and our naval advisers, who say very emphatically that it is impossible to maintain, within the proposed appropriations, the standard set for our Navy which was made the base of the international conference, and which standard we have proclaimed to the world.

[Applause.]

Of course, the decision must lie with the Congress, but I should not be frank in replying to your inquiry if I did not say that I shall be greatly disappointed, and I believe the country will be greatly disappointed, if the appropriation, to which the Navy must and will adhere, is reduced to the point where the limitation of enlisted men and apprentices is below 86,000.

[Applause.]

No presentation of the situation, which has come to my notice, has served to alter that opinion.

Ultimately, perhaps, the lower figures proposed may be reached, and I hope it will be possible through later international concert, but the trend toward peace and security ought to be more firmly established before going beyond the limitation to which we were gladly committed at the international conference.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Applause.]

These are solemn words of advice, and it would be a reckless man, I think, who would not heed them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When great naval experts like the President of the United States and the gentleman from Wyoming disagree, what are we poor laymen to do? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. As for this poor layman, I unhesitatingly decline to follow the gentleman from Tennessee in his program for the reduction of our Navy below that of Great Britain. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is well known even to laymen, to say nothing of military men, that when the fortunes of battle become most critical reinforcements are always called for most loudly. A few days ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], whom the papers had heralded as the man who was to lead the forces for an increase in Navy personnel claimed to be necessary in order to man what is called a treaty Navy, began to feel somewhat doubtful of the issue and rose in his place on this floor and read a letter from the Secretary of State as to what he deemed to be necessary to maintain a so-called treaty Navy. The gentleman from Massachusetts, of course, solicited that letter. He desired that letter not for his own information, because he was already convinced, but he desired that letter for the pressure which it might exert upon the wavering Members from other sections who did not entertain the same views as did the gentleman from Massachusetts. He wanted the prestige and the name of the Secretary of State with which to persuade those he could not himself convince. Not entirely satisfied that the Secretary of State's views met approval, we are now presented with a letter from the President of the United States. I have no criticism to make of these officers, because I know under what tremendous pressure they are placed by influences outside of Congress and by Members of the majority—whether Republicans or Democrats—when they get into a critical position they beseech the Cabinet officials and high executive officers of the Government to come to the rescue. I do not blame the officials for that course; neither do I approve as a wise course in general. On the question that is now before us I want to say that I believe in maintaining the Navy of the United States up to the point that is permitted under the treaty. A year ago when the naval bill was before the House some will recall that during the debate I made some remarks on disarmament and stated that I believed then, as I believe now, that the only way we can force other nations to yield to disarmament and bring pressure to bear to secure the limitation of armament is to let them know that the United States is going to maintain a Navy as large as is permitted under the treaty, and if we have no treaty, then the greatest in the world.

But I contend that under the treaty the United States does not need as many men as are contended for by some gentlemen on the floor. At this point I might suggest that if the President of the United States, in his letter, is influenced by naval opinion to advocate 86,000 men, there must be disagreement among his advisers, for, according to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Naval Committee, he is not following the naval authorities who advised the committee, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that no naval officer and no authority from the Navy Department ever gave the committee any advice as to 86,000 men for the Navy. [Applause.] But, gentlemen, what does the naval treaty provide? The naval treaty provides that the United States power at the present time, when it completes the immediate scrapping, shall have 500,650 tons. After it completes its two new battleships and scraps two old ones, it will have a naval strength of 525,850 tons. It provides that Great Britain shall have for the present year not 500,000 tons, as provided for the United States, but shall have a tonnage of 580,450 tons. After her two new ships are completed and after the scrapping of four old ones takes place she will have 558,950 tons for an indefinite period until, in the course of time and through the scrapping of ships because of age, she shall be reduced to the permanent basis of 525,000 tons in capital ships.

But for the present time, under the treaty, Great Britain is allowed 580,450 tons, as against 500,650 tons for the United States, and I contend that it does not require as many personnel in the Navy of the United States as it does in the Navy of Great Britain upon that basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if 67,000 men places the United States on a 3 to 5 basis, according to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], then, instead of 86,000 men, we ought to appropriate for something over 110,000 men, using his ratio. It is simply a question of whether or not as a matter of fact 67,000 men will maintain the existing strength of the Navy as it is being maintained at the present time. All of the arguments are based, after all, on a question of fact, and I refuse to accept as an admitted fact the statement that 67,000 men will not maintain the 18-battleship ratio.

I desire to call attention to another fact. The United States battleship fleet of 18 battleships does not have at the present time sufficient auxiliary ships to make it a complete, well-balanced fleet. That is admitted. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], formerly a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, makes that statement, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] will make that statement. The Navy of the United States at the present time has not sufficient auxiliary ships to make a well-rounded 18-battleship fleet. If that is true, then the United States does not require a personnel to man ships which she does not have in commission.

Mr. Chairman, for one I am not and never have been a little Navy man. Although I live far from the sea, I realize it is necessary for the United States to maintain an adequate Navy, and shall so vote, but during the coming year what fears have we that our security will be imperiled? The President of the United States and the Secretary of State, who are now being called as witnesses to support the claim that unless this Congress adopts the larger complement of men for the Navy our security will be endangered and that war perhaps will threaten us—these two officials are the ones who only a short time ago told us that with the conclusion of the Conference on Disarmament, on the ratification by the Senate of the four-power pact, and on the conclusion and approval of all the conference treaties, there was not a cloud of war even so large as a man's hand out yonder on the horizon, that the safety of the United States from war was now practically assured, and that we might lift up our faces toward the future with confident hope that a long step had been made toward securing peace forevermore. [Applause.] Yet now these same prophets of peace, these same gentlemen who have solemnly told the Congress and the country that through their instrumentality peace has been assured, come before the Congress of the United States and tell you that if you reduce the personnel of the Navy a few thousand men you are imperiling the safety of the Republic and the peace of the world. [Applause.] What did the President say when he submitted the treaties to the Senate? I am not criticizing the President. I think he is a fine man, I think he is of genial and good nature and loves his friends, and I think he is particularly susceptible to the pressure that has been exerted upon him in this particular instance. The President does not like to say no to his friends. I think he is rather unfortunate, however, in some of his friends. [Laughter.] What did the President say about these treaties? I quote from his words to the Senate:

Much as it was desirable to lift the burdens of naval armament and strike at the menace of competitive construction and consequent expenditure, the executive branch of the Government, which must be watchful for the Nation's safety, was unwilling to covenant a reduction of armament until there could be plighted new guaranties of peace, until there could be removed the probable menaces of conflict.

The President of the United States says that through these treaties the probable menaces of conflict have been avoided, and yet gentlemen invoke the President as saying that unless this House adopts 86,000 men as the personnel strength of the Navy the Republic will be imperiled. What does Secretary of State Hughes say in the letter that was extorted from him by the good fellowship of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State has been quoted on numerous occasions as saying that as the result of the conference a long way had been traveled along the road to peace and world security. What does he say about a personnel of 86,000? I quote from the letter which was inserted in the RECORD a few days ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts:

> To alter that relation would be a very serious matter for the United States, both impairing its prestige and putting its security in jeopardy.

He does not say how. He simply refers to altering the relation, and I say that with a personnel of 67,000, according to some of the best authorities we have here on the floor of the House, we shall maintain that relation. But how ridiculous for the Secretary of State to come here, through the instrumentality of this letter, and say that unless we adopt 86,000 instead of 67,000 men, the security of the United States would be put in jeopardy. By whom? By whom? What nation is there that can lead out upon the sea a fleet that will challenge the strength of that of the United States, except Great Britain or Japan?

Do we fear danger from Great Britain? The Secretary of State and the President and all in authority have told us that in the conference that has just ended and in all the negotiations between the two countries the United States and Great Britain are in accord; that we have entered into a treaty not to fight but to submit our controversies to conferences and to adjustments. The Secretary of State has told us that there is no danger there. Who else? Japan? Are we going to fight Japan within the next year? Oh, I do not think so. Japan can not lead a navy out on the seas that would equal ours, except according to the testimony of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR]. They are the only ones here who admit that the United States with 500,000 tons can be defeated by Japan with 300,000 tons. They are the only authorities that I know who make such an assertion. It is ridiculous in one breath to say that we have peace and may be assured that we shall continue to have it and in the next breath to say that these nations whom we trust, these nations with whom we are willing to covenant, these nations with whom we are willing to form an alliance, if we but turn our heads the other way are ready to strike us in the back and attack us and sink our battleships. [Applause.]

The only way to get disarmament is to keep after it in the years to come. We have not got it yet, but the people of the United States want it now more than they ever wanted it in the past. This conference was a good thing. It set a precedent, but it is only a small beginning. We have not got disarmament in this country when it takes 120,000 men, according to some of the experts, to man our fleet. We have not got disarmament when out of that conference the weakest nation that entered it came with a navy greater than that swarming armada that Phillip of Spain sent sweeping up the channel to challenge the strength and the might of Great Britain.

We have not disarmed, when the least powerful nation that entered the conference emerged from it with a navy more splendid than that which gathered under the banners of Nelson when he swept the maritime power of Napoleon from the sea and sealed the doom of that great genius whose ambition Waterloo finally engulfed in despair.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not here speaking as a partisan to-day. I am not seeking to take any advantage of the position of the President and of the Secretary of State. But I do fear, in view of the fact that these letters from these officials have been incorporated into this RECORD, I believe in view of the fact that they will be sent over the wires to all parts of the world, that Great Britain and Japan, with whom we have solemnly covenanted not to fight, that these nations, with whom we have contracted not to increase our navies, when they hear the President of the United States and the Secretary of State saying that unless we make the personnel 86,000—these two powers, the only powers from whom we can possibly expect any danger—I believe when that message goes out it will not contribute to the confidence of Great Britain or to the confidence of Japan in the good faith or in the fairness of the United States of America. [Applause.] They may say, "We trust America, but she does not trust us. Is it possible that when her back is turned she fears we shall assassinate her in the dark?" I am not willing to issue that kind of a message to the world. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL TRAINING STATION, GREAT LAKES.

Maintenance of naval training station: For labor and material; general care, repairs, and improvement of grounds, buildings, and piers; street car fare; purchase and maintenance of live stock, and attendance on same; wagons, carts, implements, and tools, and repairs to same, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of one horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle to be used only for official purposes; fire apparatus and extinguishers; gymnastic implements; models and other articles needed in instruction of apprentice seamen; printing outfit and material, and maintenance of same; heating and lighting, and repairs to power-plant equipment, distributing mains, tunnel, and conduits; stationery, books, schoolbooks, and periodicals; washing; packing boxes and materials; lectures and suitable entertainments for apprentice seamen; and all other contingent expenses; in all, $160,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, shall not exceed $45,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

A few years ago the experts in the Navy Department insisted that Congress should provide for a training station on the Great Lakes at tremendous expense, and, guided by the experts in the Navy Department, Congress made provision for a training station to be located on the Lakes, in the judgment of a commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, which commission promptly located the station in the district represented by the chairman of the Naval Committee. And having appropriated great sums of money for the expense of the Great Lakes Training Station, located north of Chicago, and having largely depended upon the men who went through the Great Lakes Training Station during the war, the experts in the Navy Department now conclude that it is not necessary to have a training station on the Great Lakes at all, and under their advice this bill practically abolishes the training station constructed, not as a war measure but provided for long before the war, on the advice of the experts. But experts change. The opinion of the experts to-day is worth nothing to-morrow, because experts can be manipulated more rapidly than three-card monte. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. May I ask the gentleman if he ever knew an expert yet who had any other function in life except to contradict every other expert?

Mr. MANN. I have great respect for the experts. I quite frequently follow them. I am not complaining now, because I do not know much about the Great Lakes Training Station, and I wonder if the Navy Department itself does. The Navy Department has always been largely controlled by the people along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, while in time of war the Navy goes back to the interior to get the men to man and fight the ships. [Applause.] And when war is over they want to locate the training stations all along the coast, where the money will be spent in the districts represented by the gentlemen who ardently advocate an enlarged Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a motion to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking one or two questions of the chairman of the subcommittee, if he will be good enough to give me his attention.

I observe that the appropriation for the Great Lakes Training Station has been reduced from $400,000 to $160,000 and the appropriation for Hampton Roads from $375,000 to $360,000. In other words, the appropriation, Mr. Chairman, for Hampton Roads has been reduced $15,000 and that for Great Lakes has been reduced $240,000. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee what it is proposed to do at Great Lakes hereafter?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the question of the training for the Navy is a rather difficult sort of a question, because of the different methods which prevail for training in different years. Originally the Navy Department insisted that it was necessary to keep the boys on shore in these stations for some four months and get their training there. But during the war they discovered that about all they needed to do was to keep them on shore long enough to be sure that they would not come down with the measles or the mumps and spread it to the fleet, and that the proper place to train the boys in seamanship and fighting was on the ships of the Navy. Now, you can readily see that that has resulted in an almost complete abandonment of these stations for the purposes for which they were originally intended. For instance, at the present time, with 96,000 men in the Navy, there are less than 5,000 men in training in all the stations but one. Now, that being the case, we have training stations enough not only to train the boys for our Navy but, I suppose, to train enough for all the navies of the world.

The one in Chicago is a permanent training station, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, with a capacity originally for about 2,500 boys, as I recollect. Before the war we appropriated for this station $80,000 the last year. And I think they had 1,200 or 1,500 boys in the station at that time. Now, in view of the fact that the stations have been almost completely abandoned for the purposes of training, we thought if we doubled what they had before the war at Chicago it would be a fair allowance.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What was the appropriation for Hampton Roads before the war?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That brings about the other question which I was quite sure the gentleman would reach in a moment, that the station at Hampton Roads, under the policy of the department, has, I think, been regarded as the place at which to centralize the training so far as the training of boys for the fleet is concerned. So that during this year on the Atlantic coast practically all the training has been done at Hampton Roads. That is the greatest rendezvous, the department says, for the fleet. The fleet being there, it is desired to train the boys and put them into the station out of the ships, and so they expect what training they will do on the Atlantic coast will in all likelihood all be done at Hampton Roads. That is why we did not reduce the appropriation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, Mr. Chairman, it appears to be the policy of this appropriation bill to destroy whatever interest there may be in the Central West——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for one further remark?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Navy Department desired to abandon the training station in Rhode Island and not use it at all. We did not know what the policy of Congress should be on a proposition of that kind. The fleet is at Newport through the happy and cheerful summer months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. I have not heretofore taken the time of the committee on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It was stated that there would be more or less training, more or less passing back and forth from the ships to the shore during the summer months, and so we reported for Newport an item sufficient to keep the place open in that season of the year when the fleet would be in that vicinity.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As I started to say, Mr. Chairman, it seems to be the policy of this appropriation bill to discourage whatever interest there may be in the matter of the training of boys for the Navy in the Central West. It happens that the Great Lakes Training Station is in my district, but I am not speaking for it on that account. I presume that the station will be maintained for some purpose. At the present time there is a total personnel at the station and in the hospital of 1,670 men. There are under instruction in the radio school 255, and there are in the aviation school 193. The operating force and the men on general detail number 538; the marines at the station number 26; in the main hospital there are patients to the number of 68, and there are war veterans to the number of 400, and the operating force is 190.

Reducing this appropriation from $400,000 to $160,000 leaves practically only a monument of the buildings, the grounds, and the equipment to designate the place where during the war the largest number of men were recruited and trained for service in the American Navy; men who came from the farms in the West and from the factories and shops in the big cities of the central portion of this country and furnished a large part of our forces at sea.

Is it proposed, Mr. Chairman, that the Navy shall be the particular property and the particular interest only of the seacoast of the United States, or is the policy to be followed hereafter, as it has been followed heretofore, that an attempt be made to create and maintain close contact and direct interest in this great arm of the fighting strength of the Republic among the people who live away from the seashore and from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts?

The appropriation for Hampton Roads has been reduced in the amount of $15,000, while that for the Great Lakes has been reduced $240,000. I would like to ask the chairman why this discrimination? We could at least continue to keep the training schools at the Great Lakes. Most certainly the radio school and the aviation school can be kept there. Why would it not be equitable and fair to the purposes of the Navy to transfer $100,000, say, of the appropriation for Hampton Roads to the Great Lakes, and put the two stations at least upon a parity? Then you will show that you have some regard for the great work which has been done by the people of the Middle West for the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, I will say to my friend from Illinois that in preparing the bill providing for training of course we had to be governed very largely by where the Navy Department said they were going to train the boys.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, they have some fondness for the Atlantic coast and for the Pacific coast. I understand that. But is not Congress going to have something to say about it?

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. DEAL. Perhaps I can enlighten the gentleman somewhat on that point. Chicago, or the naval training station on the Lakes, is about a thousand miles from the seacoast, and in the transfer of these boys to and from the training school to the coast it would cost this Government millions of dollars annually to take those boys to and from the coast and bring them back to the ships.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. You do not have to spend any money to transfer them to the radio and aviation schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I move to amend, page 15, line 19, by changing the figures from "$160,000" to "$260,000." And I want to say that if that motion is adopted I shall move to amend the appropriation for Hampton Roads by reducing the amount there from $360,000 to $260,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 15, line 19, strike out the figures "$160,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$260,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a count of noses. I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL TRAINING STATION, NAVAL OPERATING BASE, HAMPTON ROADS, VA.

Maintenance of naval training station at naval operating base, Virginia: For labor and material, general care, repairs, and improvements; schoolbooks; and all other incidental expenses; in all, $360,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, shall not exceed $25,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, in my remarks a few minutes ago, when I suggested the transfer of $100,000 from the naval training station at Hampton Roads to that at Great Lakes, I of course had no intention of deprecating the work at Hampton Roads, and I shall not now make the motion which I then suggested. I want to say this, however, that I assume that this appropriation for training is based upon a 67,000 men Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There are only 5,000 to be trained in it in any event, even under the 96,000 men Navy. The training in these training schools is almost negligible.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you have a larger number of men do you not have to supply more men to take the places of those whose terms expire? You certainly will have need for a larger training school. I merely want to say that if the number of the personnel in the Navy is increased, then it will be necessary to increase the appropriations for the training schools. And when that is done I hope the committee and the department will see the justice of giving some consideration to the people of the great Middle West, and will recall the fact that the people of this country have at great expense established a large, efficient, creditable training station in the Middle West, which should not be allowed to go to rack and ruin.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman thinks that the Navy as now operated is going to give any consideration to the West he has another guess coming. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I hope I will not have to reach that conclusion, because if we are to be successful in this Nation in time of peace as well as in time of war, if we are to prosecute industry successfully and defend ourselves adequately against any possible emergency or exigency, we must give proper attention to every part and every section of our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Naval Home, $158,622, which sum shall be paid out of the income from the naval pension fund.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to read a short editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of Monday, April 10, 1922, and have it printed with my remarks in 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an editorial in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, the other day when we were considering the so-called adjusted compensation bill I tried to reason with myself as to how I should vote. Originally I had not favored this legislation, because I knew that many of the ex-service men themselves did not favor it and the business interests of our country were very much opposed to it, but I reasoned that a great majority of our service men now had become convinced that this compensation was justly due them; so, following my invariable rule, I resolved my doubts in favor of the men who had worn the uniform of our country in time of war and voted for the then pending bill. When any legislation or appropriation concerning the Army or Navy is being considered by the House I invariably follow one rule, namely, to favor that policy which looks to the safety of our country; and believing as I do, that a real Army and a real Navy are essential if we would compel peace, I shall vote now to keep our Navy equal to the navy of any other great power and trust to the genius of our American naval men to turn that arm of our defense in case of need into the very best Navy of the world, able to strike the hardest blow. National defense is the prime reason for the existence of our Federal Government, and yet we haggle over appropriations to maintain this defense while with a lavish hand we appropriate moneys for purposes which are really not national.

How can anyone with full knowledge of the significance of the meeting of the great nations on the question of naval disarmament fail to see that it is our plain duty to maintain a Navy equal to the one approved by that conference? Any other course, it seems to me, is an act of treachery to the nations who so gladly answered the call of our President and attended this conference.

I do not profess to have sufficient knowledge of the personnel of the Navy to determine for myself the exact number of men necessary to keep our Navy in the ratio provided in the conference agreement, so I am compelled to rely on the opinions of men who do have this knowledge. If the number provided by this bill would enable us to maintain this ratio, it seems strange that no one has shown us that it can be done, while, on the other hand, every naval authority takes the position that under this bill our ratio can not be maintained. It should not be a difficult matter to determine. We can not go beyond the ratio; our associated nations will prevent this; but we should not fall below that ratio, because our sense of honor and fair play should be strong enough to prevent such action. [Applause.]

The following is the editorial referred to:

A CHALLENGE TO COMMON SENSE.

"The defense of the Navy appropriation bill, reported to the House on Saturday by Representative KELLEY of Michigan, the chairman of the subcommittee that framed it, is not convincing. He gives three reasons for the reduction of the enlisted personnel to 67,000 men—the agreement reached by the Washington conference, the laying up of surplus destroyers, and the elimination of nondescript vessels.

"Some of these reductions are contemplated by the Navy Department, to be sure. But the bill as it stands goes much further than that. Mr. KELLEY's assertion that the 18 battleships to be retained under the terms of the treaty can be kept in full commission is denied by the Secretary of the Navy. Five of them, at least, must be put in ordinary with caretakers.

"It is absolutely futile, therefore, to contend that the bill preserves the 5-5-3 ratio agreed upon by the conference. Every naval expert who has expressed an opinion denies that. It is, they say, a 5-3-2½ ratio, with the United States at the 2½ end. Mr. KELLEY takes no account, apparently, of fleet maneuvers or gun practice. These are vital items in naval efficiency. A fleet on paper is not a fleet in being. As Admiral Sims has put it, 'A navy that can not win is a useless expense. This is preparation for defeat.' Mr. KELLEY was not very successful in juggling the figures as to the naval forces of Great Britain and Japan under the treaty. It would be interesting to learn how he comes to the conclusion that with the proposed reduction in personnel the American Navy and the British 'will stand almost exactly at the same point.'

"Secretary Denby states the whole case in a nutshell when he says, 'We called the conference. We made the proposals. We should abide by the conclusions.' If the bill goes through as it has been reported, all our naval plans go by the board. It is, as the Secretary points out, 'a challenge to the common sense of our people.' Congress should be made to feel that the Nation realizes this."

[Applause.]

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I believe that that expresses the opinion of the patriotic people of this country. They are not afraid of this expense; what they want is as strong and efficient a Navy as they can get under the terms of the disarmament agreement. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For services of necessary employees at branch offices, $23,700.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I really should have tried to get the floor immediately after my genial friend from Kansas, because I can qualify with him as far as lack of technical knowledge of the Navy is concerned.

I do not intend to discuss this measure from such a point of view or to discuss whether we should have 1,100 or 1,300 men on a capital ship; I simply want to present my views as the views of an average American citizen who simply tries to use a little common sense and judgment in arriving at a conclusion.

I am in entire accord with the statement of the chairman of the committee when he said that the American people do not want at this time to spend a single dollar that is not absolutely necessary. And I think my record along this line will compare favorably with that of any man in this body. Yet at this time, in many ways the most crucial during our history as a Nation, I do not want to be "penny-wise and pound foolish." That is what I fear we would be if we cut our Navy personnel down to 67,000, as provided by the committee.

My memory is not so short but what I well remember the condition we were in only five short years ago when we were suddenly thrown into the very vortex of a world-wide war with not a single weapon of offense or defense at our command. How often we all thanked God for England's Navy and France's Army. [Applause.] How often we all said we will not be caught that way again. If it had not been for these two arms of defense raised in our favor, we would have a much bigger war burden than we are carrying to-day.

My friends, in the next life and death struggle of nations perhaps England's Navy and France's Army may not be on our side. Let us to-day make our own Navy our strong arm of defense and not trust anybody. [Applause.] That is the only sensible thing to do. It is not the appropriating for a few extra men that runs up the big Navy cost; it is the stupendous and everlasting building program—and I voted for it when it was thought necessary. But this expansion program has been done away. We have the ships, and all we have to do is to properly man them, and I believe this House is going to vote to do it.

The 5-5-3 naval agreement of the conference has met the approval of every American citizen, and I for one am not going to vote for any measure that contains a question of doubt as to our status under this agreement. As I understand it, the President, Secretary of the Navy, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and every naval advisor of the conference says we can not efficiently maintain the ratio allowed us by the conference with 67,000. It is a cold show-down between the executives and every expert naval authority of the country on one side and the five members of the Subcommittee on Appropriations on the other, and I am going to give the benefit of the doubt to the President and the Secretary of the Navy. I had rather be sure than sorry.

I listened to every word of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, and he made one of the most able and convincing arguments I have ever heard here. The only question is, was his premise right? Was it a fair basis to lay as a foundation of a new Navy the number of men on shipboard on February 1? We were then operating under the old régime. We were then keeping in commission all our ships, but not necessarily at the highest point of efficiency. We were using the men as seemed best for the number of ships afloat and under the then existing conditions. But while under the new arrangement everything is entirely different, and we are now limited as to number of ships, we are not limited as to the efficiency of the operating force we can place on those ships. This is the only place, if we operate under the treaty, where we have any discretionary power—namely, the degree of efficiency we maintain on the ships allowed us. If 1,300 or 1,400 men will make a capital ship more efficient than 1,100 men, then the people of this country want the 1,400.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. There were only 2,900 men difference between the number of men allotted by the committee to the 18 battleships and the number of men the Navy says we have got to have.

Mr. SNELL. Then I would go the limit of the 2,900; give them all they ask for in this instance, and be sure of the future efficiency of our Navy.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. When I ask the question I have the same matter in mind that my friend has, the matter of economy.

I think the Bureau of Standards is authority for the statement that 93 per cent of the total cost of Government is for war, and that 70 per cent of that is due to past wars. We can not reduce that 70 per cent, because it is the interest on the public debt, the sinking fund for the disabled soldiers, and other things that grew out of the wars that we must pay. That leaves about 23 per cent to maintain our present Military Establishment. If we do not cut on that, where is there any chance to save anything?

Mr. SNELL. We are cutting in this way, and when we cut out the large and expensive building program, we cut the great part of the cost of our Navy during the last few years. At the present time we have the ships and the only additional expense is appropriating for a few extra men to man those ships.

It is a question of efficiency at which we shall keep those ships that I am interested in, and the one the American people are interested in. Furthermore, in my judgment that is the only question left open to us to decide, if we operate under the terms of the naval agreement.

Mr. FESS. My friend and I have talked about the matter, and we are both open-minded on this question. I have not yet ascertained how much we are going to be able to save as a result of the arms conference if we allow the Navy influence to coptinue.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think that we are allowing this Navy influence to continue when we simply vote enough money to keep at 100 per cent efficiency the ships allowed us under the naval treaty. I am not a great-Navy man; I do not even know any men in the Navy. I have no naval activities in my district, but I am interested in having a strong arm of defense on which we can depend in time of need.

Mr. FESS. I have always been a big-Navy man.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know that I always have, but I have voted for everything during the last five or six years which has been asked for, because I thought it was necessary. It seems to me at this time that we owe it to the American people to vote to keep our Navy under the terms of the agreement to the highest possible efficiency. That is the only thing that I am interested in as far as this bill is concerned. While I appreciate the work that has been done by the Subcommittee on Appropriations, I do feel that in this particular matter we ought to follow the advice as far as possible of the experts of the country, of the men who were selected to represent us in the naval conference, and in whose judgment we have the fullest confidence.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman will recall the advice of the experts of the Army who recommended an Army of 576,000, and the gentleman would not follow that advice. What I am concerned about is whether by following the recommendations of these men we will save a single dollar. Is it not true that they make the recommendation in the light of what the Congress will allow them?

Mr. SNELL. They have nothing to do with recommending a building program, because that is a closed incident. The only question before us now is the efficiency at which we shall keep the ships allowed us under the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is one of the very best business men in the House, and I am very much interested in what he is saying. It is true that the building program is eliminated now from the bill.

Mr. SNELL. That was the large part of our naval expense heretofore.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But the gentleman must keep in mind, so far as this year's finances are concerned, that a bill will follow this to settle up contracts on account of the cancellation of all these ships, and that it has been variously estimated will take from sixty to one hundred million dollars. That will have to be paid this year.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that; but even so, it is cheaper to settle these contracts than to go on and build the ships; and, furthermore, that is not the question before us at the present time. The only question before us at the present time and one real question of contention in regard to this bill is whether we will appropriate for 67,000 men or 86,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman stated that the only added expense which would be involved by increasing this number of men would be what the men would cost in their subsistence.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; that is practically the situation as I see it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman does vote for an increase in the number of men, I assume that he does it upon the theory that the number of men provided for in the bill would keep in commission only 12 battleships.

Mr. SNELL. That is practically my position. I think there is some question of doubt about the number of men required, and I prefer to be absolutely sure. I do not think there is enough difference between 67,000 and 86,000 so that we can afford to take any chances at this time. There is where I stand.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The point I wanted to make is this: That if the committee is wrong and we have provided only enough for 12 battleships, and the gentleman is going to vote to add enough men now to man 18 battleships, then the gentleman must see that we will have to provide for enough money to keep those battleships going, fuel and everything else in proportion, if we have made the mistake that the gentleman says we have made.

Mr. SNELL. I do not say that I am absolutely sure the committee has made that mistake, but I want to give the benefit of the doubt on the side of safety.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And if that is true, a thousand men put on the ships means $3,000,000 for every 1,000 men. You can figure that up for yourself.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman did not understand my statement as I made it. Furthermore, I do not understand it costs $3,000 per man when you have everything else provided.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. An increase of 20,000 men would mean an increase in the bill of $60,000,000, if the gentleman is correct in his original premise, that the committee has made a mistake, and he says we have.

Mr. SNELL. I said I thought there was a question of doubt, and if there is a question of doubt as regards the matter of providing 100 per cent efficiency in the ships that we are allowed under the treaty, I am going to vote for the higher number of men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It would be useless, would it not, to provide the men unless we provided the fuel with which to run the ships?

Mr. SNELL. I understand that you provided the fuel; you stated so in your opening speech.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You are taking my position now.

Mr. SNELL. No; I am not.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You are on one side or the other of the situation.

Mr. SNELL. My position is absolutely clear. You provide in this bill maintenance for all the capital ships that we are allowed under the treaty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And plenty of men.

Mr. SNELL. The only question in my mind and in the mind of this House is whether you have provided enough men, and I say that I give the benefit of the doubt to the larger number of men, because I think that is what we should do at this time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In reference to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] as to whether we are saving anything as a result of the disarmament conference, the chairman of the subcommittee says that the bill appropriates $233,000,000, and that that is a saving of $192,000,000 from the Budget estimates. We appropriated ninety millions last year for construction, but we are saving $102,000,000 even beyond the construction program.

Mr. MADDEN. It costs $75,000,000 to settle all of the contracts.

Mr. SNELL. That is not carried in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. That will be carried in another bill.

Mr. SNELL. We are not discussing that at the present time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman differentiate between keeping in a high state of efficiency that which by treaty we are limited in going beyond and that arm of defense, such as fortifications, where we are not limited as to the number which may be employed?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know as I understand the gentleman, but I am for fullest efficiency in every arm of offense and defense.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not the rule the War Department is following with reference to fortifications. They——

Mr. SNELL. I decline to yield further. I am willing to go the limit to keep our fighting force and all arms of defense up to 100 per cent efficiency.

Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with a 4.99–5–3 ratio. I want it 5–5–3, and our five spelled with all capital letters, and no doubt about it. I want the Navy allowed us under the treaty the best money, energy, and American brain power can make it.

The responsibility rests on you men right here, and you can not dodge that responsibility. It is all right to argue over the number of clerks in the Navy Department and cut them to the limit, but it is different when you are dealing with the safety of the Nation.

This is probably the most carefully prepared Navy appropriation bill ever presented to this House, and the only great question of contention is the appropriating for 19,000 additional men. I honestly believe that if we err at all that we err on the side of safety, and that we should vote for the additional 19,000 men and certainly do our part toward making our Navy the best and most efficient navy in the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

SALARIES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Astronomers—1 $3,200, 1 $2,800; assistant astronomers—1 $2,400, 1 $2,000, 1 $1,800; assistant in department of nautical instruments, $1,600; clerks—chief $2,000, 1 $1,800, 1 $1,600, 2 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,200 each; instrument maker, $1,500; electrician, $1,500; librarian, $1,800; assistants—3 at $1,600 each, 3 at $1,400 each; stenographer and typewriter, $900; foreman and captain of the watch, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; engineer, $1,200; 4 firemen, at $720 each; 7 watchmen, at $720 each; mechanic, $900; 8 laborers, at $660 each; in all, $56,400.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume much of the time of the House in what I propose to say. The bill before the House demands the frank expression of every Member. Since my entrance into this body I have voted uniformly for the strictest economy. I have voted for amendments that sought to reduce appropriations, even in opposition to a committee. I have expressed myself in season and out of season to the effect that our duty was to cut out every unnecessary dollar that could be dispensed with, keeping in mind the national safety and welfare. The only apparent exception was when I voted to increase the appropriation for rivers and harbors. I voted for this increase because after the most careful consideration, and utilizing the experience of our skilled engineers in the War Department, I thought it in the interest of the whole country. I shall employ the same impulses—the same kind of thought and action in voting on this bill. Only recently this Government entered into an agreement for naval disarmament with England and Japan, establishing the ratio of 5–5–3. This was not only a solemn obligation not to exceed the ratio of five on our part but, in my judgment, as equally a solemn obligation not to fall behind it. Those who know—at least those who are expected to know; those, indeed, who are employed by the Nation to know; the paid experts; the men of especial experience and training; those whom we would surely depend upon in war; all of those from the President to the Secretary of State, from the Secretary of State to the Intelligence Bureau of the Government, from the Intelligence Bureau to the Naval Board, from the Naval Board to every naval officer—all unite in asking for more than 86,000 men, but positively assert the necessity of this number as a minimum in order to maintain our solemn ratio obligations. In purely domestic legislation I believe in the utmost freedom of thought and action by this House, because its Members have more or less personal knowledge of the facts and consequences involved. This is an international matter, with international facts involved and with international consequences. Under such circumstances I feel it my duty to subordinate any personal belief or desire involved in this legislation, but shall follow the desires of those who ought to possess vastly superior information to any I could possibly acquire. My thought is that if such expert and unanimous authority is not to be respected, why respect any authority at all? Why spend the money we do spend for this superior technical knowledge and then reject it? Why employ a skilled architect to plan the building of a house, then follow the advice of a lawyer, banker, or blacksmith? Mr. Chairman, while I desire with all my soul to lessen taxation, and therefore expenditures of money, there are some cases when to do so works for national hurt or menace. This I believe to be one of them, and I shall therefore vote for the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request, and also to include a telegram from Hanford MacNider, head of the American Legion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want to make some observations on this Naval Observatory appropriation. We have heard a good deal here, and particularly from the members of the committee, about naval influence, about the Members of the House being influenced by the Navy Department one way or the other. I want to call the attention of the chairman of this committee to the facts involved in this Naval Observatory item.

Some years ago the Appropriation Committee had a very interesting hearing on the subject of the Naval Observatory. They wrote letters—I suppose the chairman is going to read my remarks; I see he is not listening to me——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no Member of the House to whom I listen with greater pleasure, and whose speeches I read with greater delight. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I congratulate the gentleman upon his excellent taste and judgment. [Laughter.]

As I remarked before, Mr. Chairman, several years ago the Appropriation Committee held some very interesting hearings on this subject of the Naval Observatory. The facts are that we spend more money on this observatory than is spent upon any similar astronomical observatory anywhere else on the face of the earth, and as an astronomical observatory it does not even rank second class. It is not comparable, in the estimation of the scientific men of the world, with the naval observatories in many of the countries of Europe, nor is it in a class with the observatories, many of them, in the United States.

The letters were addressed to the scientific men of this country, the Lick Observatory of California, the University of Wisconsin, Harvard, Carnegie Observatory, and a number of others, and all of them wrote very fully and freely about it, and they all wrote that the manner in which this Naval Observatory had been administered from the beginning was most unsatisfactory. The great observatory in Russia, established in 1675, has had fewer men in charge of it as directors than we have had in charge of the Naval Observatory in this country during the past 75 years. There has been but one astronomer of world note ever in charge, and that was Simon Newcomb, in all the history of the observatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman made a rather sweeping statement that the observatory had always been in rather a second-class condition from its very origin.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. From second to third and fourth and fifth as an astronomical observatory.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman recall when the Naval Observatory was under the charge of the late Matthew Maury, and when it not only was efficient but was known all over the world? And when Maury left he was asked to assume charge of a similar institution in Russia.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. He was one of the greatest scientific men this country ever produced, but his work in the observatory was not astronomical. He mapped the roads of the sea, its currents, and trade winds, and it was there that he wrote his physical geography, but his fame does not rest on astronomy. No man has more respect for the memory of Matthew Maury than I have, and Maury, let us keep in mind, was at the observatory for 17 years. He had time for consecutive and continuous work.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My attention was attracted elsewhere for a moment, but I think I caught the import of what the gentleman was saying. The gentleman says that this is not an efficient department of the Navy?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I did. It is inefficient, and this is the reason why it is inefficient: It is because of this naval influence that prevents our transferring the Naval Observatory from the Navy Department into the Smithsonian Institution or some other civil department of that sort, where it belongs. All of the astronomers of this country—and there is no exception—who were interrogated testified to that, and they have all complained. We put a man in there, a naval officer, coming off the sea and resuming shore duty because, according to the theory entertained by the Navy Department, he is an expert. Whatever they assign an officer to, he forthwith becomes an expert in or is already an expert. He comes in for two years' shore duty, and then they assign him to this Naval Observatory. Therefore he is one of the world's great astronomers. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would judge from what the gentleman says that he has not all confidence in everybody that the Navy Department sets up as an expert?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No. Navy officers have been complained of in this debate, and the gentleman himself has been complaining of the influence which they exert upon Members of the House who are not members of the committee. An officer is assigned out there for two years, and then sent off in command of a battleship; and, as these distinguished astronomers have stated to the committee, a naval officer is no more competent to take charge of that observatory than an astronomer is competent to take charge of a battleship. There is no disagreement among these distinguished scientists on that subject. Yet that institution stays just where it is, and where it has been all through these years, under the Navy Department, spending more money and not doing the work that so great an observatory should do.

Years ago I introduced a bill, as other Members have done, in the effort to try to get that institution transferred to the Smithsonian Institution, where it would function as it ought to function. But what do we find? The Committee on Appropriations can not legislate, and these bills are referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Naval Affairs consults the Navy Department, and the Navy Department reports, of course, that it should remain where it is, in charge of some great astronomer who has just returned from a tour of duty on the high seas. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman's remarks are very illuminating, especially with reference to what we will come to later in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. FESS. I think I can deduce the gentleman's conclusion from what he has said, that the designation of a naval officer to have charge of the Naval Observatory is not altogether wise?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. It is the theory of the Navy that a man who graduates from the Naval Academy at Annapolis and comes back from a tour of duty on the sea and is assigned to shore duty necessarily becomes an expert in whatever they assign him to. They assign him out here to this Naval Observatory, on which we have expended a great deal of money, on which we have expended more than has been expended on any other astronomical observatory on the face of the earth, and yet it ranks fifth. Simon Newcomb, the one great astronomer who has ever been in charge, on his deathbed begged that this observatory might be transferred to the Smithsonian Institution, where it could function properly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. A little further on in the bill, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] suggested, we are going to have another and a very illuminating instance of this same theory of the Navy Department, in which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] and his committee have acquiesced. The Navy wants to get rid of the civilian instructors at Annapolis, proceeding upon the theory that a sailor who comes in every two years on shore duty is competent to do anything or teach anything that anybody can teach. Here is a list of them, just taking them as they come: No. 1 is an astronomer; No. 2 is a professor of mathematics; No. 3 is a professor of English; No. 4 is a professor of something else; and the proposal is to send them over to Annapolis to teach those boys over there—to educate them.

Now, listen—and here is the bait which they hold out, and this committee swallowed the hook.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In a moment. They said to this committee, "Gentlemen, if you will do this, you will save $235,000 a year," and with all due respect to the gentleman from Michigan, every wheel in every head on the Committee on Appropriations quit running. Whenever you convince a member of the Appropriations Committee that your proposal will save $235,000 a year, you have captured his judgment. The Navy officers, or at least those whose advice is now sought about Annapolis matters, want to get rid of all civilian instructors, and this bill is the first bad step in that direction.

You gentlemen talk of militarism. What more insidious or effective method can you conceive than this?

Start the boys out when they are 16 or 17 years old, the impressionable age, under these military men, take them away from civil life completely and take them away from civilian instructions, and let them see nothing but brass buttons day or night, and let them then and there imbibe that spirit of militarism which they will breathe and drink, when they are permitted to breathe and drink at all. Why, this committee has talked more about militarism than all the rest of the committees of the House put together at this session of Congress, and yet when those uniformed gentlemen come up on the blind side of you with a proposition to save $235,000, you gentlemen fall for it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have three minutes more, of which I propose to use the greater part. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Mississippi that this is only another illustration of the fact that he and I are almost in perfect accord, as we nearly always have been on a great many of these matters. The Navy Department recommended that 78 civilian professors and instructors at the Naval Academy at Annapolis be dismissed on the 1st of July. The Committee on Appropriations did not think that was quite the proper thing to do, for two reasons: First, because we had some very grave doubts along the very lines that the gentleman from Mississippi has suggested.

We believed that there ought to be a larger percentage of civilian professors in the academy than the Navy Department had recommended. Second, we did not believe it was fair to dismiss on so short notice that many professors, as teachers are obliged to seek employment at a particular time of the year, and if they do not get a position then they do not get it at all. So instead of cutting out 78 instructors and professors, as the Navy Department recommended, we included in the appropriation enough for all of them, with the exception of 20 or 30 whom we thought possibly the superintendent might pick out and dismiss without doing either the service or the teachers any injustice. Now, what does the gentleman think about the action of the committee?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I say the committee made a mistake to that extent. They ought to have dismissed 20 or 30 of the naval officers instead of the civilian teachers. I mean, dismiss them as teachers. Why, the naval officers who are teachers there are getting very much larger salaries than the civilian teachers. Yet gentlemen say we can save money by putting naval officers in there as teachers, whereas it costs more, and they do not know how to teach. Admiral Wilson told you very frankly that he had no word in their selection, that he did not know who they were, that they come in from their tour of duty at sea and are assigned there as teachers at Annapolis without his choice. After they have been there about a year they pick up some knowledge of how to teach. They stay there another year, and then they go out and another set of new men come in. He said they wanted it as a normal school for the naval officers. He thought it would be a good thing for the naval officers, not for the boys that are being taught. Suppose Harvard should turn off every professor at the university and just go out among the alumni and gather men together from all walks of life except the profession of teaching and put them on the job there and keep them two years and then turn them off and get another set. How long would Harvard rank as an institution of learning? [Applause.] Why, gentlemen, there is no answer to it.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the Clerk may read in my time the copy of a telegram from myself to Col. Hanford MacNider, national commander of the American Legion, and his reply thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1922.

Col. HANFORD MACNIDER,
National Commander the American Legion,
National Headquarters, Indianapolis, Ind.:

Naval appropriation bill, which threatens destruction of the efficiency of our Navy and sets aside the ratio agreed to at the disarmament conference, now pending before the House. I will appreciate an expression of your sentiments upon this bill on behalf of the ex-service men and women of the country which I shall take pleasure in calling to the attention of my colleagues on the floor of the House.

C. N. MCARTHUR.

—

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 13, 1922.

C. N. MCARTHUR, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The American Legion, men who have served with the colors, desires to go on record as energetically upholding the President in his stand for the retention of a sufficient number of officers and men to adequately man the remaining fleet left our country under the agreement of the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments. The Legion must and does oppose the drastic reduction in personnel now proposed in committee amendments to the naval appropriation bill now before Congress. The Legion always has indorsed a strong naval policy, but it has observed with heartfelt approval the international deliberations that resulted in an equitable reduction of armament. It felt that the world had taken a real step toward brotherhood when the 5–5–3 ratio of armament was adopted by the three leading maritime powers, but its approval can not extend to the present proposals for further weakening our naval strength. The members of the American Legion know from an experience that can not be ignored that the safety of our whole country depends, first of all, upon our Navy. They know it is a first line of defense in time of war, a gauge of our position in international affairs in time of peace, and the only agency through which the Monroe doctrine can remain effective. The Legion feels that the lessons of the last war must not be so readily unlearned. We can not forget that our Navy was unprepared in 1917, while friendly nations gave of their slender strength to aid us. We know that officers and men can not spring to arms overnight. They must be trained through long years of peace. Further recommendations for reduction would cut our quota actually below 3, as compared with the 5 of Great Britain, and America would become a second-rate naval power.

National security demands that naval reduction keep within the bounds of reason. Not least among the evils attendant on too drastic reduction would be the fact that our voice would be weakened when future suggestions for future reduction of armament are made.

The Legion, not as militarists but as men with open eyes and hard-earned experience, believes further reduction of the naval strength would imperil the integrity of our national defense.

HANFORD MACNIDER.

[Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MCARTHUR. If I have any time remaining, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did the gentleman ever before see it stated in print anywhere, or hear it fall from any person's lips, that the American Navy was not prepared in 1917?

Mr. MCARTHUR. I have heard it very often.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My impression was that one of the things in the history of the war which thrilled the world was the famous reply of the American naval officer to the chief of staff of the British Navy, who asked, "When will you be ready?" And the reply of the American naval officer was, "We are ready now." [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For cleaning, repair, and upkeep of grounds and roads, $6,500.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago the distinguished Speaker of this House appointed me to go to New York with four other Members to attend the ceremonies on the landing of the last load of our overseas dead. As I looked upon the flag-draped coffins and realized that more than a thousand of these mute and silent messengers of "man's inhumanity to man" were spread out before me, my mind went back across the last eight years and I thought of the 10,000,000 men, the flower and hope of this generation, who had gone down to nameless graves as a result of that militarism which we were fighting to destroy and which some men are encouraging in this country now. As the curtain fell on that last scene of the most horrible tragedy of all the ages, a bugler from a distant point of vantage sounded taps, and as the last notes rolled out over that vast sea of silent, upturned faces, I seemed to hear welling up from every anguished heart the words, "This must not occur again." [Applause.] I realized that we were paying the penalty for the awful mistake of militarism that has been insiduously fastened upon the world by the same tactics that are now being indulged in by those outside of Congress who are to-day fighting the proposals of the Subcommittee on Appropriations and clamoring for abnormal naval expenditures. [Applause.]

I have just listened to the reading of the letter from the temporary head of the American Legion, and I doubt if he intended that it should be even published, much less read before Congress. Surely a man in that position would have more sense than to try to dictate to Congress about a matter that falls entirely within the prerogative of Congress, and about which he knew no more than the average Member of the House, and possibly not as much. I can not think that any man capable of holding that high position could be so arrogant as to think that he could receive a letter from a Member of Congress one day on so grave and important a question and answer it the next day and give this body more information than could a committee headed by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], who has been studying it for months.

I am a member of the American Legion, and I have as much right to speak for the ex-service men as any man in the country, and I do not hesitate to say that if a vote were taken of all the ex-service men, including those who are members of the Legion and those who are not members, they would sustain the position of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan] in his efforts to carry out to the letter our agreement at the disarmament conference and thereby reduce as much as possible the burden of taxation. The ex-service men of this country, I say, would sustain that position by an overwhelming majority. [Applause.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I want to say that 50,000 legionaires from California certainly would not sustain the position of the chairman of the subcommittee, as the record will show.

A MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Because they have expressed themselves through their elective officers.

Mr. RANKIN. I might offset that with something like 100,000 from Mississippi. [Applause.]

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. No one has proved to my satisfaction that the subcommittee proposal has done anything more than the commander of the American Legion asks for. In other words, the Navy will be in the 5–5–3 ratio.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; if the recommendations of the subcommittee are carried out. But I do not want the House to be misled by a misleading letter. The American Legion commander does not profess to know what is before the House, but merely states his attitude in broad, patriotic generalities.

Suppose that this 67,000 men should not be sufficient to man these vessels and it should so appear later; would it not be an easy matter for Congress to increase the number later? Let me call your attention to another thing. It just occurs to me that the Genoa conference is in session. This is one of the most delicate times to quibble on the size of the Army or the Navy. Suppose America—suppose this Congress should go on record as repudiating the attitude of this subcommittee, and increasing the personnel of the Navy of 86,000 men or more in the face of the report here. Is it not highly probable that it would be a disturbing influence at Genoa that would lead the rest of the nations of the world to believe that in all probability America was not keeping faith under the agreements of the disarmament conference? [Applause.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. I want to ask the gentleman if he is a candidate for the Senate?

Mr. RANKIN. Well, now, that is the most sensible question the gentleman has asked. [Laughter.] I will say to him frankly I am not, nor do I know that I ever shall be.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Most of the advocates of this proposition are candidates, and I hope they will all be elected.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say that I am not a candidate for the Senate, but am a candidate for reelection; but some mighty good candidates for the Senate have spoken here on this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman has referred to the Genoa conference. Do I understand that this country is participating or has anything to do with the conference at Genoa?

Mr. RANKIN. No; but Congress is interested in the welfare of the world, the welfare of humanity, and the stability of the economic conditions of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman has no objection to emphasizing, so that it will appear in the RECORD, the fact that this country is not participating in the Genoa conference?

Mr. RANKIN. I think everybody who reads the RECORD knows that, with the possible exception of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman believe that Secretary of State Hughes would be alive to the effect of this vote, and does he think if it was likely to imperil the whole world at the Genoa conference the Secretary of State would have been quite unlikely to write the letter that he has written?

Mr. RANKIN. I have heard a great deal of talk the last two years about Congress failing to function. Mr. Hughes has no more ardent admirer in the Democratic Party than I. I think he is a great man, but I do not think it is the duty of Congress to leave all its thinking to Mr. Hughes or any other member of the Cabinet, or any temporary head of the American Legion. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, Mr. Chairman, let us read. Time has been exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no; it has not.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Navy. [Laughter.] I hesitate to submit another of these official communications because some Members of the House seem prone to regard them as tainted. I do think, however, that we can not have too much real information on this matter. The debate to-day has been bringing out a wealth of information that will certainly assist the Members in determining how they shall cast their votes when the issue is decided on the enlisted personnel. This letter of the Secretary of the Navy is in response to a letter of mine asking him for four tabulations. First, what detailed use he would make of the 96,000 enlisted men which he recommended in his estimates; second, what use he would make of the 86,000 men, the compromise figure which the President has advocated in private previously and in public to-day; third, what use he would make of the 67,000 men recommended in the pending bill; and, in the fourth place, by way of comparison, and for the convenience of the Members, the use which the pending committee measure would make of the 67,000 men, provided effect should be given to the committee's own idea as to distribution.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he reads the letter?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not going to read the letter. I would rather not yield, because the gentleman from Michigan seems to be in a hurry.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Would the gentleman yield to me for a question? I am not in such a hurry as I thought.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman is to be soothed by my yielding, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am curious to know if the 18 battleships will be kept in commission if 86,000 men are allowed.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the point to which I was about to refer.

Mr. MADDEN. I was about to add whether the letter indicated that they could be kept in commission with the 67,000 men, and I am also rather curious about the gentleman's attitude in asking the Secretary of the Navy what he would do with the men, inasmuch as the gentleman has said that it was none of our business on two or three different occasions.

Mr. ROGERS. It is just for that reason that I want to know what he plans to do with them.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that it was none of our business.

Mr. ROGERS. I said it devolved upon the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, to allocate the men we gave him as he saw fit; therefore, in order that I might know and that we all might know what will happen if only 67,000 men are given him by Congress, I asked the Secretary of the Navy what use he planned to make of the 67,000 men.

Mr. MADDEN. That is in the record.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would the gentleman mind stating whether in his search for military authority he has any communication from General Sawyer on the subject? [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I am gratified to hear the gentleman ask this question, because it shows that the gentleman does not know that General Sawyer is in the Army and not in the Navy, and that is characteristic of a number of other questions that have been asked in this matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, he succeeded an admiral and ought to be all right. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman that my understanding is that he did not succeed an admiral, but merely a rear admiral.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, these pleasantries having been disposed of, I call attention to the fact that this table, which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD, shows that on the 96,000 basis and on the 86,000 basis, 18 battleships, the treaty number, can be maintained. On the other hand, it shows that on the 67,000 basis only 13 can be maintained in full commission and 5 will go into ordinary with only about 200 men on each of the 5. As the Assistant Secretary of the Navy said the other day, a battleship in ordinary is a naval relic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter of the Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to, with the accompanying papers, is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington.

Hon. JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ROGERS: With reference to your letter, dated April 8, 1922, requesting certain information as to the number and kinds of vessels which can and would be operated with an enlisted personnel of 96,000, 86,000, and 67,000, I forward herewith a tabular statement of the information requested.

It should be noted that the arrangement and classification of ships is the same as that adopted by the chairman of the subcommittee in his report submitting the naval appropriation bill to the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY.

(Inclosure.)

Arrangement and classification of ships.

Types of vessels.	Navy Department distribution.						House of Representatives Appropriation Committee distribution for 67,000 enlisted.
	For 96,000 enlisted.		For 86,000 enlisted.		For 67,000 enlisted.
	Ships.	Men.	Ships.	Men.	Ships.	Men.	Ships.	Men.
Battleships — Commission	18	21,158	18	21,158	13	15,263	18	18,259
Battleships—Ordinary	0	.....	0	.....	5	1,036	0	.....
Cruisers	13	6,034	13	6,034	10	4,729	11	4,248
Destroyers	103	10,506	103	10,506	65	6,630	103	9,579
Submarines	84	2,579	84	2,579	84	2,579	84	2,520
Destroyer tenders	6	2,759	6	2,759	5	2,309	6	2,551
Submarine tenders	7	1,882	7	1,882	7	1,882	7	1,833
Aircraft carrier	1	339	1	339	1	339	1	216
Aircraft tender	1	286	1	286	1	286	1	286
Mine layers	3	953	2	619	1	356	2	615
Light mine layers	10	990	6	594	4	380	10	959
Mine sweepers	16	821	9	456	4	216	10	498
Repair ships	2	860	1	430	1	430	2	727
Store ships	3	645	3	645	1	268	3	612
Fuel ships	14	1,679	12	1,424	9	1,091	14	1,568
Ammunition ships	2	354	2	354	2	354	2	354
Hospital ships	2	709	2	709	1	361	2	629
Cargo vessels	7	633	7	633	5	451	7	612
Transports	3	833	3	833	3	833	3	822

Arrangement and classification of ships—Continued.

Types of vessels.	Navy Department distribution.						House of Representatives Appropriation Committee distribution for 67,000 enlisted.
	For 96,000 enlisted.		For 86,000 enlisted.		For 67,000 enlisted.
	Ships.	Men.	Ships.	Men.	Ships.	Men.	Ships.	Men.
Gunboats	9	787	9	787	9	787	9	759
Yachts patrol vessels	6	545	6	545	5	513	6	545
Fleet tugs	8	340	8	340	8	340	8	338
Fleet towing vessels	10	450	10	450	6	261	10	450
Survey ships	1	146	1	146	1	146	1	137
Fish Commission ships	2	125	2	125	2	125	2	125
Miscellaneous	5	424	5	424	4	373	5	250
Total	.....	57,107	.....	55,057	.....	42,338	.....	49,492
Flag complements	.....	1,111	.....	1,111	.....	791	.....	700
Fleet aviation detachment	.....	1,100	.....	1,100	.....	1,100	.....	632
Destroyers (50 per cent complete)	23	1,311	.....	.....	50	2,850	.....	.....
Submarines (two-thirds complete)	27	430	.....	.....	23	347	.....	.....
Shore-based submarine tenders [1]	5	2,003	5	2,003	5	2,003	.....	.....
Patrol vessels, Eagles	30	316	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Patrol vessels, submarine chasers	43	261	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	.....	6,532	.....	4,214	.....	7,091	.....	1,332
Total at sea, enlisted	.....	63,639	.....	59,271	.....	49,429	.....	50,824
Total at shore stations	.....	32,361	.....	26,729	.....	17,571	.....	16,176
Grand total	.....	96,000	.....	86,000	.....	67,000	.....	67,000

[1] Shore-based submarine tenders: This item was fully discussed before the Appropriation Committee and in the early hearing, 2,003 men were carried in the personnel afloat. At the request of the committee, the item was shifted to the Shore Establishment, but in the statement of Mr. KELLEY, the item appears to be unaccounted for in anyway.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for one minute.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not care for any more time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My attention was directed away from the gentleman for a moment and I did not understand whether the Secretary's letter said that 18 battleships could be kept in commission or could not with 86,000 men.

Mr. ROGERS. The 18 battleships can be kept in commission, the Secretary says, either on the 96,000 basis or on the 86,000 basis.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, it makes no difference which?

Mr. ROGERS. And 13 battleships in full commission and 5 in ordinary on the 67,000 basis.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman is correct in his information, and if the Secretary of the Navy says he can now maintain these 18 ships on a basis of 86,000, does the gentleman know why he asked for 10,000 more than he needed?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman's question, of course, answers itself. The capital ships are only one element in the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy wanted a well-balanced Navy. He will do the best he can with the 86,000, and he will undertake to maintain the 18 capital ships, though at the expense of sacrificing other important activities.

Mr. BEGG. And he will do the best he can with less, I take it.

Mr. ROGERS. He has indicated in this memorandum what he thinks is the best he can do with each of the three complements.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield ?

Mr. ROGERS. I have no more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then I take the floor in my own right in order to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROGERS. I would remind the gentleman that he told me five minutes ago that all time had been exhausted.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then I will ask to take the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts if the Secretary of the Navy is to maintain the 18 battleships in full commission with 86,000 men, he would be obliged to take men off other ships, would he not? Now, if he intends to do that on a basis of 86,000 men, why did he not do the same thing this year when he had 10,000 more men to draw from? [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest that the gentleman from Michigan ask the other gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Denby.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have asked the question over and over again. Neither the Secretary of the Navy nor any of his advisers seem able to throw any light on it. I thought possibly the gentleman from Massachusetts might be able to help me out.

Mr. ROGERS. I am printing, gentlemen of the committee, a very full statement, showing item by item what the Secretary of the Navy will do with each of these three personnel programs. I think a perusal of them will clarify the viewpoint of many of the Members.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman bind himself to do that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does he give a bond?

Mr. ROGERS. He gives a statement of the intended use of the three different personnels.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In order to have the record complete, perhaps I ought to say that I hold in my hand a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the President of the United States. I have not used the letter, although I think I might have done so, because copies have been in possession of others on the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. That letter is practically in the minority report.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The chairman only emphasizes what I am saying. This letter advised the President of the United States on the 5th of April that it would take 96,000 men to operate the treaty Navy. The Secretary says:

> I have recommended to the Congress an enlisted personnel of 90,000 men and 6,000 apprentices, with which personnel I believe the Navy can be maintained for the present with a reasonable degree of efficiency.

Now the Secretary of the Navy writes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that he can do it with 86,000 men.

Mr. STAFFORD. And to-morrow it may be 76,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I simply call the attention of the House to the difficulty experienced by the committee charged as the agent of the House to determine the facts which were to form the basis of an appropriation in the face of such varying and shifting testimony and recommendations by the Navy Department. [Applause.]

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. ROACH. In view of the statement the gentleman has just made, does not the gentleman believe if we would wait a few days and take this vote the Secretary might get down to our figures after all. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I simply want to ask the gentleman from Michigan if it is not a fact that in the hearings the Secretary stated that with the number of men allowed to him, after what he asked for, he could keep 12 battleships in commission, and in last Sunday's paper that he could keep 13 battleships? He has raised by one battleship in 10 days.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is the spring of the year, you know. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

> For pay of computers on piecework in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, $1,500.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Michigan if he is not willing to have these items passed over until the House decides on the size of the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the gentleman's idea about that? Why should we pass it over?

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand that the Budget recommended a larger appropriation——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes.

Mr. DALLINGER (continuing). On a basis of 86,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman then thinks that with the increased personnel of 86,000 men it would be necessary to increase all these navy-yard items in the bill? That is the theory on which you are asking to have them go over tonight?

Mr. DALLINGER. There will be more vessels to be repaired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. With that understanding, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that these items be passed over until we determine the size of the Navy.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7589. An act for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller; and

H. R. 2556. An act to advance Maj. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 12 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolutions:

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to donate and grant certain buildings in Alaska to the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and

H. J. Res. 7. Joint resolution to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, April 15, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HAUGEN: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 2238. A bill to amend the United States cotton futures act by inserting therein a new section for American Egyptian cotton only, to be known as section 5a; with an amendment (Rept. No. 904). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 6313. A bill authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to grant a right of way for a public highway to the county of Skagit, Wash.; without amendment (Rept. No. 905). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ANDERSON: Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry. Report No. 408, part 4. A report on marketing and distribution. Ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10993) granting a pension to Bryan T. Jennings, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H. R. 11297) to increase the present limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Paris, Tex., from $170,000 to $225,000, to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a new site for same by exchanging therefor land and property now owned by the United States Government in said city, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11298) amending existing law which authorizes the construction of a public building at Paris, Tex., so as to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a new site for same by exchanging therefor land and property now owned by the United States Government in said city, and to authorize the erection on said new site, when acquired, a public building suitable for post-office purposes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 11299) changing the name of Keokuk street in the city of Washington, D. C., to Military Road; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LARSON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 11300) authorizing a per capita payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota from their tribal funds held in trust by the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 11301) effecting the retirement of any officer on the active list of the Official Register of the Army who held a higher grade in the temporary forces of the United States during the World War than his Regular Army rank during said war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 11302) providing for the recognition by Congress of the valuable service rendered by the adjutants general of the several States during the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BIRD: A bill (H. R. 11303) authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of a special canceling stamp at the post office at Wichita, Kans., bearing the words "Reunion Thirty-fifth Division at Wichita, Kans., September 25–27, 1922"; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts relative to recognizing Palestine as the home land of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts urging the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging Congress to immediately pass legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PAIGE: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAKENEY: A bill (H. R. 11304) granting a pension to Emily M. Harrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H. R. 11305) for the relief of Ira D. McMillan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 11306) granting an increase of pension to Delilah R. Mann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 11307) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain claim as the result of damage sustained to the marine railway of the Greenport Basin & Construction Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 11308) granting a pension to Catherine Caine; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11309) granting a pension to Edward T. Conway; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11310) for the relief of the Sanford & Brooks Co. (Inc.); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 11311) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Tyler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 11312) granting a pension to Edna Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11313) granting a pension to Barbara E. Bernard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 11314) granting an increase of pension to Shiloh Sally; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LARSON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 11315) for the relief of Humphrey Jones; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 11316) granting a pension to Frances Conner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORES of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11317) for the relief of James B. Alexander; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Miss ROBERTSON: A bill (H. R. 11318) granting a pension to Narsisus Butler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROSE: A bill (H. R. 11319) granting a pension to William A. Shirey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 11320) granting a pension to Eliza Wisher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS: A bill (H. R. 11321) granting a pension to Augusta Simon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5091. By the SPEAKER (by request): Telegrams from the Palestine National League, of Chicago, Ill., and E. D. Stone, of Boston, relative to the resolution of Congressman FISH in regard to Palestine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5092. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of the Harlem Board of Commerce, expressing its approval of a selective bonus for the sick, the injured, and the needy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5093. Also, petition of the Men's Club of the Mount Washington Presbyterian Church, of New York City, urging adequate provision for the needs of sick, disabled, and convalescent veterans; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5094. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of residents of Fresno and Dinuba, Calif., protesting against the proposed Sunday laws; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5095. By Mr. CHALMERS: Petition protesting against the passage of proposed compulsory Sunday observance bill for the District of Columbia, namely, House bills 4388 and 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5096. By Mr. CONNELL: Resolution adopted by the State Conservation Council of State College, Pa., March 30, 1922, that the Congress of the United States authorize and empower the Secretary of War or the Secretary of Commerce to make such investigations as may be necessary to determine what substances of whatever nature are thrown or deposited or permitted to flow into the navigable waters of the United States or any tributaries thereof in such manner as to endanger or interfere with navigation, commerce, or fisheries, with special reference to the effects of mine waste in the pollution of streams; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

5097. By Mr. CRAGO: Petition of Sharon Lodge, No. 103, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of Sharon, Pa., urging that a modification be made of the laws now existing so as to permit the sale of light wines and beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5098. By Mr. CRAMTON: Resolution of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association No. 43, of Port Huron, Mich., favoring the enactment of the ship subsidy bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

5099. By Mr. CULLEN: Resolution opposing the American-valuation plan unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Retail Dry Goods' Association of New York, held April 11, 1922; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5100. Also, resolution adopted by the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, heartily approving the proposition to extend Federal financial aid to United States merchant ships (H. R. 10644 and S. 3712); to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

5101. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of the Dorchester Board of Trade, of Dorchester, Mass., urging the passage of House bill 4700, which provides for the placing under Federal control the quality and grade of coal furnished to consumers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5102. By Mr. HILL: Resolution of the Women's Civic League, opposing Senate bills 2203, 2382, and 2740, transferring the Bureau of Forestry from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5103. Also, petition of residents of Annapolis, Md., against the passage of the compulsory Sunday observance bills (H. R. 4388 and 9753), which aim to regulate Sunday observance by civil force under penalty for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5104. Also, petition of residents of Baltimore, Md., against the passage of the compulsory Sunday observance bills (H. R. 4388 and 9753), which aim to regulate Sunday observance by civil force under penalty for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5105. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of G. Caplan and L. C. Hill, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Robert Dean, of New York City, N. Y.; and Miss Sophie D. Thiel, of Yonkers, N. Y., relative to the tariff duty on sugar; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5106. By Mr. LAYTON: Resolution adopted by the citizens of Dover, Del., opposing the passage of any of the pending compulsory Sunday observance bills (S. 1948, H. R. 4388 and 9753); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5107. By Mr. LINEBERGER: Petition of Rev. S. W. Gage and others, of Los Angeles, Calif., to extend whatever protection and help may be necessary to make Armenia a self-supporting and self-protecting nation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5108. Also, petition from 54 citizens of St. Paul and Duluth, Minn., in support of the Towner-Sterling bill; to the Committee on Education.

5109. Also, petition from the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Los Angeles, Calif., and the Ministerial Union of Los Angeles and vicinity, in behalf of the Assyrian Christians of Persia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5110. By Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Petition of 137 citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., protesting against the enactment of blue laws for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5111. By Mr. MUDD: Petition of residents of Hyattsville, Md., and vicinity, protesting against the passage of House bill 4388, known as the compulsory Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5112. By Mr. SIEGEL: Resolution adopted by the Broadway Association (Inc.), of New York City, asking that provision be made for the reestablishment of the underground pneumatic-tube system connecting the postal stations of New York one with another and those in New York with some of the postal stations in Brooklyn; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5113. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of W. E. Stannard and 30 others, of Lostwood, N. Dak., urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation and the stabilization of prices of farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5114. Also, petition of John W. Bragg and 12 others, of Tuttle, N. Dak., urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation and a stabilized price on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5115. Also, petition of Max Wegener and 35 others, of Van Hook and Sanish, N. Dak., urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation and a stabilized price on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5116. Also, petition of Arthur Anderson and 37 others, of Wales and Dresden, N. Dak., urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation and a stabilized price on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5117. By Mr. SINNOTT: Petition of citizens of Bend and Gaston, Oreg., against the compulsory Sunday observance bills (H. R. 4388 and 9753 and S. 1948); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5118. By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of the Michigan Milk Producers' Association, in favor of House bill 8086, to prevent adulteration of milk; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5119. By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of residents of Ilion, N. Y., against the enactment of House bill 9753 or of bills of like character; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5120. Also, petition from Humbert F. DeRosa, of Utica, N. Y., suggesting amendments to the watch schedule of the pending tariff bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5121. Also, petition of Clark and seven others, of the thirty-third district of New York, favoring passage of the Chandler bill (H. R. 9198) providing old-age pensions for veterans of the war with Spain; to the Committee on Pensions.

5122. By Mr. STINESS: Memorial of the Varnum Continentals, of East Greenwich, R. I., urging that the minimum strength of the Army be 150,000 men and 13,000 officers and that the Navy personnel be at least 93,000 men; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5123. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of Chartiers Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, Hickory, Pa., indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; also indorsing House Joint Resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5124. Also, petition of Chartiers Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, of Hickory, Pa., indorsing House bill 9753, to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5125. By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolution adopted by the United Veterans of the Republic, Unit No. 12, of Charlestown, Mass., relative to the personnel of the Navy and the Boston Navy Yard; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5126. Also, resolution adopted by the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, opposing any amendment of the transportation act which will deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission of its power over intrastate rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5127. Also, resolution adopted by the Navy League of the United States, urging that the personnel of the Navy be maintained at not less than the ratio of 5-5-3 to that of the British and Japanese Navies; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 15, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, April 14, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	La Follette	Sheppard
Borah	Hale	Lenroot	Shortridge
Bursum	Harreld	Lodge	Simmons
Calder	Harris	McCormick	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Caraway	Heflin	Moses	Stanley
Colt	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sterling
Culberson	Johnson	Newberry	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Swanson
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Edge	Kellogg	Oddie	Trammell
Ernst	Kendrick	Overman	Wadsworth
Fernald	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	King	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Glass	Ladd	Reed	Willis

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may continue through the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 185).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Department of State (foreign intercourse), fiscal year 1923, for revision of Chinese customs tariff, and inquiry into extraterritoriality in China, $68,750; for commission of jurists to consider amendment of laws of war, $3,750; and for claims of the Government of Norway, $2,200; in total amount $74,700, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Emery-Eckington Parent-Teachers' Association, of Washington, D. C., favoring the passage of Senate bill 3136, providing for increased salaries to school-teachers in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted by Dominion Local No. 1, Western Progressive Grange, of Dominion, Wash., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2604, the Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented the petitions of J. I. Framvorg and 10 others, of Bergen; B. J. Swang and 46 others, of Harvey; and W. G. Safford and 92 others, of Hillsboro and vicinity, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

COMMISSIONS TO MIDSHIPMEN IN THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 274) authorizing the commissioning in the Marine Corps of midshipmen under certain conditions, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 602) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STANLEY:

A bill (S. 3465) to amend section 42 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3466) for the relief of the widows of certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3467) granting a pension to Mary G. Grover (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 3468) to empower the Bureau of Efficiency, subject to the approval of the President, to establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments and independent establishments, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact; to the Committee on Civil Service.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate and will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, in line 5, after "June 30," to strike out "1923" and insert "1924, unless otherwise repealed," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the operation of the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921, is extended to and including June 30, 1924, unless otherwise repealed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the pending joint resolution. I do not ask to have it read at this particular time. I have offered it and I will give some explanation of the substitute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as this matter is likely to be passed upon now, if it does not interfere with the Senator's plan I would like to have the substitute read so that we may understand what it is.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say before it is read that the substitute which I have offered for the pending joint resolution includes the recommendations of the Commissioner of Immigration. Only one exception is made. It excludes the recommendation of the commissioner that the quota from any one country may be 1,500. It was my opinion that under the 3 per cent restriction if a country's quota was 250, no more than that number should be permitted to enter the United States. With that single exception the substitute which I have offered includes the recommendations of the Commissioner of Immigration as to the amendment of the present immigration law. It does not change the 3 per cent quota at all.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Mississippi how his substitute differs, if at all, from the substitute which I presented some days ago?

Mr. HARRISON. I have forgotten what the Senator's substitute is.

Mr. HARRIS. The substitute which I have offered limits immigration for five years, but excludes clauses (1) to (8), inclusive, of the present law.

Mr. HARRISON. I will proceed with my explanation and then have my substitute for the joint resolution read.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I am anxious to understand the Senator's substitute. Does it include the amendment proposed to the committee as set forth on page 9 of the committee report?

Mr. HARRISON. It is carried in the report of the Commissioner of Immigration.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator will recall that the commissioner made certain recommendations to the committee. If he has the report of the committee before him he will find those recommendations set forth on page 9.

Mr. HARRISON. It includes all those recommendations.

Mr. WILLIS. And what else?

Mr. HARRISON. It is exactly the confidential print which was before the Committee on Immigration, and which did include all these suggestions. I am going to yield to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], in a moment, but before doing so I wish to say that my proposed substitute makes it a matter of permanent law. It changes the 2 per cent limitation which was applied and merely carries it out, leaving the 3 per cent quota as it was. As I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], he proposes a complete restriction for five years.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; with certain exceptions which are mentioned in the substitute which I have offered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say that I have not examined the substitute which the Senator has offered, and so I do not know that I have any objection to it, but it seems to me that what we ought to do now is to make sure that the present law does not lapse on the 30th of June. If we undertake at this moment to revise the entire immigration act, it will take us a good while. The most important thing is to get the pending joint resolution passed in order to make sure that the present law is extended. I am in favor of a revision of the present law. I know that the Commissioner of Immigration has made some very important suggestions. I think we ought to go over the whole law and I suppose that will soon be done. But it seems to me that it is of first importance at this moment to make sure that the present law does not lapse on the 30th of June.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator from Massachusetts, before I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island, that I have suggested in my substitute no change of the 3 per cent quota provision; I knew that would start discussion and that the two Houses might not agree on it; but I do think, and I believe if the committee had investigated the proposition they would have thought, that the recommendations of the Commissioner of Immigration were wise. They are not included.

I wish now to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and then I shall answer the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts that it might kill the joint resolution if we did not adopt it exactly as the House passed it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I promised to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I wish to make a short statement.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield for a moment to have read, so that he can discuss in connection with his substitute, the amendment which I have proposed?

Mr. COLT. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending, but the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be read for the information of the Senate.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, insert the following:

No alien shall be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States unless transported to the United States in a vessel documented under the laws of the United States, as defined in the shipping act of 1916, as amended; but this provision shall not apply to persons included in clauses (1) to (8), inclusive, of subdivision (a) or in the second proviso of subdivision (d) of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) which has been favorably reported by the Immigration Committee and is now before the Senate, continues the present immigration law for two years instead of for one, as passed by the House. That is the effect of the amendment reported by the committee.

The two most striking facts brought out in the operation of this law are, first, that the immigration from northern and western Europe is of a permanent character, while the immigration from southern and eastern Europe is of a temporary character; and, second, that the immigration movement from southern and eastern Europe is offset by the departures, or home-returning movement, of this group of aliens.

The following figures are taken from a report of the Commissioner General of Immigration, giving the quotas, the admissions, and the departures under the present 3 per cent law from July 1, 1921, to February 28, 1922, a period of eight months:

Table giving the quotas, admissions, and departures under the present 3 per cent law from July 1, 1921, to February 28, 1922.

NORTHERN AND WESTERN EUROPE.

	Quota.	Immigrant aliens admitted.	Departed.
United Kingdom	77,206	23,248	6,303
Germany	68,039	11,678	2,908
France	5,692	3,445	1,507
Belgium	1,557	1,459	818
Norway	12,116	2,745	956
Denmark	5,644	1,742	494
Sweden	19,956	4,026	1,212
Switzerland	3,745	2,339	632
Netherlands	3,602	1,239	600
Total	197,557	51,981	15,930
Net gain			36,051

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COLT. I prefer, as the statement I am making is a short one, not to be interrupted until after I have finished.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. COLT. Now, contrast the statistics of immigration from northern and western Europe with the statistics of immigration from southern and eastern Europe, which are as follows:

Table giving the quotas, admissions, and departures under the present 3 per cent law from July 1, 1921, to February 28, 1922.

SOUTHERN AND EASTERN EUROPE.

	Quota.	Immigrant aliens admitted.	Departed.
Italy	42,021	39,181	42,371
Poland	25,800	27,108	27,395
Russia	34,247	9,539	4,665
Greece	3,286	3,384	5,667
Portugal	2,239	1,723	4,928
Other countries (southern and eastern Europe)	46,750	38,638	28,217
Total	154,373	119,606	113,243
Net gain			6,363
Total net gain in immigration			42,411

It will be noticed that from Poland the immigration exceeded the quota, but that more Poles departed from our shores than were admitted.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COLT. I would prefer not to be interrupted until I have finished this short statement.

It will be noted that out of 51,981 alien immigrants admitted from northern and western Europe only 15,930 returned, while out of 119,606 alien immigrants admitted from southern and eastern Europe 113,243 returned. In other words, out of a net increase of 42,411 in our alien-immigrant population from Europe during eight months, 36,051 were from northern and western Europe and only 6,363 from southern and eastern Europe.

These figures further show that there is no marked immigration movement to the United States from northern and western Europe. There were admissible under the quota law 197,649 from northern and western Europe and only 51,981 were admitted, or less than one-third the number admissible. There were admissible from the United Kingdom 77,206 and only 23,248 came. Out of 68,039 admissible from Germany only 11,678 came. Out of 12,116 admissible from Norway only 2,745 came, and out of 19,956 admissible from Sweden only 4,026 came. Instead of conditions following the Great War producing, as many predicted, an increasing flow of immigration from these countries, especially from Germany, these conditions have tended to check immigration.

In regard to the immigration from southern and eastern Europe we find this situation, a relatively strong immigration movement to the United States and a substantially equal return movement. From Italy 39,181 came in during eight months and 42,371 departed—and, mind you, Mr. President, I am confining myself strictly to immigrant aliens—from Poland 27,108 came in and 27,395 departed; 3,384 came in from Greece and 5,667 went back; from Russia 9,569 came in and 4,665 departed—that is the only important exception where the number of those who departed was not in excess of the number who came in—from Portugal 1,726 came in and 4,928 returned.

These figures show that however strong the tide of immigration may be from southern and eastern Europe it is met by a counter returning movement. If there are causes which impel a large body of these immigrants to come to this country, there are also causes which impel a large body to return to the country of their birth.

One of the causes of the movement of peoples from one country to another is economic and another cause is political. I believe that the economic rehabilitation of Europe has tended to check immigration and also has tended to increase the returning flow. I also believe that the destruction of autocracy and the establishment of new republics in Europe have tended to retard immigration and have also tended to increase the return movement. A striking example of the effect of political changes upon the return movement is shown in the case of the Polish race. During eight months, from July 1 to February 28, 5,963 Polish immigrants were admitted to the United States and 25,166 returned to Poland.

Mr. TOWNSEND. During what month was that?

Mr. COLT. During the eight months of the operation of the law, from the 1st of July to the 28th of February. In round numbers 5,000 Polish immigrants were admitted and 25,000 Polish immigrants returned to Poland during that time.

As to the general effect upon immigration of the operation of the law for eight months it may be said that the number of alien immigrants from southern and eastern Europe admitted to the United States is only about 6,000 more than the number who have departed, and that the number of alien immigrants from northern and western Europe admitted to the United States during this time is only about 36,000 in excess of those who have departed.

Such defects and hardships as have been disclosed in the practical administration of the law have been in part corrected and these corrective efforts will be continued. I might say with regard to immigration that the facts are so complex that it is very difficult to frame even a reasonably perfect immigration law; and, therefore, there ought to be a great deal of administrative power lodged in the Department of Labor. In other words, the law should be made elastic enough to prevent what might be called tragedies, so that the law could be administered with humanity.

The Commissioner General of Immigration, Mr. Husband, says—and mark this:

> I am quite sure that some of the administrative difficulties of the past can be avoided or considerably minimized in the future, even though the law is extended without amendments as the House joint resolution provides.

With respect to amendments, there was such a division in the committee as to what amendments should be adopted, and the whole subject of amendments opened up such a wide field that the committee deemed it best at this time simply to extend the law without any change in its provisions. When you once opened the door to amendment you had three classes of amendments proposed, and each one of those classes represented a distinct opinion in the committee. You had restrictive amendments, you had amendments which liberalized, and you had constructive amendments. When once you had opened the door to the admission of amendments, all the parties who offered these different kinds of amendments would be entitled to be heard. As was said by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a moment ago, the country ought to know and the world ought to know what the immigration law is going to be for the next year, because in an immigration law it is necessary that the law should not go into effect until a considerable time after its passage. One of the difficulties with respect to the administration of the present law was that there was not sufficient time to give notice to the peoples who wanted to come to this country, and therefore during the month of June there was great confusion.

Since the next session of Congress is the short session, the committee also deemed it wise to make the extension for two years instead of one. This extension for one or two years—and the committee, by a majority, thought it was best to make it for two years—it is believed will give time to frame a bill covering constructive legislation along two lines—along the line of selection at the source, and along the line of distribution upon arrival in this country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how does this joint resolution tend to correct the tragedies that the Senator talks about in the interest of humanity? Is any latitude given to the commissioner to admit those who ought to be admitted?

Mr. COLT. I might say that the Commissioner General of Immigration has met that situation by requiring the immigrant to give bond. I might say that this law is supplemental to the old law of immigration, and under certain conditions of hardship the commissioner general has fallen back upon the rules of the old law, of which this law is an amendment. I believe that the Commissioner General of Immigration and the Secretary of Labor have endeavored in every way to meet and to overcome these hardships and difficulties. Those hardships and difficulties arose largely in the beginning of the operation of this law, in the beginning of this restrictive legislation, before the immigrants had had full notice of the law. I believe, as the Commissioner General of Immigration says, that those hardships have been largely corrected by administrative rules and regulations, and that if we pass this joint resolution just as it is, extending the time, there will be little or no complaint as to hardships in the future.

I might say that the time is short between now and the 1st of July. I believe that this joint resolution should pass at once. Then if there are any amendments to the act which it is thought best to bring before the Senate for consideration we shall have plenty of time to perfect the law. The situation to-day, to my mind, is that this extension should be granted at once and that whatever amendments may be deemed necessary should come up as separate pieces of legislation.

I want to say that the experience of the House, when they entered into the question of perfecting this measure or of framing a constructive bill, was that they found such a difference of opinion after prolonged hearings and discussion that they reached the conclusion I have reached under similar conditions, that the only thing to be done now to meet the present situation is to continue the present law for one or two years.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is nothing complex about this proposition. I concede to no Senator here a greater interest in the restriction of foreign immigration than myself. I would not do anything to jeopardize legislation that will take care of the situation, but we must have courage in dealing with these questions. This is the 15th of April. The present law does not expire until the 30th day of June, so you have a long time to legislate if you will get busy.

There is not a suggestion embodied in the substitute I have offered that has not been considered by the House Immigration Committee. More than that, there is not a suggestion embodied in the substitute I have offered that has not already been adopted by the House Immigration Committee. If that be true—and no one will deny it—then where will any delay come from adopting a substitute that carries out the recommendations of the Commissioner General of Immigration, who says in his report that in some cases they are necessary to the strict enforcement of restriction on immigration?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator claim that the provisions of his substitute have received consideration at the hands of the Senate Committee on Immigration?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will just let me proceed, I do not want to take up the time of the Senate, and I shall be very brief, because I know that the substitute I have offered is important, and I know that if Senators will stay in their seats and consider this proposition they will adopt this substitute.

Here is what happened in the Immigration Committee, and I am not revealing any of its secrets. We met for the first time in months and months. The immigration question has long been an important one. I might say that there are few questions of greater importance to the American people than the restriction of immigration, and that has been true for some time. Why, when we had this matter up before the Senate Committee on Immigration, I think a year ago, the evidence that came to us was that at Danzig and other places prospective immigrants by the thousands were standing in line for days and for nights waiting to get their passports viséed so that they might come to America. Those were the facts. Periodicals and newspapers and all kinds of organizations had urged Congress to take care of the situation, and it was that menace that forced Congress to pass the present law; so when the Senate committee met a week ago, after a long delay, this joint resolution that has been passed by the House was presented to us. The Commissioner General of Immigration had made certain suggestions as to changes in the present law. Those changes are incorporated in my substitute. I made a motion to the committee to invite your Commissioner General of Immigration to appear before the committee that he might present this matter to the committee and that the committee might consider and pass upon it. Aye, I went further than that. Some weeks ago the President selected Mrs. Lillian Russell Moore—a very splendid lady, accomplished, versed, I presume, in immigration questions—and she was commissioned by the President, your President, to go abroad and study this question from every angle and to return to this country as soon as she could and make a report to the Secretary of Labor. I assume that the President thought it was an important question, and pressing, or he would not have looked all over the country and selected Mrs. Lillian Russell Moore to make this investigation; and so she went abroad. She returned only a few days ago. She filed a report—I have it here—to the Secretary of Labor, and she says that what we ought to do is to have a holiday for five years, preventing any immigration to this country within that time. She says that there are hordes of people, undesirable immigrants, who are waiting anxiously, desirous to come to this country to live.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I suggest to the Senator that it will add strength to his argument and to the report of Mrs. Moore to remember that we have 6,000,000 men unemployed in this country now.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; 6,000,000 men unemployed in this country to-day, factories closed down, wages being cut, empty box cars everywhere, men and women going hungry and in rags and tatters. Yet you say we have not time to study a proposition in which the American people are vitally interested and have been urging us for months and for years to do something about. The trouble is not a lack of time; it is a lack of courage upon our part to handle the question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I think we ought to remember in this connection that since this administration went into power and the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board went into effect there has been a suicide for every 25 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a terrible and deplorable situation in this country. You admit it; you know it. I want to read just a few extracts from Mrs. Lillian Russell Moore's report, which the Committee on Immigration, of which the distinguished Senator from Ohio is a member, considered. What the committee did was discourteous to Mrs. Moore; it was discourteous to the Commissioner of Immigration and to the President of the United States not to have called in Mrs. Moore and Mr. Husband, and let them make their reports to the committee when that matter was being considered. This is what Mrs. Moore said in part:

> The higher civilizations of past ages, history teaches us, succumbed to such foreign invasions as now threaten us.
>
> Alien infiltration wrecked Rome and Greece. * * *
>
> I believe it would be a good thing for America if an immigration "holiday" of five years could be declared. * * *
>
> If the present law restricting immigration by quotas from other countries is continued, it should be materially strengthened, as I have suggested.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. One moment; just let me finish reading this. The report continues:

> If Congressmen should go abroad they could see the facts as I saw them. One particular fact is that no good immigration is turning our way. The good inhabitants of every foreign country are needed there, and can possibly be happier and more contented there than in America. * * *
>
> There is more to this immigration problem than the economic side. Warning has been issued through the German Red Cross that the United States must be on its guard against the introduction of cholera and typhus by Russian immigrants. Hordes of these people, Dr. A. Schlesinger officially announced, are pouring into Germany over the Polish, Letvian, and Esthonian borders, and many are seeking passports to America, where they have relatives and friends who are financing them for their journey.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> It is fortunate for the United States that Congress enacted the 3 per cent quota law. It is doing much good. With some of the additions I have suggested it would be quite efficient. Its chief weakness is the lack of power held by our consuls abroad. There, it seems to me, is the foundation of all the trouble. * * *
>
> If we do not keep up the bars and make them higher and stronger there will no longer be an America for Americans.

Before I yield, Mr. President, I ask permission to incorporate this report following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix A.)

Mr. HARRISON. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The inquiry I was going to propound was not very important, but I wanted to inquire when Lillian Russell became an authority on the rise and fall of the Roman Empire? I admit she is a pretty high authority on matters theatrical, and perhaps on cosmetics, but I never knew until just now that she had entered the other field.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not know she was an authority on the rise and fall of the Roman Empire until I read this report. Indeed, I did not know she was an authority on the immigration question until President Harding commissioned her——

Mr. MOSES. The Senator seems to quote her with great approval.

Mr. HARRISON. But she must be or she would not have been selected by the President. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I remarked that the Senator from Mississippi seemed to quote Mrs. Moore with great approval.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator like to have me quote from the appointee of his own President, one who was commissioned in such an important task as this? Are the Senator and his colleagues not to take into consideration any of the reports made by these people? When these people are appointed and go abroad and travel in foreign countries, trying to serve their people and their Government, is not the Senator to pay any attention at all to their reports?

Mr. MOSES. I have read this report. I simply wanted to point out the incongruity of the Senator criticizing Mrs. Moore in one breath because she was not an authority on immigration, when he had already been quoting her with great approval before that. I wish to say further with reference to the particular matter now under discussion——that is, this immediate phase of the debate—that I think it highly undignified and most ungentlemanly.

Mr. HARRISON. That is about the height to which the Senator from New Hampshire can go.

Mr. MOSES. I admit that I do not rise to the height of assailing ladies on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I refuse to yield to the Senator. I have not said a word in criticism of Mrs. Moore. I would not. I agree with her views. She has voiced my sentiments. I think she is quite a remarkable and accomplished lady. I said that in the course of my remarks. I did not know that she was an authority on immigration questions until she was appointed by President Harding. If that carries with it a criticism, then the Senator can accept it as such. He is just about that big.

Mr. MOSES. I have already done so.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say, so that I will not be misunderstood, that I am not criticizing the Senator for quoting this authority. It is probably the best agency that has been employed by this administration. The Senator naturally has to turn to that source for his facts, under the circumstances, but I still raise the question as to the high authority and the controlling weight of an opinion by this lady upon international law or immigration questions.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. Before I yield let me answer the Senator from Missouri. I am not basing my argument on any report of Mrs. Moore; not at all. That is just part of the case. I am basing my substitute on the recommendation of Mr. Husband, the Commissioner of Immigration, and appointee of this administration, a man who I believe knows more about the immigration question to-day than anyone else in the United States. I have great respect for his judgment, and I am willing to follow him more quickly than those Senators on the other side who are opposing his recommendation and refusing to follow him in this instance. I have the good of the country at heart.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator's substitute leaves the 3 per cent provision as it is, and I offer an amendment changing that so as not to allow any but the excepted class to come in for five years, and I wonder if the Senator from Mississippi will not accept that amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I am in this attitude, Mr. President, that I would vote and I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, but my substitute is pending. I do not believe the Senate will accept a holiday of five years, although I am going to vote for it, and I am in favor of it in the event my amendment is not adopted.

I am hoping that my substitute will be adopted. I have drawn the substitute conservatively, because I did not want to complicate the proposition. I wanted to keep the simple issue before the Senate, not change the 3 per cent quota but only to carry out the recommendations of the administrative officer having the immigration question in charge.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw my amendment, and will offer it if the substitute offered by the Senator from Mississippi is voted down.

Mr. HARRISON. In the year ending June 30, 1921, 978,163 immigrants of all kinds entered this country. Of course, some went away. Eight hundred and five thousand two hundred and twenty-eight immigrant aliens entered this country that year, and, mark you, for about 26 days during that year this 3 per cent quota was in operation, which cut down the number of immigrants coming into this country. If it had not been for that, there would have been many more.

For the 10 years up to 1912, I think, approximately 11,000,000 immigrants came into the United States. In my opinion, the 3 per cent quota law, which is now on the statute books, has worked well. It is a good law. It does not go as far as I would have had it go, but it has cut down the number of immigrants coming into this country.

For instance, during the time this law has been in operation something over 200,000 immigrants have come into this country. I think under the 3 per cent quota 350,000 immigrants a year are allowed to come in, there being a particular quota each country can send here.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, that is 350,000 from Europe, I believe. The figures show that the quota was 351,930 from Europe.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island. The 3 per cent law allows only 357,000 immigrants to come into this country each year. No such number do come, because certain countries do not send their full quotas. No country can send more than its quota, although during the last year, because of peculiar circumstances, some countries have sent more than their quotas. I believe during the operation of the 3 per cent quota law there have been 15 countries which have sent more than their quotas, but I assume it was because in the beginning of the operation of the 3 per cent quota law a great many immigrants came to this country through the encouragement of the steamship companies, landed at New York, had to be taken care of, and were admitted into this country. They had started from their respective countries before the law was passed. This should not and doubtless will not happen again.

A remarkable situation is presented under this law, however, which illustrates more than anything else, and will convince anyone more than any other proposition, that it is a good law or that the quota system is an improvement over the old system. We have desired immigration from western Europe. The undesirable immigration to this country has come from eastern and southern Europe, and under the 3 per cent quota law immigration coming to this country from the desirable sections of Europe has shown a large increase, proportionate to the number of immigrants, and immigration has fallen off proportionately from the eastern and southern sections of Europe.

For instance, the figures show that from northern and western Europe for the period from July to December, 1913, 142,776 immigrants came to the United States. From southern and eastern Europe and Asiatic Turkey there were 568,001.

In the period from July to December, 1921, the number had fallen off. From northern and western Europe there were 70,974, and from southern and eastern Europe there were 112,239.

In the period from July to December, 1913, the immigrants coming into the United States from northern and western Europe were 19.4 per cent of all the immigrants during that period who came into this country. In the period from July to December, 1921, it rose to 38.5 per cent, showing that there was an increase in the number of desirable immigrants to this country; while from eastern and southern Europe, in 1913, from July to December, the percentage was 77.2, and in the period from July to December, 1921, it had fallen down to 56 per cent. So the system is working well; but we want to remedy the defects in the present law, and the person above all others in the United States who knows the defects in the present law is the administrative officer of the Immigration Bureau.

Now, what does he say? Under the present law immigrants can come into the country from Canada, from Cuba, from Mexico, after one year's residence there. The Commissioner of Immigration has said that there are thousands upon thousands of undesirable immigrants from Europe and elsewhere who have gone to Canada, Mexico, and Cuba in order to live there one year and then obtain admittance into the United States. So he recommends that the law be changed, and he says it is necessary to change it, that it is imperative that it be changed from one year's residence in Cuba, Mexico, or Canada to five years' residence there. I submit if there were no other amendment adopted by the Senate, that one amendment should be adopted. If we do not adopt it, the whole 3 per cent quota law will fail and can not be successful.

The other change that is suggested by the Commissioner of Immigration is this: The present law imposes no penalty upon steamship companies for violating the rules and regulations and laws of the land respecting immigration. They may go abroad, they may encourage any number of undesirable immigrants to come to this country, who may come into the port of New York and flood every part of Ellis Island or other port of entry, as the case may be. They may be hungry there and penniless, as they were, and organizations of various kinds have had to take care of those people when they were landed there.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

They were landed there through the instrumentality of the steamship companies, encouraged by them, and the quota that should have come was gradually increased because of the activities and influences of the steamship companies. Under the present law no penalty can be imposed upon the companies, and the Commissioner of Immigration has suggested that the law should be amended so as to impose a penalty of $200 on every steamship company that brings an alien to this country from a country whose quota has been exhausted and to compel the steamship company to pay back to that alien the expenses incurred in coming here upon a fruitless mission. Is not that important? The Commissioner of Immigration says it is. We all know the steamship companies should be punished when they violate the regulations, and so I have proposed in my substitute an amendment carrying out that idea.

Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. That provision as to steamship companies exists, as the Senator well knows, in existing law, but it is not applied to the law now under discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it is not applied to this law.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator stated specifically that it did not exist at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, it does not exist as applied to the 3 per cent quota law.

Mr. LODGE. It does not exist as applied to this law, but the Senator gave the idea that we have no penalties applicable to the steamship companies. Such a provision has been carried in the law for years and it ought to be applied to this law. I entirely agree with the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I am complaining about—that the penalty now in force does not apply to the 3 per cent quota law, and it should apply to it. Does anyone tell me we should not make that change because we have not the time? We ought to have the courage to take the time and amend our laws when conditions demand it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Has the Senator studied this question from the standpoint of the vast increase of crime in this country? Does he see any connection between foreign immigration and the increase in crime?

Mr. HARRISON. I think there is no doubt that crime increases according to the increase of undesirable immigration into the country. Crime and everything in the way of disorder increases.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in nearly every one of the brutal, fearful crimes, which seem to be organized, systematized, commercialized, the names of the leading criminals are foreign names. They are not American names.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand the provision reported by the committee, it extends the law for two years. If the amendment proposed by the committee is not adopted it means only a nullification of the existing law, because under the present law, even if it be extended two years, all an immigrant has to do is to go to Canada or Cuba or Mexico and stay there one year and then he will be permitted to come into this country without any restriction whatsoever. That is really a nullification of the present law.

I think possibly the statistics which were given by the Senator from Mississippi did not include the immigrants who came in from Canada, Mexico, or Cuba, which is permitted under the law. If we are going to have the 3 per cent law extended two years and allow Mexico, Cuba, and Canada to be a mere dumping ground where foreigners can come simply for the purpose of staying one year and then coming into the United States without restriction, I can not see why Senators should object to an amendment covering that situation. Does the Senator expect to offer the amendment separately?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am offering mine as a substitute for the joint resolution, that carries with it the various amendments which I am going to discuss. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island has any objection to the amendments. The only question is that he is afraid that the joint resolution might not be agreed to by the House with those amendments, but I do not feel that way about it because the House can adopt every amendment that I am proposing in the substitute by moving to concur in whatever the Senate has done or otherwise, and it will become a law just as quickly as it would if we passed the joint resolution extending it as the committee has suggested.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Very gladly.

Mr. COLT. The Senator is dealing with the amendments proposed by the Commissioner General of Immigration. I entirely agree that certain of his suggestions would perfect the law, but when in the committee we opened up the question of amendments there were other members of the committee who wanted to go beyond these suggestions, and there were other amendments offered and the time was getting so short that we reached—whether the judgment was right or not—the conclusion that it was better to pass the pending joint resolution in the form in which the House passed it and then supplement it later with other legislation.

I would like to ask the Senator if he has considered the Husband amendment referred to on page 13 of his letter to the chairman, increasing the quotas from Australia, Africa, other Europe, and other Asia?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not included that amendment in my substitute.

Mr. COLT. So the Senator does not agree to some of the suggestions of Mr. Husband?

Mr. HARRISON. As I stated in the beginning of my remarks, I do not agree with that one. That would tend, in fact, it would have the effect of increasing the number of immigrants permitted to come to the United States over the 3 per cent quota now allowed. I shall vote for no amendment, nor champion any suggestion, that will increase immigration to this country. My tendency is to decrease, rather than increase, the number.

Mr. COLT. The Senator does not agree with the commissioner general's suggestion where he says, substantially, that it would not be just to admit from Australia only several hundred British subjects and that there ought to be a pre-war minimum admitting 1,000?

There are two schools of thought here, and we must dwell upon it—those who are in favor of absolute suspension of immigration for five years and who are in favor of every restrictive measure and those who are not in favor of such restrictions but are in favor of the quota provision.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, under the interpretation given to the existing law there is no limitation upon the number of people from any country who can go into Canada, Mexico, or Cuba, and if they stay there one year there is then absolutely no limitation on the number of those people who can legally come into this country. Is not that true?

Mr. COLT. Under the present law there is no limitation.

Mr. SWANSON. Then we are in this condition under the existing law, if not modified by the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, that really we have no immigration law restricting immigration from anywhere if the steamship companies wish to take foreigners into Canada, Cuba, or Mexico and let them remain there one year for the purpose of then coming to the United States without restriction.

Mr. COLT. The present law says they must remain there for one year.

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; they can go there for the purpose of coming to the United States and violating our laws, and in that way we get all the undesirables. Those who desire to do so can remain there, of course. It really nullifies our existing law at the end of a year under those conditions, does it not?

Mr. COLT. Will the Senator deal with facts somewhat and not with the fear that there are thousands and thousands going to those border countries?

Mr. SWANSON. I have information to that effect.

Mr. COLT. As a matter of fact, Mr. Husband says immigration from Mexico and Canada has fallen off.

Mr. SWANSON. I have been informed, though I do not know whether it is true or not, that great colonies are being formed of people coming to those places for the purpose of later coming into the United States; that the steamship companies carry them to those countries and in that way effect really a nullification of our immigration law.

Mr. COLT. So far as I have any opinion, I concede as a matter of precaution that it would be well to extend the time from one year to three or five years. I agree to that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, along the line of the question suggested by the Senator from Virginia, Mr. Husband said in his report in speaking of immigration from Canada and Mexico:

> There are plenty of indications, however, that systematic violations on a considerable scale will be attempted during the remainder of the present fiscal year, or, in any event, during the coming fiscal year, provided the law is continued in force. I shall not go into details in this regard but can assure you that the bureau is quite fully aware of the situation and will employ every possible means to insure a strict enforcement of the law.

Then further over in his report he said:

> Various immigrant aid societies and similar organizations, and possibly also steamship agents in foreign countries, have, according to reports believed to be authentic, fostered and promoted this movement of aliens to foreign contiguous and neighboring countries. It is known that thousands of aliens from countries with exhausted quotas have entered Mexico in recent months; that there are perhaps a larger number of such aliens now in Cuba, with no employment and no prospect of securing same, and that others have gone to Canada and to South America (principally to Brazil), all apparently with the one purpose in view of eventually gaining admission to the United States.

With a situation such as that confronting us, does anyone tell me we should not amend the law when the joint resolution is here for consideration?

Before I was interrupted I was discussing the penalty features as applied to the steamship companies. The amendment suggested in my substitute carries the penalty to the steamship companies which violate the law. There is none in the present law touching the 3 per cent quota provision.

Here is what President Harding had to say about that proposition. Now, you Republicans will all prick up your ears and listen to this, I know. I wish to ask unanimous consent to incorporate, following my remarks, this very remarkable document on immigration and the 3 per cent restriction law by Robert De C. Ward, professor at Harvard University.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix B.)

Mr. HARRISON. President Harding replied to a letter written by Representative ISAAC SIEGEL, of New York, in September, 1921, and, among other things, said:

> I haven't any doubt in the world but the enforcement of the immigration laws is working many a hardship. My own distress has been very great over some of the specific instances which have been reported to me. If I have the situation correctly presented, the difficulty must be charged to the dishonest steamship agents who have brought to this country innocent immigrants in spite of our continued warnings during a period of very great leniency. I know how very persistent have been the impositions which have been made on the Government agents who have been disposed to be sympathetic and more than generous in carrying out the law.

Here is what the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Davis, says about the steamship companies bringing over undesirable immigrants in violation of the regulations:

> Secretary Davis reiterated the statement by the President that much of the trouble is caused by dishonest steamship agents and that pitiful stories of hardship are being circulated in the deliberate attempt to discredit the law.

Assistant Secretary of Labor Henning, on September 3, said:

> Unfortunately, the law has no teeth, and the only way the offending companies can be punished is to compel them to take back aliens who are not admissible.

It is a pitiful sight. I have never seen it, but I have heard of it. I know it must appeal to the sensibilities of men and women everywhere that poor, unfortunates brought here by steamship companies from Europe and elsewhere and landed at New York without money, without friends, are sent back home because the quota of immigrants permitted to come is exhausted. If the human heart could be touched, that sight would touch it.

The coming here of people under such conditions through the influence of steamship companies should be prevented. We shall never be able to stop it so long as we have no law which penalizes the agents of steamship companies for bringing over these unfortunates under such circumstances, and yet the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Ohio say we have not the time to amend the existing law, that the date of expiration of the present law is the 30th of June, and we may not be able to enact a new law by that time. I am not surprised at Senators on the other side making such a statement and believing in it, because they realize that they have taken so long to do nothing in relation to all other matters.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Mississippi is giving a perfect illustration of the reason why it is necessary to pass this joint resolution by the time he is wasting instead of trying to amend the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, if the Senator from Massachusetts will not listen to argument and Senators on the other side merely wish to sit here and say, "No; we have not time for that," well and good; but such action furnishes the reason why the Republican leadership is now being denounced from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to listen to argument when argument is made.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has agreed with me on two or three propositions which I have advanced.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. I want to help get the joint resolution through.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts vote for my substitute for the joint resolution?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not think the Senator would.

Mr. LODGE. But I will vote for some amendments if the Senator from Mississippi will frame them properly.

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped that the Senator occasionally would vote for something that is right. I am offering a good proposition, and yet the Senator will not take it.

Mr. LODGE. I am ready to vote for any amendment which I believe should be made; I do not know that there is anything in the Senator's substitute to which I object; but I know there are certain amendments that ought to be made to the pending joint resolution, and it will not be done by standing here and bellowing about the Republican Party. The thing to do is to proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution and perfect it.

Mr. HARRISON. I know that the Senator from Massachusetts when he is hit is bound to rise. God knows I have been, and other Senators on this side have been, very lenient with the Republican Party—more so than we should have been.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Mississippi does not need to be lenient. He does not do the Republican Party the slightest harm.

Mr. HARRISON. I know that. One can not do any harm to a thing which is dead, for it does not feel.

Mr. LODGE. The Republican Party has enough feeling to win in the next election.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I call optimism of the rarest kind.

Mr. LODGE. Not a bit. I remember that the Senator from Mississippi was optimistic in 1920; and so I doubt if there is any foundation for his present optimism.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the Senator's party stacked the cards and played them from under the table on us at that time.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I thought that the business before the Senate was the joint resolution proposing to extend the existing immigration law. I desire to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I should like to see the joint resolution perfected along the line of some of the amendments which have been suggested by Mr. Husband. I have always taken that position; but the reason why I can not vote for the amendment or substitute of the Senator from Mississippi is that he includes some of the commissioner general's amendments and rejects others, these amendments all being included in the committee print, which is the basis of the Senator's amendment or substitute.

I wish to call attention to one of the amendments the adoption of which Mr. Husband could not recommend in its present form. I refer to the amendment which requires cooperation of the Department of State with the Department of Labor. It is an amendment along the line of constructive legislation, along the line of selection at the source. The amendment is to the effect that when the consul visés a passport he shall also issue a certificate that the alien comes within the quota. The consul having the quota before him will know the number of immigrants that may be admitted from that particular country, and he will issue a certificate to the alien immigrant applicant. That amendment has not been perfected; the Secretary of State has not consented to it. That was one of the difficulties which the committee met when it came to constructive legislation. We could not frame such legislation hastily, for it involved a redrafting of the certificate provision.

The committee were met at once with the question, "What are we going to do with the excepted classes under the 3 per cent limitation? Is the consul going to pass upon those?" In other words, there were practical difficulties which had not been solved in connection with the certificate plan, and there has been no agreement as yet by the Secretary of State to cooperate with the Department of Labor. That is one of his amendments that Mr. Husband did not ask the committee to adopt.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON. I shall yield in one moment. Mr. Husband did recommend the adoption of that amendment; he dictated it himself, and said that if some plan like that were not incorporated the department would be very much embarrassed.

Mr. COLT. I beg the Senator's pardon. I know the Senator from Mississipi never intends to make a misstatement and I certainly do not. I think I made the statement a little too strong. Mr. Husband did recommend a certificate provision, but, to speak in somewhat ordinary language, he "passed the buck" to the committee and asked the committee to perfect the amendment and to get the consent of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, the committee also passed the buck.

Mr. COLT. He said that was as far as he would go. As to many of the other amendments which he suggested, I approve of them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. In regard to the suggestion as to consular inspection, I think that is a very old idea and a very good one. We tried to get it adopted some 25 years ago, but the difficulty which then met us was that other countries would not permit it. The trouble is not with our own State Department, but other countries will not allow an American consul to say whether or not a citizen of Germany, for instance, or France or whatever country may be affected, shall sail from that country. They objected to our consuls exercising that authority.

Now, under the changed conditions since the Great War, it may be possible to make some arrangement of that kind, and I see no objection to giving the authority to our Government to endeavor to make such an arrangement, but it is not something which we can accomplish ourselves; it is necessary to have some arrangement with foreign governments in order that our consuls may be allowed to issue certificates. It would be the most valuable thing that could be done, if we could once bring it about, but it has been prevented by the action of other countries. I remember in past days Germany particularly objected very strongly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Bureau of Immigration, as I understand, fear that the State Department in the future might abolish the passport system in some particulars. They are, of course, using that system now; but, if it should be abolished, the Bureau of Immigration are afraid that a very undesirable class of immigrants may be admitted to our shores. There would in that event be no examination or certification by our consuls or agents abroad.

Mr. LODGE. We can maintain the passport system.

Mr. HARRISON. We can do it, unless the State Department decides otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. We are now maintaining it.

Mr. HARRISON. We are now maintaining it; but, as I have said, the Bureau of Immigration are fearful that a change may be made. That is according to the statement made to me by Mr. Husband.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, provision concerning the passport system is carried in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and there has been no suggestion from the State Department of abolishing the system.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a matter which may be worked out in conference, but what I have stated was the suggestion of Mr. Husband. If there is objection to that particular provision, it is easy to strike it from the proposed substitute, and then if the other provisions of the substitute which are recommended are all right we could reach an agreement. I assume that no one is combating the suggestion that there should be a penalty on the steamship companies.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I also assume that no one is combating the suggestion that the one-year limitation as to residence in Canada, Mexico, and Cuba should be raised to three years or five years.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think there is.

Mr. HARRISON. So if that be true there should be no great difficulty in reaching an agreement. The other suggestions which I have made are merely to provide some slight administrative changes. For instance, under the present law students who come from a foreign country can not be admitted here merely to attend college. The commissioner thinks that they should be excepted, so that they may come to this country to attend college. Those are small matters. The two main propositions suggested by the Commissioner of Immigration are a penalty on the steamship company and a greater limitation on residence in contiguous territory. If we could agree on those two suggestions, it would be easy to pass this joint resolution, and we would then really enact legislation of a constructive character. If I thought that the House would dillydally about such amendments and would not accept them, and that they would delay the bill beyond the 30th of June, I would be the last Senator here to offer such an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will admit that it would be a great misfortune to have the bill fail.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it would; but, in view of the fact that practically everybody seems to agree that the two proposals are all right, they could be put in.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say there are two main propositions?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; there are but two main propositions.

Mr. COLT. What are those two?

Mr. HARRISON. The two which I have named. I am perfectly willing to leave out everything else, except the amendment raising the one year's residence requirement in Canada, Cuba, and Mexico and other contiguous territory to five years—that is one——

Mr. LODGE. That ought to be done.

Mr. HARRISON. The other is the imposition of a penalty on steamship companies for violating the rules and regulations and bringing here immigrants from countries the quota of which have been exhausted.

Mr. LODGE. And that ought to be done.

Mr. HARRISON. That should be done.

Mr. LODGE. It is absurd to deport an immigrant and compel a steamship company to take him back for one violation of the immigration laws and not compel it to take him back for another.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi and other Senators that I have an amendment covering the suggestion in regard to residence in contiguous territory, amending the present law so as to require five years' residence.

Mr. HARRISON. I am perfectly willing to agree on any proposal of that kind.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose the regular order would be to perfect the joint resolution before the Senator's substitute comes up for consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Perfecting amendments, of course, should first be offered to the joint resolution.

Mr. STERLING. By the amendment to which I have referred and some other amendments, the objections which the Senator from Mississippi has to the joint resolution might be met.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether his substitute in any wise deals with subdivision 5, section 2, of the present law which provides that excepted classes as defined therein embrace "aliens from countries emigration from which is regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements relating solely to immigration"? Does the Senator's suggested substitute in any wise touch that provision?

Mr. HARRISON. It does not change that at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I assume the Senator knows how important that provision is.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the effort has been made to take care of that situation, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The provision to which the Senator from California refers is left entirely unchanged.

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly do not propose to change it in my substitute at all, and I do not think that it is changed by the joint resolution at all.

Mr. COLT. May I ask the Senator if he would accept the amendment relating to penalizing the steamship companies as drawn up by Mr. Husband, and also the amendment requiring five years' residence in Canada and Mexico?

Mr. HARRISON. I am perfectly agreeable to adopt the amendments in that form even, but I think they should change, for instance, the 20 per cent monthly limitation under the present law. That is suggested by him as quite desirable. I do not think, however, it is so important that that be done.

Mr. COLT. I will tell the Senator why it is not necessary. It is because the law says "shall not exceed 20 per cent," so that the department could regulate that.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator thinks that other suggestions of the commissioner can wait, then, that is perfectly agreeable to me; but I do think it is highly important and, indeed, necessary that the two amendments to the present law which I have suggested be now adopted—one respecting the time of residence in contiguous territory and the other penalizing steamship companies for violations of the law.

Mr. COLT. I might say to the Senator in regard to the amendments which the commissioner general wanted, that the two which the Senator has suggested do not increase the number of immigrants in any way.

APPENDIX A.

Report to the Secretary of Labor by Lillian Russell Moore on European emigration conditions as affecting the United States.

MARCH 28, 1922.

HON. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I beg leave to submit the following report of my observations on immigration, as commissioned by you, during a visit to European countries:

Immigration, in my opinion, is the gravest question to-day confronting the American people and the most serious problem demanding solution by the American Government.

Time was when our shores were a haven for the politically and religiously oppressed, and when our gates opened the way to opportunity for the ambitious and aspiring of other lands. Time was, too, when our Nation, in its period of construction and reconstruction, needed the brawn of the sturdy European to extend civilization into uncultivated and undeveloped territory.

To-day European conditions are such that a haven of refuge is not required. There is no longer political oppression abroad. Men are not being driven from their homes for disputing the divine right of Kings to rule. The war has restored human rights to the peoples of Europe, and the new conditions permit to all free expression of thought and peaceful possession of property. There may be suffering; there is depression; but there is freedom, and none need seek sanctuary here.

Nor does America need labor to aid in the development of its resources. That stage has long passed, and it is a fact that the immigration of recent years has been from that class of people which arrests, rather than aids, the development of any nation. When I declare that most of those now seeking to come here have not any of the inspiration or the necessity of the early settlers from abroad, I am stating facts that impress everybody who makes any study of European conditions.

In this immigration problem, then, there is only one thing that demands serious attention, and that is, What is best for America?

We must be just before we are generous.

We must think of the future as well as of the present.

The higher civilizations of past ages, history teaches us, succumbed to such foreign invasions as now threaten us.

Alien infiltration wrecked Rome and Greece.

It is against such a fate that America must protect itself—that the American Government must protect its people, including those of foreign birth or extraction who have loyally taken up the duties of American citizenship.

I believe it would be a good thing for America if an immigration "holiday" of five years could be declared. But if we must keep our gates open, I would urge a new system by which the sifting process should be carried on abroad, so that none but those who, physically and mentally, would make valuable additions to our population would be admitted to board ship for America.

There should be rigid tests of mental qualifications by American consuls. One rigid requirement should be that applicants must be able to read, write, and speak their own language.

Physical tests should be conducted by American physicians, and any bodily weakness should mean rejectment. The Wassermann blood test ought to be employed in every case.

I am insistent upon the employment of American physicians to make these tests, because I believe that racial sympathies might lead to too liberal a view of bodily infirmities. It is just possible, too, that some foreign government agencies might not object too severely to the departure of undesirables. It has been intimated that foreign governments might protest against the employment of American physicians as health examiners, but there is no logical ground for such objection. Protest might just as reasonably be made against the quarantine officials of home ports who examine incoming passengers.

If the present law restricting immigration by quotas from other countries is continued, it should be materially strengthened as I have suggested. There should be also a central headquarters, possibly in London, where American consuls should regularly report the number of their visés, so that the quota could not be exceeded any month, thus avoiding the hardship of deportation for the excess immigrants.

In present circumstances every intending immigrant needs simply to apply at the nearest American consulate for a visé, for which he pays $10. It is the consul's duty to ascertain all the facts in relation to the individual, including details respecting health, morals, contract labor, and the like—but the consul is absolutely limited as present conditions exist. He has no power to refuse a visé for any reason other than that the quota of the country is exhausted, and in which event alone he may refuse a visé. This is unfortunate, for it necessarily leads to thousands of departures of unfit persons to America, who succeed either by influence or trickery in entering the country and being turned back upon inspection at Ellis Island.

These people lose by breaking up their homes in their own countries, and America loses by the cost of their return. Much human misery could be avoided, periodical congestion at Ellis Island prevented, and the entrance of unfit persons into the United States most conveniently checked by the application of the following suggestions:

Consuls should be authorized to refuse visés to all unfit persons. All applicants for visés in the case of immigrant persons should be required to submit details three months before final action is taken. This should include a certificate from their native doctor stating that a blood test has been taken, thus proving they are physically fit. In case of male immigrants, a penal certificate should be presented giving a record of their career, on which is attached a photograph of each man, thus allowing the consul to obtain close information of the most definite character with regard to the alien's past history, physical condition, qualifications as farmer, laboring man, etc.

Questioning of the immigrants has not proven satisfactory. It is quite obvious that an applicant is not likely to admit anything to a consular officer which will damage his chances of obtaining a visé. Therefore, as I suggested, the penal certificate, accompanied by a photograph of each man, would give a direct line upon his record. It would also be advisable to have the Bureaus of Immigration and Naturalization subject every foreigner living in the United States who wishes to bring over an immigrant to the same examination as the immigrant himself must pass before a consular officer. Such a foreign resident should be required to submit a police record covering the entire time of his residence in the United States, and an affidavit of support executed by the relative in the United States should be demanded of every applicant. And after this affidavit has been executed, and before it is sent abroad to the immigrant, it should be stamped by the immigration authorities, so that when it is presented to a consular officer, with a request for a visé, he will know that the immigrant intends to join a decent, law-abiding resident of the United States.

There should be additional laws making it a felony for any resident of the United States making a false statement concerning the admissibility of any relative or other immigrant. This law should be so drastic that it will seal up one of the most intolerable loopholes in our immigration system.

A change in the immigration law from the legal 3 per cent quota would perhaps be advisable to read instead that the number of immigrants to be allowed in the United States should be agreed upon by the Secretary of Labor and foreign countries, establishing the number of passports to be issued for three months in advance, and that the total quota of 3 per cent of all countries, added together, shall not be surpassed. This would give the Secretary of Labor the power to choose such countries as he thinks have the most desirable immigrants for the United States. And instead of the steamship lines all depositing their immigrants at Ellis Island license could be given for disembarkation of immigrants at such ports as New York, Boston, Baltimore, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, San Francisco, and Seattle. With our own merchant marine this could easily be done. This would scatter the immigration throughout the country, place the farmers in the farming countries, and relieve New York from increasing its present foreign population.

This system would likewise put a stop to clandestine immigration. The newspapers in Italy publish, after the sailing of practically every steamer for the United States, that a number of clandestine immigrants have been found hidden on board and were arrested, and in almost every case they were criminals.

While I was in Rome the steamer Arabic sailed from Naples, and advice came from the Italian authorities by wireless that there were 100 clandestine immigrants on board. These men pay large sums of money to be smuggled on the steamer, and if they succeed in reaching New York disembark as members of the crew. It is therefore advisable that all the crew of any steamer sailing for a United States port should have a proper book or certificate, with their photograph on it for identification, and stating that they are one of the crew of the steamer, and should not be allowed to disembark and pass through the customs gate without showing such card or certificate.

In this manner these undesirables would be unable to land. At present many are taken from alongside in small boats and carried to some convenient landing place.

When I arrived in Cherbourg I was met by the doctor in charge of the immigrants. He gave me the inclosed certificate, which shows that he vaccinated 200 immigrants bound for America, out of which 21 proved to have fatal diseases, which would compel them to be turned back upon their arrival at Ellis Island. Neither the examining doctor, the consul who viséed their passports, nor the consul general at Cherbourg were endowed with the power to forbid them to go aboard the steamer. It seems to me that this is the foundation of all the trouble. And it takes but a small mind to realize that if more power is not invested in our consuls abroad and if every immigrant is not compelled to have a blood-test certificate at the very beginning of his intentions to come to America as an immigrant, our civilization of the future will deteriorate to a marvelous extent.

I further believe that all of the personal information of each man gathered by the consuls and immigration inspectors should be available to examining judges before certificates of naturalization are granted. We are menaced, and we must avoid that condition. Take the consul at Vienna, for instance:

During the years of 1920 and 1921, long before office hours, crowds of unwashed, ill-fed, prospective immigrants—most of them of very low mentality and moral fiber—surged around the consulate. These people were from Poland, Russia, or Rumania, and claimed to have blood relatives in America who would take care of them and guarantee them support. They did not know the meaning of the word "truthfulness," and were carriers of disease caused by their extreme bodily filth. It was discovered that large numbers of Poles were applying for visés at Vienna, claiming the necessary one year's residence in the place of departure, and bringing with them documents to prove such residence. So many of these documents were false that the practice was adopted throughout the year 1921 of having every Sienna document—including the police certificate of morality required—which was presented by a Pole examined and checked by the investigator. It was found that underground channels of information existed among these people as how to have false documents prepared by meeting certain "agents" in given "café houses." Other means of pressure were brought to bear on consular officers. In these cases lawyers would appear as intermediaries or friends from the United States. Usually naturalized American citizens would appear as spokesmen. These often proved to be promoters of immigration, who would obtain in New York the names of persons wishing their so-called relatives to come over, and who, for the consideration of usually more than a hundred dollars in each case, would fill out a large list of names and undertake to go to eastern Europe to "see them through" all visé and traveling formalities. In one case a New York notary public, who had obtained names of people coming to him professionally to make out affidavits, undertook to bring over 50 immigrants, whom he declared to be his relatives, and who all claimed a year's residence in Austria. An investigation proved that they all had false documents and that they had been in Austria only a few days. One of them divulged the fact that the intermediary was to receive $300 apiece upon their arrival in the United States.

Of the several thousand Polish immigrants who obtained visés in Vienna in the years 1920–21 it was the personal observation of a consular officer stationed there that only two were not bound for New York City, and just one claimed to be a farmer—all nonproductive, so-called citizens.

There are several organizations formed for helping certain elements which undoubtedly have a considerable humanitarian value, but which, at the same time, have encouraged this kind of immigration. One relief representative assured me that they had a great amount of money in the banks of Europe which was to be used to help immigrants to get to America.

From Italy we get a more productive immigrant. While some of them come to us as truck gardeners, the greater number go into railroad, excavating, and mine work. The majority of immigrants from southern Italy and Sicily are of the peasant type. Their standards of living are low. Their ultimate destinations are the industrial towns of the East. As potential American citizens they afford reasons for considerable apprehension. From Naples come farm laborers, and their physical condition is generally good. From Florence, Venice, Milan, and Genoa the immigrant is productive, as many of them are stonemasons, carpenters, miners, mechanics, braziers, etc. From Trieste the great majority, and practically all of those who obtain visés from this quarter, are of the Slav nationality. The opinion from that consular district maintains that, in spite of the present system of control, it is almost impossible to prevent agitators, criminals, and other dangerous undesirables from obtaining visés, and the local authorities do not desire to cooperate to the extent of furnishing the names of persons under suspicion.

We have laws and regulations of a most painstaking character which prevent the shipment of live stock, living plants, and seeds to the United States, and we prohibit entirely shipments under these heads instantly when danger arises; but until the last few months we have opened our national gates to human beings desiring to settle among us without much restriction as to moral consideration or purity of blood. And as a result we have a huge problem with which to deal. It would be a wonderful thing if all immigration could take a rest for a few years, for the adjustment and reconstruction of its principles and regulations, and meantime requesting our Congressmen to visit the countries from which the majority of immigrants come. They could do this in their vacation months—not as a pleasure trip, but as a matter of information, which can be used to the greatest advantage in future discriminating rules for immigration, that we may protect ourselves permanently by a drastic prohibition as respects the unfit, as described in section 3 of the present immigration law.

If Congressmen should go abroad they could see the facts as I saw them. One particular fact is that no good immigration is turning our way. The good inhabitants of every foreign country are needed there, and can possibly be happier and more contented there than in America.

It is a fact that in France there are only 65,000 in the ranks of the unemployed. Reconstruction is being elaborately carried on in France, and every able-bodied man is not only needed but his prospects are made so alluring that he has no inclination to emigrate. Only those who are useless to France and would be a burden to America show any tendency to depart. Italy needs men to till the soil, to grow food, and to keep her own country prosperous. It is to the interest of France and Italy to keep the best of their sons at home—if not forever, at least for a long time to come.

There is more to this immigration problem than the economic side. Warning has been issued through the German Red Cross that the United States must be on its guard against the introduction of cholera and typhus by Russian immigrants. Hordes of these people, Dr. A. Schlesinger officially announced, are pouring into Germany over the Polish, Letvian, and Esthonian borders, and many are seeking passports to America, where they have relatives and friends who are financing them for the journey.

Already nearly 50,000 cases exist in Germany, traced to refugees, and German immigrants from the Volga region have been infected. Seventy-five per cent of the recent arrivals in the concentration camps were diseased, according to Red Cross statistics.

The minister of health has called attention to the necessity of vaccinating everyone arriving from Russia, declaring that children especially are carriers of typhus.

We take in too few productive immigrants and too many destructive.

I look upon the question of immigration as closely associated with that of citizenship. Personally, I believe that no alien should be naturalized until he has lived in the United States 21 years. Our own men have to live here 21 years before they can become voting citizens.

It is fortunate for the United States that Congress enacted the 3 per cent quota law. It is doing much good. With some of the additions I have suggested, it would be quite efficient. Its chief weakness is the lack of power held by our consuls abroad. There, it seems to me, is the foundation of all of the trouble.

I want to say for our American consuls that I never met a more patriotic class of men as a rule. Their Americanism is pronounced, and I believe it is accentuated by their knowledge of America's peril. They see, and they know, better than any class of our citizens, the difficulties and dangers of laxity in immigration laws.

Our America has passed the transition stage.

It is to-day a world power.

An intelligent, cohesive, loyal citizenship is its propulsive force. Solidification of all its elements is essential to perpetuity.

The melting pot has been overcrowded. It has boiled too quickly and is running over.

It were better to put out the fires under it and allow its contents to solidify before adding any more raw material.

If we don't keep up the bars, and make them higher and stronger, there will no longer be an America for Americans.

Respectfully submitted.

LILLIAN RUSSELL MOORE.

APPENDIX B.

(Reprinted, without change of paging, from the Journal of Heredity (organ of the American Genetic Association), Vol. 12, No. 7; Washington, D. C., August–September, 1921.)

IMMIGRATION AND THE 3 PER CENT RESTRICTIVE LAW.

[Robert De C. Ward, Harvard University.]

THE NEW LAW AND ITS ENACTMENT.

The new 3 per cent immigration restriction act was designed to meet postwar conditions which our previous laws were never intended to cope with. It passed both Houses of Congress by tremendous majorities, and after being "pocket vetoed" by President Wilson was again passed by similarly large majorities and promptly approved by President Harding. The backbone of the new law is as follows: Section 2. "That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910." Eight classes of aliens are excepted from this provision, including "(8) aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States." Provision is made for the determination of the exact numbers of aliens of the different nationalities who may be admitted. The number of any nationality that may be admitted in any one month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number of aliens of such nationality who are admissible in that fiscal year. Preference shall be given, "so far as possible," to wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and fiancees of citizens of those who have applied for citizenship, and of persons eligible for citizenship who were in the service of the United States during the war and were honorably discharged. Provision is further made for the preparation of rules and regulations necessary to carry the act into effect and for the publication of statements showing the exact numbers who may be admitted. The act continues in force until June 30, 1922.

THE REASONS FOR THE NEW LAW.

The enormous majorities by which Congress passed this bill clearly reflected the firm conviction of the great mass of our people that immediate and effective restriction was imperative. There has never been a time in the history of immigration legislation when the popular demand was so widespread and so vehement. The practically unanimous opinion of Government immigration officials and of all unprejudiced experts was that immigration was certain to increase, and increase rapidly, to numbers greatly exceeding those of prewar days, and that the quality of the bulk of the newcomers would be distinctly inferior. Very important testimony along these lines was received from United States consular officers at numerous foreign ports and submitted by the Department of State to Congress. These reports, coming from many different men and many different places, are distinctly to be regarded as unprejudiced and authoritative. They practically all agree in certifying that the majority of the prospective immigrants are both physically and mentally undesirable. Such expressions as "physically deficient," "mentally deficient," "economically undesirable," "socially undesirable," "of low standards of living," "not of the most desirable class" occur again and again. Furthermore, numerous competent and unprejudiced observers who had been making a first-hand study of the conditions in Europe fully concurred in the views expressed by our own consular officers.

The predictions made by these various competent authorities have been fully verified. Immigration during the year ending June 30, 1921, exceeded 800,000, almost doubling that of the preceding year. Furthermore, the opinion of those who have had opportunity to observe the new arrivals, and who are unprejudiced and honest in their views, is to the effect that our consular officers and our experts were fully justified in their statements regarding the inferior quality of most, not all, of these people. An immigration official at New York has recently reported that the majority of the aliens now coming in expect to be fruit peddlers, shoe blacks, soft-drink venders, and sweatshop workers. (New York Times, Sept. 12, 1921.)

THE OPPOSITION TO RESTRICTION.

In spite of the extraordinary popular demand for restriction in accordance with which Congress acted, there was insidious, active opposition, thoroughly organized, heavily financed, issuing misleading information, playing upon all sorts of alien prejudices, endeavoring by every possible means to counteract the plain will of the vast majority of the American people. One of the best known and most reliable Washington newspaper correspondents, Mr. Mark Sullivan, writing of the hearings before the House Committee on Immigration February 7, 1921, said.

"The great bulk of the hearings consisted of testimony from special interests, either racial or business, who opposed the bill strenuously. No thoughtful American, equipped with knowledge of the background, can read the stenographic report of those hearings without being deeply and somberly concerned."

Still more striking is the evidence brought forward by Hon. JOHN C. BOX, of Texas, in the House of Representatives January 8, 1921. Judge Box said:

"Mr. Chairman, recently by a vote of 295 to 41 a bill suspending immigration was passed by this House, in which vote the will of the American people spoke and party lines disappeared. But powerful influences oppose restriction. Two of these are:

"First. A demand by the foreign born among us that their kinspeople and racial comrades be admitted freely.

"Second. Individual and corporate greed which disregards the present and future welfare of the mass of Americans and their children because it wants money and power over labor.

"The interracial council is a mouthpiece of the opposition of these two groups. To it I invite your attention. * * *

"The interracial council is a concern of some magnitude. Some months ago it had 40 or 50 executives and other full-time paid employees in its offices in New York, and an unascertained number of other agents and employees. It is financed, in part at least, by its industrial or subscribing members, numbering several hundred. The following are some of its subscribing members whose names I get from its printed literature and from the testimony of Mr. Mayper, its executive secretary:

"Phelps Bros. & Co., 'owners of an Italian steamship line'; the International Mercantile Marine Co.; Barber Steamship Lines; Cosmopolitan Shipping Co.; Downey Shipbuilding Corporation; France & Canada Steamship Co.; Green Star Steamship Co.; Pacat Steamship Co.; Pacific Steamship Co.; Todd Ship Yards Corporation; Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; Allegheny Steel Co.; American Beet Sugar Co.; American Locomotive Co.; American Woolen Co.; Armour & Co.; Atlas Powder Co.; Chattanooga Coke & Gas Co.; Colt's Patent Firearms Manufacturing Co.; General Electric Co.; Henderson Shipbuilding Co.; Hillman Coal & Coke Co.; Indiana Pipe Line Co.; Inland Steel Co.; Kelley-Springfield Tire Co.; Lackawanna Steel Co.; National Sugar Refining Co.; National Shipping Co.; New Home Sewing Machine Co.; Oliver Iron & Steel Co.; Pennsylvania Coal Co.; Pennsylvania Coal & Coke Corporation; Pennsylvania Textile Co.; Phelps-Dodge Corporation; Southern Cotton Oil Co.; Standard Steel Car Co.; Studebaker Corporation; Underwood Typewriter Co.; Worthington Pump & Machinery Co.; Bethlehem Steel Co.; Cudahy Packing Co.; Dold Packing Co.; Du Pont de Nemours & Co.; General Motors Co.; Libby, McNeil & Libby; Swift & Co.

"These are only a few of the several hundred big financial, industrial, and steamship concerns whose money is financing the propaganda of the interracial council. It will be noted that many steamship companies are among them. One list of these subscribing or industrial members will be found in the committee hearings of April 22, 1920; another list, containing some names not given in the testimony, will be found printed on the literature of the interracial council.

"These subscribing members pay annual membership fees amounting to as much as $2,500 for some concerns, and more than that for a few, and smaller sums for each of many others. 'It runs from $100 a year to $2,500 as an average. A few are larger.' (Testimony of Mayper, executive secretary, p. 167.)

"The expenditures of the interracial council in certain of its activities, which manifestly do not cover all of them, amounted to $213,955.19 for the period beginning March 1, 1919, and ending March 31, 1920. (See testimony, Mayper, p. 167.) That was the first year of its existence. Its activities have continued with apparently increased magnitude, but I am without information as to later expenditures.

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. BOX. Yes.

"Mr. BLANTON. Is it any wonder, then, that this splendid piece of legislation has been sidetracked and held up?

"Mr. BOX. It is not any wonder; but it is an ominous thing if the will of the American people is to have to give way to influences like these. Nothing but a sense of duty prompts me to present these facts as they have been disclosed. The statement that I have made is based upon testimony. I have the hearings."

The situation is perfectly clear. Further comment on this point is unnecessary.

THE WORKING OF THE LAW.

It was natural that there would be certain difficulties in the early working of the new law before the exact numbers of admissible aliens from each country could be officially determined. Numerous steamers arrived during the early part of June with aliens far in excess of the numbers which were admissible. Congestion resulted. To each port there had been assigned a percentage based on the usual percentage entering that port. When these numbers had been filled efforts were made to borrow from other ports "rights" to land additional immigrants. There was great confusion. Immigration officials in Washington went to the limit in showing humanity and consideration. Aliens in excess of the June quota were allowed to land under bonds. By joint resolution Congress later provided that the excess numbers of any nationality thus admitted should be deducted from the totals of that nationality admissible during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1921.

But even in the early days of the new law, and all the more since then, the complications and the hardships to incoming aliens have been chiefly due to the disregard of the law by the steamship companies. In the whole history of our immigration legislation these companies, with rare exceptions, and then usually only when infractions of the law meant payment of fines, have never tried to obey our laws. Their tactics under the new percentage limitation act have been as usual.

The percentage bill was before Congress in one form or another during most of last winter. There never was any doubt that it would become law before summer. Although the exact number of aliens of each nationality could not be officially determined at the moment of the enactment of the measure, the steamship companies had ample time to make plans to meet the new conditions. They were in no sense "caught," as one editor has expressed it. The logical and the humane policy on their part would have been to refuse passage to all aliens who might, when the exact percentages of admissible immigrants were announced, be refused permission to land. But these companies accepted as steerage passengers several thousands of aliens who would, beyond a doubt, be excludable. There is little doubt that these excess aliens were shipped with the conviction that the sympathies of "sentimentalists" and of certain Congressmen who are interested in the "foreign vote" would be so aroused that some special provision would be made for the landing of the excess numbers. The steamship companies deserve absolutely no sympathy. They accepted the passage money of thousands of aliens who should never have been allowed to embark. They have no interest in their steerage passengers beyond the receipt of their passage money. The Commissioner General of Immigration said in Washington on June 10 last that there were then more than 10,000 immigrants in excess of the June quota already on their way to the United States, and all were accepted for passage after the new law had gone into effect.

The monthly "immigrant Derby," when, during the last few minutes of each month, incoming steamships race from beyond the 3-mile limit to quarantine in the effort to land their steerage passengers in time to have them come within the quota, and the numerous cases of hardship when the excess aliens have to be debarred could be avoided if all the steamship companies were honestly endeavoring to live up to the law. The trans-Atlantic steamship lines have a system of daily exchange of information as to the numbers of alien passengers who are embarking on their several ships. No excess over the allotted quota need therefore be started on the voyage.

Although practically all of the difficulties and the hardships to debarred aliens were due to the flagrant disregard of the law on the part of the steamship companies, the administration very properly felt that everything possible should be done to save needless suffering of perfectly innocent aliens. Hence, about mid-September, the State Department sent instructions to American consular officers abroad not to visé passports from any country whose annual admission quota to the United States is approaching exhaustion, or has already been exhausted.

This should do a great deal to reduce the number of cases of hardship and of disappointment for which, be it reiterated, the steamship companies, not the laws, are chiefly responsible.

PROPAGANDA AGAINST THE NEW LAW.

Even before the new law went into effect, a very active press campaign against it was begun. The law has been subjected to an organized attack by "interested" individuals, alien racial groups and hyphenated societies, and certain influential newspapers. All of these are bent on making any percentage limitation scheme appear unreasonable, unjust, and inhumane. All of them are, fundamentally, opposed to any action on the part of the American Government to protect our country against practically unrestricted and unselected immigration. In the case of influential newspapers which are incessantly attacking the new law, it may incidently be noted that they all carry heavy steamship advertising. In the case of other papers also, the motive is plainly that of the pocketbook. Thus, the bulletin of the Associated General Contractors has said that the effect of the law will be to "prevent the immigration to this country of the most useful class of immigrants—the common laborers who come here to work in the construction industry." The "influences" against restriction have also been very busy in Washington, interviewing Senators and Congressmen, attacking not only the percentage limitation measure but also all restrictive legislation.

The propaganda against the new restriction law has not been confined to this country. In a dispatch to the Philadelphia Public Ledger, dated London, October 16, 1921, the following statements were made:

"European steamship companies, the traditional enemies of United States immigration restrictions, have started propaganda aiming at the breaking down of the barriers put up by the '3 per cent' law. They hope when the present temporary measure expires next June to have so prepared the ground that again they will be in a position to fill the holds of their ships with Europe's surplus humanity and pour it into the United States. This law which limits the number of immigrants to a very small proportion of the number allowed to enter the United States heretofore was a severe blow to the steamship lines, and they fought it hard when it was before Congress. In the days before the war steamships carried thousands of immigrants, at approximately $100 a head, whereas now they carry dozens. The loss of that revenue came at a time when the trans-Atlantic passenger business was less remunerative than for years, because of the high costs of operating ships.

"To get back some of this business the big companies have outlined a plan for a campaign of propaganda, and already have got it working in England. The plans rest on the idea of digging up specific cases of alleged improper treatment of foreigners at Ellis Island and spreading them broadcast in the European press."

The attitude of the steamship companies and of the other influences which are seeking to bring the new law into disrepute has been clearly set forth by Government officials. Representative ISAAC SIEGEL, of New York, wrote to the President in September, 1921, citing instances of cruelty to aliens which had occurred in the enforcement of the law. President Harding replied as follows:

"I haven't any doubt in the world but the enforcement of the immigration laws is working many a hardship. My own distress has been very great over some of the specific instances which have been reported to me. If I have the situation correctly presented, the difficulty must be charged to the dishonest steamship agents, who have brought to this country innocent immigrants in spite of our continued warnings during a period of very great leniency. I know how very persistent have been the impositions which have been made on the Government agents who have been disposed to be sympathetic and more than generous in carrying out the law." * * *

Secretary of Labor Davis reiterated the statement by the President that much of the trouble is caused by dishonest steamship agents, and that pitiful stories of hardship are being circulated in the deliberate attempt to discredit the law. Assistant Secretary of Labor Henning on September 3, 1921, said:

"Unfortunately the law has no teeth, and the only way the offending companies can be punished is to compel them to take back aliens who are not admissible."

That, he added, was being done, the department "having exhausted its milk of human kindness." Mr. Henning here emphasizes the fundamental deficiency in the law. It has no teeth. There is no fine or punishment for the companies which disregard its provisions, nor is the company required to refund the deported alien's passage money. The only way is to compel the companies to carry back at their own expense the surplus, and when this has been done in a few hundreds of cases it is perhaps not too much to hope that these companies will begin to cooperate among themselves. As soon as they do so the law will prove entirely workable.

Finally on September 15 Assistant Secretary Henning added:

"Those in control of the flood of aliens coming into this country deliberately exceed the monthly quotas and depend upon compelling us, with their sob stories and tales of families being separated, to permit the law to be disregarded."

Patriotic Americans, in whose hearts patriotism is above pocketbook, can not give too much praise to President Harding, Secretary Davis, Assistant Secretary Henning, and Commissioner General Husband for their firm stand on this whole question of the enforcement of the law. In the face of aggressive, persistent, and thoroughly organized opposition on the part of selfish interests they have held their ground, tempering the enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States with the utmost possible justice and humanity. They deserve well of their country, and they may be assured of the support and high commendation of the vast majority of plain Americans, who are not organized to work for the enforcement of these laws and who seldom take it upon themselves to make their views known to Government officials, either personally or by writing. The highest commendation is also due to the Senators and Representatives who in the face of fierce and bitter opposition, heavily financed and thoroughly organized, secured the passage through Congress of the new act. To Senator DILLINGHAM, of Vermont, and his supporters in the Senate and to Congressman ALBERT JOHNSON, of Washington, chairman of the House Committee on Immigration, and his staunch supporters on his committee and in the House the country owes a great debt of gratitude which it will not forget.

THE NEW LAW VINDICATED.

The percentage law, in spite of its crudities and of difficulties in its enforcement, has been abundantly vindicated. Immigration was fast assuming its pre-war rate when the new law went into effect. Although it did not begin to function until early in June, the commissioner general estimated that it probably reduced immigration in that one month by about 50,000. As one of the Washington correspondents puts it:

"Incidentally, the sudden appearance of unemployment in America illustrates the wisdom of the act restricting immigration which was passed during the first few weeks of Harding's administration. Otherwise our unemployment problem might have been greatly increased. Throughout the world great numbers of human beings have been displaced by war and postwar conditions. These derelicts float toward us as inevitably as water flows down hill. There was some degree of truth, although more mere cleverness, in the saying that America was becoming the 'cesspool' of the human race. * * * The new law puts a limit, even if only a loose and partial limit, on the number of immigrants who can increase and complicate our unemployment problem."

SUGGESTIONS FOR FUTURE LEGISLATION.

The 3 per cent limitation act expires on June 30, 1922. What shall take its place? The "emergency" which led to its adoption still exists and will continue to exist. There is no longer an "emergency." We are facing a permanent condition of rapidly increasing and of steadily deteriorating immigration. And there are millions of prospective immigrants overseas who are simply waiting for the 30th of June, when they will rush in in a seething, chaotic mob unless Congress takes steps to stop them.

A calm, unprejudiced survey of past legislation and of the workings of the temporary 3 per cent restrictive law leads the writer to the following conclusions regarding the lines along which our new legislation should be planned.

First. The percentage-limitation principle, long and strongly advocated by leading authorities, should be made permanent. Whether this should be the present 3 per cent, based simply on the number of aliens of each nationality in this country, or a somewhat larger percentage, say, 5 per cent or 10 per cent, based on the numbers of each nationality who have become citizens, is relatively immaterial. The latter, on the whole, seems the more consistent and more rational plan.

Second. Heavy fines of at least $200 should be imposed upon the transportation companies in the case of every alien who is brought here in excess of the quota and in violation of the general immigration laws. Such fines would immediately put an end to most of the cases of hardship and suffering which have occurred during the past few months because the present law has "no teeth." It is a very strong argument in favor of heavy fines that, by this means, we can force the steamship companies, without expense to us and with the minimum of hardship to the intending immigrant, to make a careful examination and count of their passengers on the other side, and thus to prevent the embarkation of all aliens in excess of the quotas and of those who are inadmissible, for any other reason, under our laws.

Third. Every prospective immigrant should have a passport, viséed by an American consul after the alien has been "passed" by an immigration inspector and a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service attached, as vice consuls, to various consular offices abroad. This provision is embodied in a bill introduced by Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, of Washington, on July 16, 1921 (H. R. 7804). Such foreign inspection would obviously be a wise and humane way of stopping most of the inadmissible aliens before they started on their voyage. This plan would be to the advantage of the prospective immigrant, and it would also be better for the steamship companies, for it would mean that very few rejected aliens would have to be taken back at the companies' expense. Canada has for years eliminated her undesirable immigrants "at the source." Passports would not give the alien the right to land if, after a second examination at our own ports, he were found to be inadmissible. Cases of this sort would, however, be rare. Furthermore, the number of passports issued in each foreign country should not exceed the official percentage quota of that country.

Fourth. Some plan of registration of arriving aliens such as that suggested by Secretary Davis might well be inaugurated. This would not in any way constitute the alien a suspected or an undesirable person, but it would help us in our task of Americanization and of exercising a sort of watchful supervision over our new arrivals.

The logical thing to do is to plan our new legislation along existing lines. Experience has shown that these are on the whole wise, sane, and reasonable. Canada, for example, has, in her immigration laws, closely followed our general immigration law, although she has added many additional restrictions. With the changes and additions above suggested, certain perfectly definite results would follow, viz, (1) a reasonable restriction, to something like an assimilable quantity, of the number of immigrants; (2) a far more careful selection, and a more effective elimination of the unfit; (3) a very great reduction in the number of cases of hardship now arising when aliens reach our shores only to be deported.

In the light of all available facts, it would seem in the highest degree unwise, illogical, and dangerous to embark upon any new and untried schemes of immigration legislation such as those of putting almost unlimited discretionary powers in the hands of a commission, of repealing any portion of our general immigration act of 1917, and of superseding the Chinese exclusion act and the "gentlemen's agreement" with Japan by a plan for admitting orientals on any percentage basis.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator says he has an amendment pertaining to residence in contiguous territory?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I have an amendment proposing to change the present law so as to make the requirement five years.

Mr. HARRISON. We could embody both propositions in one amendment, if that would be agreeable to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STERLING. I send the amendment to the desk and offer it if it is in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, after line 6, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

SEC. 2. That subdivision (7) of section 2 (a) of the act of May 19, 1921, entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(7) Aliens who have resided continuously for at least five years immediately preceding the time of their application for admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central and South America, or adjacent islands."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask if the Senator from South Dakota will not extend his amendment so that it will incorporate section 4, as suggested by the Commissioner General of Immigration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit the Chair, he will call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is a pending amendment, offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], which affects the text of the joint resolution, and was offered prior to this one, and should be considered first.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not mean to have this voted on now; but I hoped the Senator would incorporate the two propositions in one.

Mr. STERLING. That I will do, and I offer this as an amendment to follow the one just suggested, found on pages 9 and 10 of the print which I send to the Secretary, beginning with section 4.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Mississippi withdrawn his substitute?

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to withdraw my substitute if the chairman of the committee will accept this other proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the question now is on perfecting this amendment if possible.

Mr. HARRISON. What the Senator from South Dakota has offered is for the purpose of trying to perfect the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. The substitute of the Senator from Mississippi is before the Senate. I have a substitute to offer if that is voted down.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator from Georgia that I have not yet withdrawn my substitute, but I am going to do so just as soon as the Senator from South Dakota puts in good form his amendment carrying out those two propositions.

Mr. STERLING. I understand that there is the right, of course, to perfect the pending measure.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand the Senator from Georgia, he is then going to offer a substitute for the proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from South Dakota also proposes to add, as section 3, the following:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States, either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States, any alien not admissible by virtue of the terms of this act, or otherwise in violation of any rule or regulation, not inconsistent with this act, prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien, not admissible because of the terms of this act, has been so brought, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $200 for each alien so brought, and in addition a sum equal to that paid by such alien for his transportation from the initial point of departure, indicated in his ticket, to the port of arrival, such latter sum to be delivered by the collector of customs to the alien on whose account assessed. And no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine remains unpaid, and such fine shall not be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. That is an amendment that is offered to this joint resolution. Of course the substitute is more in the form of a bill. There is no difference, as I understand, between a joint resolution and a bill. Both have to receive the signature of the President.

Mr. LODGE. Just the same.

Mr. HARRISON. So it is perfectly permissible for this amendment to be offered to a joint resolution. Now, Mr. President, I withdraw my substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer a substitute for the joint resolution as amended, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution as amended and to insert:

That no alien shall be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States from June 30, 1922, until July 1, 1927; but this resolution shall not apply to persons included in clauses 1 to 6, inclusive, and clause 8 of subdivision (a) or in the second proviso of subdivision (d) of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss this matter, except to say this:

There are several million unemployed men in this country. There are 750,000 unemployed ex-service men in this country. Every one of these men who come into this country and gets a position takes a job away from an American. The class of men that are coming into this country now are nothing like the class that formerly came; and I believe we ought to prevent any immigration, except such as I have stated in this substitute, and shut them out for five years.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] will not be adopted, for a perfectly practical reason. As the Senator knows, I agree with his general view of this proposition. Personally, I think I should be willing to vote for such a limitation; but it is perfectly evident that if this amendment is adopted we shall get into a situation where we shall get no immigration legislation at all, because the House will not adopt this provision, and the law will expire, and the country then will be exposed to a deluge of immigration.

It seems to me the sensible thing to do is to pass this joint resolution as it has already been amended. That will afford immediate relief. Then I shall join the Senator and other members of the committee in hearings to perfect legislation such as the facts may show to be necessary.

In that connection, Mr. President, because in the course of this debate the attitude of Mr. Husband has been called into question, in that he is represented as saying that all of these amendments that were suggested by him were absolutely necessary, imperatively necessary——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. It may be that the Senator got that impression from what I said.

Mr. WILLIS. I did.

Mr. HARRISON. If so, I did not want to give that impression. Mr. Husband in the report said that he thought all of these amendments were advisable. He did not say in his written report that any of them were absolutely necessary and imperative; but Mr. Husband did tell me, and it was not confidential at all, that, so far as the one-year residence proposition was concerned, it was, in his opinion, absolutely imperative.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not disagree with the Senator and with the commissioner in that; and for that reason, and to make the position of Mr. Husband clear, I think it would be desirable to print just here in the RECORD a portion of his statement, appearing on page 9 of this report, giving his views touching these amendments.

I trust that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be voted down at this time, though I favor the principle of it. I think, if it is adopted, it will imperil this whole legislative program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Ohio will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

While the administration of the act of May 19, 1921, has been attended with perplexing difficulties, some of which could not have been foreseen at the beginning, I think it can be said without qualification that the law has proven to be both workable and effective to a somewhat surprising degree. It went into effect, on short notice, at a time when immigration from Europe was rapidly approaching pre-war proportions, and in view of the many interests and influences involved it has seemingly accomplished its purpose, and for the time being at least is operating smoothly.

Of course, the law has been violated, as must be inevitable in the case of any legislation which drastically interferes with the plans and ambitions of human beings, but it can be said advisedly that there have been no wholesale violations, and, in fact, relatively few aliens have entered the country who would have been debarred solely because of the quota law. There are plenty of indications, however, that systematic violations on a considerable scale will be attempted during the remainder of the present fiscal year or, in any event, during the coming fiscal year, provided the law is continued in force. I shall not go into details in this regard but can assure you that the bureau is quite fully aware of the situation and will employ every possible means to insure a strict enforcement of the law.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS.

If the act of May 19, 1921, is to be amended, it is desirable from an administrative standpoint that the following provisions shall be made:

1. Limit the number who may be admitted in any month to 10 per cent of the yearly quota instead of 20 per cent, as in the present law.

2. If possible, the number admitted monthly or annually ought to be regulated at ports of departure rather than at ports of arrival, or preferably in countries of origin, if this can be accomplished through limiting the number of visés issued each month.

3. A sufficient penalty for violations of the act to insure observance on the part of transportation lines.

4. Increasing materially the period of time (now one year) during which aliens who are natives of countries within the operation of the act shall be required to live in foreign contiguous territory, etc., before they are exempt from the provisions of the law.

5. Giving legal authority, through administrative discretion or otherwise, to the end that immediate families shall not be separated because children and parents happen to be born in different countries.

6. Insuring that the always very limited immigration of European origin from New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa shall not be prohibited.

You will note that I have suggested these proposed amendments as desirable rather than indispensable additions to the law from an administrative standpoint. They would be desirable, and in some instances highly desirable, but you have asked me verbally if the law in its present form is not reasonably satisfactory, and I shall answer by saying that with the experience of the past eight months as a guide I am quite sure that some of the administrative difficulties of the past can be avoided or considerably minimized in the future, even though the law is extended without amendment as the House joint resolution provides.

With the hope that the foregoing may be of some value to you and the committee, I am, Faithfully yours.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I voted for the 3 per cent restriction bill when it was passed a year ago. It has worked well. It has filled the purposes for which it was enacted. It was intended to restrict immigration, and that result has been accomplished.

I have analyzed the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] a moment ago that would seem to indicate that 351,930 immigrants were admissible from Europe this year under the quota fixed by the 3 per cent law. Of that number, 51,000 actually came from northern and western Europe and 119,606 from southern and eastern Europe; but the figures also show, Mr. President, that 15,930 aliens, citizens of northern and western Europe, and 113,243 aliens, citizens of eastern and southern Europe, departed from this country, making a total of those who were admitted of 171,000, and a total of those who departed of 129,000; so that the total gain during the eight months referred to in the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island was only 42,414 people from all of Europe.

Mr. COLT. And only 6,000 from southern and eastern Europe.

Mr. CALDER. Yes; the Senator points out that of that total our increase in population from southern and eastern Europe is only 6,000 and 36,000 from northern and western Europe—surely, Mr. President, a very small number, indeed.

For my part, I am not willing to vote yet to shut out all immigration from all countries in the world. I believe that the restriction has worked well; I believe that it was a good thing to adopt; but I also believe there are very many good people in some of the other countries of the world that can do no harm to us by coming here.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for a division on my substitute. In order to save time, I will not ask for a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Georgia.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Georgia proposes to add at the end of the amendment already agreed to the following:

SEC. 4. No alien shall be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States unless transported to the United States in a vessel documented under the laws of the United States, as defined in the shipping act of 1916, as amended.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senate that when the President of the United States made his address to the Congress in regard to the merchant marine and reached this subject he received more applause than for anything else in his address. I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss the amendment, but I hope that it will be incorporated in the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, personally I am heartily in favor of this amendment. I am satisfied, however, that we could not pass through Congress a bill requiring that all aliens coming to the United States shall be carried in American ships. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that we hope to provide in the merchant marine bill which will be reported to the Senate that at least 50 per cent of such immigrants shall come in American ships. As I said, personally I shall vote for the amendment, but without any special hope that it will be adopted. However, I do want to assure the Senator from Georgia and the Senate that we hope to include in the merchant marine bill a provision requiring that at least 50 per cent of such immigrants be carried in American ships.

Mr. COLT. With regard to this amendment, I may say that the feeling of the committee was, as stated by the Senator from Washington, that it is premature; in other words, that it perhaps could not be applied at the present time; that it might be included in the merchant marine bill, but that now, by reason of the fact that the merchant marine question is not settled as to the number of vessels and all of such things, it would not be proper to adopt the provision at this time. Therefore the committee voted it down.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It may be asked why we do not put the 50 per cent provision in this joint resolution. We have found that it is quite a difficult proposition to work out the provision under which 50 per cent of the immigrants coming to the United States shall be carried in American vessels. So that can be taken as the reason why we do not propose anything of that sort in connection with the pending measure.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, what I desire to say is merely corroborative of what has been said by the Senator from Washington. The Committee on Commerce is working on this general subject and giving it very close attention. The majority of the committee is in harmony with the principle expressed in this amendment; at any rate I am, and I know the chairman of the committee is. But it seems to me that it would be very unfortunate to lug that question into this measure. Therefore I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a committee amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 5 the committee proposes to strike out "1923" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "1924, unless otherwise repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. COLT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. COLT, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. KING conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. GRIEST, and Mr. BELL were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

H. R. 2556. An act to advance Maj. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major; and

H. R. 7589. An act for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE IN WYOMING.

Mr. KENDRICK. I offer a resolution of peculiar importance to the people of my State, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 277) was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Whereas there have recently appeared in the public press statements purporting to have been authorized by the Department of the Interior to the effect that the Secreary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy are negotiating with private parties for the operation of lands included in naval petroleum reserve No. 3, Wyoming No. 1, withdrawn by Executive order of the President dated April 30, 1915, known as the Teapot Dome: Therefore

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, whether such negotiations are pending, and if so the names of all parties, the terms and conditions of all proposed operating agreements, and whether opportunity will be given the public for competitive bidding for the operation of these lands, or whether it is proposed to award a lease or other operating contract or agreement for the entire area to one person, corporation, or association.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, in the subject matter of the resolution there are two questions involved: First, whether there is any present need for the development and operation of the Wyoming naval reserve, known as the Teapot Dome; and, second, if there is such need, whether the interests of the Government would be best preserved by a private or a public sale. I have no doubt that the Department of the Interior and the Department of the Navy have very excellent reasons for any program they may have adopted, and if it is really their intention to permit the operation of the Teapot Dome within the near future, that they have a very good explanation for that intention. I am constrained to believe, however, that the interests of the State of Wyoming and the interests of the people of the United States are so intimately involved in this matter that before any arrangement by contract or otherwise is made for the development of this field, the public should be permitted to have some inkling of the terms upon which it is proposed to act.

It has been announced, apparently on the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, that the policy of the Interior and Navy Departments is now to abandon the storage of oil underground and to store it rather in surface tanks prepared for this purpose on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. That such a policy would be in all respects a wise and commendable one with respect to the California naval reserves I am ready to agree, if the information which I have received with respect to the condition of those reserves is correct. I am told that oil wells which have been sunk upon private lands within the boundaries of the California reserve would, in a comparatively short time, drain those fields of their contents, and therefore that it is to the interests of the Government to have similar wells drilled upon the land in the same fields which have been reserved for the use of the Navy. But this is not the condition that prevails in the Teapot Dome. There, if I am correctly advised, no wells whatever have been drilled to production, and no wells have been drilled in the vicinity through which by any possibility this reserve could be drained. It would appear, therefore, that there is no danger of the oil in the Teapot Dome being removed until the Government acts. All the land in this field is owned by the Government, and no one may remove the oil until the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy shall consent.

Is it, then, to the interest of the Government to authorize the development of this field at the present time, to pay private operators for drilling the field, to authorize the necessarily heavy expenditures that would have to be met if tanks sufficiently large to store the content of this dome are to be erected, in order that this oil may be taken from its natural storage place to the seaboard? We have just ratified a treaty by which the size of the Navy has been reduced. It is to be presumed, therefore, that unless the use of coal is to be abandoned on our naval vessels, the Navy will have less rather than a greater need for oil in the immediate future. Not only that but the oil fields on the public domain outside of the naval reserve are not now being worked to capacity. The Government derives a royalty of from 12½ per cent to 33⅓ per cent upon all oil removed from the Salt Creek field, which lies immediately north of the Teapot Dome. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to take this royalty in oil, and in Wyoming he is doing that, but within the past year the drilling requirements of the Government leases in the Salt Creek field have been suspended and the field is producing scarcely more than one-third of its capacity with the present number of wells. It would seem to follow from this that there is no great need for oil at the present time. Of course it may be said that the royalty oil from the lands outside the naval reserve is used by the Shipping Board; but, of course, since the Shipping Board is not using the full amount of the Government oil which could be produced, the difference between what it is using and the capacity of the field, so far as the Government is concerned, could be assigned to the use of the Navy if the Navy needs more oil. I take it, however, that there is no present need for naval fuel oil, because all of the announcements emanating from the Interior Department indicate that if the Teapot Dome is developed its production will be stored for future use. The question, therefore, is simply whether it is wiser and of greater benefit to the Navy to allow this oil to remain stored underground or to remove it across the country to be stored in surface tanks.

If it should appear from the information afforded by the department that it is expedient to develop the Teapot Dome now, there still remains the inquiry whether the interests of the Government would best be preserved by a private or a public sale. There can be no doubt that if these lands are to be let to private interests for development it should only be after all operators have been given a full and complete opportunity by competitive bidding to offer the Government the best possible return.

Only last June approximately 2,000 acres of outside land in the Salt Creek field were sold at public auction under the authority of the Department of the Interior. Although the price of oil at that time was only 50 cents a barrel, the bonuses paid by the operators, who were eager to secure the leases, amounted to the sum of $1,687,000. That the lands in the Teapot Dome are vastly more valuable than these which sold for bonuses of over a million and a half dollars is the general belief of all Wyoming operators, and if these lands were put up at public auction the profit to the Government would be proportionately greater.

Mr. President, in connection with the resolution submitted by me, and as indicating the interest in this matter on the part of the people of my State, I send to the desk a telegram from the Hon. B. B. Brooks, of Casper, Wyo., former governor of the State. Governor Brooks is not only one of the first citizens of Wyoming but he is one of our largest oil operators and is regarded as one of the best authorities on the oil business in the West. His telegram speaks for a large number of oil operators and incorporates the substance of a resolution passed by a convention of oilmen. It also reflects the general sentiment of the people in reference to this question. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CASPER, WYO., April 14, 1922.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the Rocky Mountain Oil and Gas Producers' Association held in this city to-day a resolution was unanimously adopted protesting against the drilling and development of naval reserve No. 3, known as Teapot Dome, and the reported letting of a private contract to Harry Sinclair or any other person or corporation for the following reasons: There is no present market or outlet for the present production of oil. The present production of oil does not affect this naval pool. The oil is not adapted to naval uses nor is there any present naval requirement for additional oil. This association is opposed to the letting of contracts for the development of Government oil reserve by private arrangement and without opportunity for general competitive bidding. Furthermore, the proposed additional production will seriously increase the already overproduction of crude in this territory and result in continued reduction of prices of crude oil to the loss of the producers, the State of Wyoming, public schools, good roads, and national reclamation fund; also the proposed drilling of the Teapot Dome means transporting that oil from the State of Wyoming in its entirety, whereas if produced in the future and when actually needed it will be refined in this State; and we deem the present proposed development and withdrawal not in harmony with purposes of original withdrawal or the policy of the leasing law. The Rocky Mountain Oil and Gas Producers' Association includes in its membership fully 95 per cent of the producers and more than 95 per cent of the production in the State. The association urges upon the Wyoming delegation immediate action to prevent the consummation of the proposed contract affecting the Teapot Dome. Immediate action is necessary.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN OIL AND GAS PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION,
By B. B. BROOKS, President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate take up for consideration Senate Joint Resolution 188, which authorizes the appointment of a committee of three Senators by the President of the Senate and three Members of the House by the Speaker to inquire into the conditions of industry and commerce in the United States, for the purpose of securing information on which to base legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the joint resolution be reported.

The joint resolution was read by title, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the resolution be read in full, Mr. President.

The reading clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the revival of the industrial activities of the United States is essential to the welfare of the individual as well as the Nation; and

Whereas business has been suffering severe depression from which its reconstruction should be stimulated by every legitimate means; and

Whereas business procedure that will, without protecting monopolies, eliminate waste in production or distribution, lower costs, simplify and standardize methods, increase efficiency and the morale of business is a beneficial factor in economic progress; and

Whereas congressional action has already been taken to assist in agricultural cooperative marketing and distribution; and

Whereas the industrial tendency is toward the substitution of research and scientific business methods for previous uncertainty and ignorance; and

Whereas business is hesitating because unable to secure guidance, legal or governmental, which will clearly indicate the proper lines of conduct in business association; and

Whereas business is entitled to know in definite terms what it legally can and can not do: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee of Congress is hereby created, to be composed of six members, three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States and the markets of foreign countries, in so far as the same directly affect industry and commerce of the United States, including questions as to production, distribution, labor, and business methods, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation, if any, as it may deem best upon these subjects, with a special reference to the most effective ways and means to revive industry and to stimulate foreign and domestic trade, to stabilize business conditions as to the future, to minimize the danger and distress of recurring periods of business depression with their resultant cycles of general unemployment, and to define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

SEC. 3. That such committee is hereby authorized during the Sixty-seventh Congress to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Congress, at Washington or at any other place in the United States, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ experts deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk, and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before such committee, such stenographer's service to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, the expenses involved in carrying out the provisions of this resolution to be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 4. That the committee may from time to time report to Congress, and shall submit a final report on or before December 4, 1922.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is this measure brought before the Senate by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope it will not be taken up to-day.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from New York intend to go on with it to-day?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; I desire to have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not intend to ask us to go any further with it to-day after it has been made the unfinished business?

Mr. CALDER. I hoped there might be no objection to taking it up.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is the joint resolution which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] said he would ask to have taken up on Monday?

Mr. CALDER. It is the joint resolution to which the Senator from New Jersey referred.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought the Senator from New Jersey said he would not ask to have it taken up until Monday.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are several Senators opposed to it, and I do not think it would be fair to take it up in their absence.

Mr. CALDER. Why not let us have it made the unfinished business, and then I will ask to have it temporarily laid aside for any other business which may be brought up?

Mr. LODGE. I think we can take it up, if it is so desired.

Mr. OVERMAN. It can be taken up by a majority vote.

Mr. LODGE. We can take it up by a majority vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. We may want to debate it.

Mr. CALDER. There is no objection to taking it up that I know of.

Mr. LODGE. It can be made the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has said that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] stated to some Senators that it would not be taken up until Monday.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Jersey said he wanted to have it made the unfinished business, and that he would not press it until Monday; that he understood some Senators desired to be heard on it, and that he would have to be away himself to-day, and would not press it until Monday.

Mr. CALDER. If there is no objection to having the joint resolution made the unfinished business, I shall agree to lay it aside temporarily.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am opposed to taking it up to-day.

Mr. LODGE. It can be laid aside for to-day.

Mr. CALDER. I will not ask for a vote on it to-day; I shall not press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Let me read from the RECORD what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] said on yesterday:

> I wish to announce that on Monday next, immediately following the routine morning business, providing the calling of the calendar does not interfere, I shall ask unanimous consent to consider Senate Joint Resolution No. 188, which provides for a committee of inquiry to endeavor to find some solution of the problem. As I do not want to interfere with the regular business of the Senate, I desire further to announce that should the morning hour on Monday be consumed by the calling of the calendar I shall renew my request for unanimous consent the first morning thereafter when we have a morning hour.

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator from New Jersey left this afternoon he said he would like to have it taken up and made the unfinished business, but with the understanding that we should not go on with it before Monday.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the joint resolution being made the unfinished business?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States, for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be temporarily laid aside.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration at this time the bill (S. 2040) to provide for compulsory school attendance of children, to provide for the taking of a school census, to create the department of school attendance and work permits for the administration of this act and the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, within the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask, has the bill the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CAPPER. The report of the committee was unanimous, except that one member of the committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was not present. The bill has the approval of the District Committee, of the District Commissioners, and of the Board of Education. They have been anxious for several months to get action upon it. It is a very meritorious measure. The District of Columbia has no compulsory school attendance law and those in charge of the schools here say it is exceedingly important that we have enacted for this city as quickly as possible a law which will require attendance in the public schools.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. This is an extremely important bill. It is such a sweeping and vitally important measure that I hope the Senator from Kansas will not press it at this time. I would like to look into it myself.

Mr. CAPPER. It has been before the Senate for two or three months.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. We have been constantly busy on something here in the Senate. I know I have been constantly in my seat and busy on the floor from time to time.

Mr. CAPPER. How much time would the Senator like to have?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Let it go over until some day next week and I shall look into it in the meantime.

Mr. CAPPER. We have delayed it here a number of times and given way to other measures. However, if the Senator asks for more time and will indicate the time he would like to have, I shall not insist upon the consideration of the bill now.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I would like to have it to go over until next week so that I may examine the bill and the report. Compulsory school attendance and the regulation of child labor are important questions.

Mr. CAPPER. The bill is in line with the compulsory school attendance laws of every State in the Union, and the work permit feature of it is exactly the same that we now have in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Two or three days could not possibly make any difference. I hope the Senator will not think me unreasonable if I request him to let the bill go over until Monday.

Mr. CAPPER. Very well.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, there are a number of pension bills on the calendar which have passed the lower House and which have been pending in the Senate for several months. They ought to be taken up and disposed of. I desire to give notice at this time that on Monday, immediately after the passage of the joint resolution which is now the unfinished business, I shall move to make the pension legislation the unfinished business, commencing with House bill 2158, to provide for the monthly payment of pensions.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to suggest, if there are several pension bills, that some agreement might be entered into that those matters could be taken up some night early next week.

Mr. BURSUM. That course would be very agreeable to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the calendar will be called on Monday, and I presume the bills referred to by the Senator from New Mexico will be reached then. So very likely they may be taken care of when they are reached in the regular order, and it will not be necessary to set them for a special time.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to bring them up by agreement or by motion for the reason that they are nearly always objected to on a call of the calendar, when the understanding generally is to take up only such bills as are not objected to. Therefore, I desire to give notice that I shall move to take up the bills to which I have referred immediately after the disposal of the unfinished business now before the Senate.

INCOME TAX ON FOREIGN VISITORS.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have just noticed a very remarkable statement in the New York Times of to-day. I see where Mr. Ralph D. Blumenfeld, who is a part owner of Town and Country, published in London, and chairman of the board and editor of the London Daily Express, recently paid our country a visit and spent about three weeks in the United States. While he was here he purchased somewhere between $220,000 and $225,000 worth of machinery. When he attempted to return home, before he could get his sailing papers, he was asked by an official in New York his occupation, his business, and how he spent his time in the United States. The conversation proceeded and the official then desired to know the salary that he drew. He said that he was on no salary, and thereupon the official arbitrarily put him down as worth $17,000 salary and assessed him $93.50 income tax for the pleasure of visiting the United States and the further pleasure of purchasing some $225,000 worth of machinery to be shipped out of the United States.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if such is the law it should not be continued, and if such is not the law the officials should not so disturb people who come to our country to spend their money. If we expect to build up trade in this country by building a tariff wall around us so high that no goods can come in, and then in addition to that when people visit here to spend their money if we are going to tax them before we let them go home, it seems to me we will dry up the industries of our country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if we pursue a course of that character what effect it would have upon Americans who might go abroad, and buy or sell there? Would they not be subjected to some sort of retaliatory legislation?

Mr. DIAL. In the same manner, I should think, and we would then soon have our home products dried up almost absolutely, except as far as we ourselves could use them. It would stop the encouragement of trade with the people of the world. This is one of the most remarkable instances I have ever known. It is, however, just about what could be expected at the present time when we remember the way in which we enact our laws and the defective execution of the laws.

Mr. KING. It seems to me if the present law permits that, it ought to be promptly amended, because that is such an oppressive thing that it will appeal to everyone as being injurious to the American people.

Mr. DIAL. I agree with the Senator. I am satisfied that it will drive away millions of dollars' worth of foreign trade.

J. B. GLANVILLE AND OTHERS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 854) to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture. The bill was read and considered the last time the calendar was called and it went over upon the objection of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], to whom I have spoken and who has no further objection to urge.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 4 there is a clerical error which I wish to correct by an amendment. In the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims, line 13, page 4, I move to strike out "forty-eight" and to insert in lieu "four thousand two hundred and thirty-one."

Mr. FLETCHER. What does that change?

Mr. CURTIS. It states the exact number of cattle. There was a clerical error in the number.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the claim grows out of the negligence of the agents of the Government?

Mr. CURTIS. It does.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been reported on favorably by the department?

Mr. CURTIS. It has.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Department of Agriculture recommend it?

Mr. CURTIS. It is recommended by the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute reported by the Committee on Claims having been agreed to, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. Without objection that vote will be reconsidered and the amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 13, strike out "forty-eight" and insert in lieu "four thousand two hundred and thirty-one," so as to read:

For losses and damages sustained by them through the negligence of the veterinary inspectors employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, in their failure to properly dip 4,231 head of Texas cattle, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 17, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 15, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, the height and the depth, the length and the breadth of Thy love are beyond our knowledge. We praise Thee, for Thou art the King of Love whose goodness faileth never. As we wait in the foreglow of the great Easter day, there comes to us the sublime truth, "Greater love hath no man than this." It glorifies all there is in earth and sky and places supreme value on the worth of man. Be with us this day, and as the light of the morrow breaks upon us may our hearts respond to the heavenly strain that celebrates the world's redemption. O Son of God, rise upon all darkened lands and touch all things and bring them forth into beauty. We would accept the eternal law of achievement, namely, defeat of conquest through sacrifice. May no one in all the world be big enough to make us little enough to hate. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3317. An act to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, Beltrami County, Minn.;

S. 2919. An act to extend for the period of two years the provisions of title 2 of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended;

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2919. An act to extend for the period of two years the provisions of title 2 of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CORRECTION.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in an address I made on the floor of the House on April 11, I made several remarks about Brig. Gen. George W. Burr, of the Regular Army, stating that at the time referred to he was in charge of the Sixty-seventh Field Artillery brigade in France. The latter statement came from The Adjutant General's records, but I find that those records have been confused with the record of another General Burr in France who was in charge of the brigade I mentioned. I have received a letter from Brig. Gen. George W. Burr of date April 13, 1922, stating the facts with reference to his service with this organization, and an investigation of the record convinces me his statements are correct; that he had no connection with the artillery brigade referred to, was not censured in France; and I am going to ask unanimous consent to insert a copy of his letter in the RECORD, together with a copy of my reply to him, which will state the facts.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand it, the general rules of the House give the gentleman permission to correct the RECORD. Of course, they do not give him the permission to insert letters or to correct statements concerning some individual.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will state to the gentleman that I am asking unanimous consent to do that very thing. I am going further, to submit a unanimous-consent request that all the statements with reference to Brig. Gen. George W. Burr be eliminated from the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to insert the letters indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. There is another request, Mr. Speaker, that all reference to Brig. Gen. George W. Burr be eliminated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the further request that the statements referred to be eliminated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, April 13, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your attention is invited to the following extract from a speech made by you on the floor of the House, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 11, 1922:

"Brig. Gen. George W. Burr, of the Regular Army, was in charge of the Sixty-seventh Field Artillery brigade in France. I have with me a photostatic copy of a report made at Toul, France, February 7, 1919, by General Bullard, and it might not be amiss to say the ex-service men who are interested in seeing a reform in the Army have a great many photostatic copies of exhibits which can not be controverted. This report shows 'that General Burr showed inexcusable neglect.' Corrections were duly pointed out. An inspection made some three weeks later showed continued similar inexcusable neglect, with corresponding resulting damage to motor transportation. As this brigade was under orders to go and has now gone to the Lemans area, taking its motor transportation with it, discipline and corrections could not be made here. I recommend that this matter be followed with General Burr, even though he has now been relieved and ordered back to the United States, and that it be followed also with the brigade now in the Lemans area. In the great effort being made to keep motor transportation in condition, both General Burr and the officer in charge of this transportation should be held responsible.

* * * * * * *

"General Burr, after he had been found inefficient in France, * * *."

This entire quotation in so far as it refers to Brig Gen. George W. Burr, of the Regular Army, is in error, since I was not in command of the Artillery brigade referred to, was not in France at the time, and was not the officer referred to in the report to which you have reference. These statements are readily verified from the records.

Since you have done me a gross injustice in the above quoted reference to me in your speech, I request that you take immediate steps to have made a suitable correction.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. BURR,
Brigadier General, Ordnance Department, United States Army.

—

APRIL 15, 1922.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE W. BURR,
Office of the Chief of Ordnance, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your letter of April 13, I wish to say I find the facts with reference to your service with the Sixty-seventh Field Artillery as stated in your letter.

The error was due to a confusion in the records of The Adjutant General's Office in that your name was confused with that of the other officer.

In order to make as full amends as possible I have to-day given the facts to Congress in a short statement, have included for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD copies of your letter and of my reply, and have secured unanimous consent that all reference to you in connection with this matter be stricken from the permanent copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I regret this error as much as you, and have tried to correct it with as much publicity as was given to the original statement.

Most respectfully,

ROYAL C. JOHNSON.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman from South Dakota made the correction in reference to Brig. Gen. George W. Burr.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Does he wish to ask unanimous consent to address the House?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I am very glad the gentleman from South Dakota has seen fit to correct the RECORD with reference to Brig. Gen. George W. Burr. Brig. Gen. George W. Burr was in command of the Third Post Supply Department in London, England, during five months, and made such an exceptional record that he was ordered returned to the United States and was put in the permanent force of the Supply Department, where he made an exceptional record.

SPECIAL CANCELING STAMPS IN CERTAIN POST OFFICES.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 10740, with Senate amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10740, with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are there any serious objections to adding to the number, already provided for, of canceling stamps for these two illustrious affairs that have been included in the Senate amendments?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not exactly understand the question.

Mr. GARNER. Is this a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman could bring it up as a matter of right, a House bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it a Union Calendar bill?

The SPEAKER. No; it is a House Calendar bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would a motion to concur in the Senate amendment take precedence of the motion to consent to the conference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. STAFFORD. What objection would there be to concurring in the Senate amendments?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am trying to save the House some time. Since this amendment was put on adding two new places there has been an urgent request made to have another one put on, and we desire to do that in conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think the gentleman will be able to accomplish that by such parliamentary tactics. If the gentleman wants to block concurrence, it is in his power to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. BELL.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Anthony	Blakeney	Brand
Andrew, Mass.	Bacharach	Bond	Britten
Ansorge	Bixler	Bowers	Brooks, Pa.

Brown, Tenn.	Hammer	Lampert	Schall
Burke	Hawes	Langley	Shelton
Campbell, Pa.	Hayden	Linthicum	Siegel
Cantrill	Herrick	London	Snyder
Clark, Fla.	Hickey	McSwain	Speaks
Cole, Ohio	Hill	Maloney	Sproul
Copley	Hogan	Mansfield	Stiness
Dale	Hudspeth	Michaelson	Stoll
Davis, Tenn.	Husted	Mills	Sullivan
Drane	Hutchinson	Moore, Ill.	Sweet
Drewry	Ireland	Morin	Taylor, Ark.
Dunn	Jefferis, Nebr.	O'Brien	Taylor, Colo.
Dyer	Jeffers, Ala.	Olpp	Taylor, Tenn.
Fields	Johnson, Miss.	Perlman	Tincher
Focht	Kelly, Pa.	Radcliffe	Vaile
Fordney	Kennedy	Rainey, Ala.	Volk
Foster	Ketcham	Rainey, Ill.	Volstead
Frear	Kiess	Reber	Walsh
Gahn	Kindred	Robertson	Ward, N. Y.
Gilbert	Kirkpatrick	Rosenbloom	Wason
Goldsborough	Kitchin	Rossdale	Williams
Gorman	Kleczka	Rouse	Wilson
Gould	Knight	Ryan	Winslow
Graham, Pa.	Kreider	Sabath	Wood, Ind.
Griffin	Kunz	Sanders, Ind.	Young

The SPEAKER. On this call 317 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE FLOOD.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the fourth Sunday in May, May 28, 1922, be set apart for the delivery of addresses on the life, character, and public service of the late HENRY D. FLOOD, formerly a Representative from the tenth congressional district of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that Sunday, May 28, be set apart for memorial addresses on the late Representative FLOOD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $101,400: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder, other than as a draftsman or such other technical capacity, at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except the following: One at $2,200, one at $2,000.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for one minute.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, last night the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] asked unanimous consent that the bureau appropriations be passed over until after the enlisted strength of the Navy had been disposed of. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] objected to that request. I understand this morning that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is asking the Chair to be recognized for the purpose of withdrawing his objection? Am I right about that?

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan is correct. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the objection and proceed to discuss the bill under the item "Personnel."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to withdraw his objection that he made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is the understanding that we start in with the pay of the Navy, on page 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

PAY OF THE NAVY.

For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, $25,893,986; officers on the retired list, $3,114,840; commutation of quarters for officers, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, machinists, pharmacists, pay clerks, and mates, naval constructors, and assistant naval constructors, $1,310,400; and also members of Nurse Corps (female), $1,000; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $20,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $675,566; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge, $3,772,000; interest on deposit by men, $10,000; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, $51,832,351; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court-martial, $520,520; and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; and apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $422,400; pay of the Nurse Corps, $366,720; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps, $25,000; retainer pay and active-service pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force, $5,689,233; reimbursement for losses of property under act of October 6, 1917, $10,000; payment of six months' death gratuity, $150,000; in all, $93,814,016; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Pay of the Navy," shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law as "Pay of the Navy," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That retainer pay provided by existing law shall not be paid to any member of the Naval Reserve Force who fails to train as provided by law during the year for which he fails to train.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 10, strike out the figures "$3,772,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$5,981,900."

Page 32, line 15, strike out the figures "$51,832,351" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$62,108,534."

Page 32, line 16, strike out the figures "$520,520" and insert in lieu thereof "$858,000"; page 32, line 19, strike out the figures "$422,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,207,200"; page 32, line 20, strike out the figures "$366,720" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$447,580"; page 32, line 25, strike out the figures "$93,814,016" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$107,503,239."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In order to bring the matter fully before the committee, the gentleman's amendment should include page 34, where the bill provides for 67,000 men. I understand the gentleman's amendment is based on 86,000 men.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VARE. I will state that I conferred with the Chair a few days ago as to the parliamentary situation, and I understood that on the question of amendment the senior member of the Appropriations Committee being opposed to the present bill, he would be recognized to make an amendment as to the personnel.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not the paragraph relating to the personnel, and therefore the Chair recognized the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. VARE. My understanding was that an agreement was made that all the other items would be passed over until such time as we reached the personnel, and that was the purpose of my withdrawing my objection.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Let me state my understanding of the situation and probably it will be satisfactory to all the gentlemen interested. The figures that I have presented are based on the necessary enrollment of a personnel of 86,000. They are not haphazard figures, but have been prepared by the Paymaster General of the Navy. I have no objection to letting the matter go over until the next paragraph is read and the gentleman from Pennsylvania can offer his amendment for 86,000 personnel and we can discuss the amendments together.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet at the time the gentleman from Oregon was recognized.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I will say that I also have an amendment to that paragraph, but I am willing to let the gentleman from Pennsylvania offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon make a request that this may be passed?

Mr. MCARTHUR. I am willing to have it passed until after the item with reference to the personnel is read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. OLIVER. If the personnel is increased to 86,000, of course the figures will have to be changed to conform with that increased personnel, so the question of pay should be deferred until we see what the result of the vote on the increase will be.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The only thing I am anxious about is that these gentlemen shall not fall out about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. VARE. I ask unanimous consent to present this amendment.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I am willing to have my amendment pending until the other paragraph is read, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed until the question of personnel is decided, on page 34.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I did not so understand the request of the gentleman from Oregon. The request of the gentleman from Oregon is to have his amendment considered as pending until the next paragraph is read and then let the gentleman from Pennsylvania offer his amendment, action being taken first on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and then on the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Chair's understanding. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Perhaps I can help these gentlemen clear up their difficulty. I would be glad if I could divide the thing equally between them, but I do not know that I can; but I would suggest that whatever arrangement is made between them the first proposition to be disposed of is the size of the Navy and that the amendment seeking to increase the number from 67,000 to 86,000 be first considered; then, if that should carry, the figures of the gentleman from Oregon would be next in order.

Mr. McARTHUR. I will object to that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan, chairman of the subcommittee, agreed that the first supply sections of the bill should be passed in order to accommodate the gentleman, and with the understanding that the first question to be voted on was the question of the size of the personnel. Now, queerly enough, after having agreed to that with the gentleman from Oregon he disagrees with the gentleman about this.

Mr. McARTHUR. The gentleman from Wyoming is furnishing some gratuitous advice in this matter. I want to be reasonable and I am willing that the two amendments shall be considered at the same time, providing the gentleman from Pennsylvania can control half of the time on our side of the question.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the real objection to the suggestion that I have made?

Mr. McARTHUR. I am willing to withdraw any objection and accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. VARE. I want to assure the gentleman from Oregon that he may control half the time.

Mr. McARTHUR. I do not care to control any more than half the time. Let us read the bill, then.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I trust the Chair will now have the amendment read which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent has not been agreed to as yet.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] be considered as pending, that first consideration be given to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], and that upon the matter of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania there shall be four hours of debate, the four hours to be divided equally between the two sides of the proposition, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] controlling one hour and some one on that side who is against the committee proposition controlling the other hour.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, of the time allotted to me I would grant one-half to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], the ranking Democrat on the Committee on Appropriations opposed to the committee amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And that the other two hours will be divided, one hour to be retained by myself and the other hour to be given to either Mr. VARE or Mr. McARTHUR, whichever one of them will consent that he withdraw.

Mr. McARTHUR. I am perfectly willing to let the gentleman from Michigan control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] shall be pending, and be taken up for discussion under the amendment which is proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE]; that upon those amendments there shall be four hours of general debate, two hours to be controlled for the amendments offered by Mr. VARE and Mr. McARTHUR and two hours against, to be divided between the respective sides of the House, to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan on the majority side of the House and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], and on the minority side of the House to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit, my request is that there be four hours of debate on these two amendments, but that the vote shall come, first, on the amendment offered by Mr. VARE; that two hours of time shall be given to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who will divide with Mr. GALLIVAN, and two hours shall be given to the proponents of the bill, one hour of that time to be given to Mr. VARE, who yields one-half of it to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that the vote shall be had at the conclusion of the debate?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think that better be made a part of the request.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And that the vote be had at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We are asked to consent to an agreement that it is a pig in a poke. What is the amendment that the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to offer?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let it be read for information.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I stated that it was to change the personnel from 67,000 to 86,000.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not so understand it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment may be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment which is to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] will be read for information.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. VARE: Page 34, line 7, strike out the figures "2,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "6,000," and on page 34, line 8, strike out the figures "67,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "86,000," making the paragraph read as follows:

"Immediately upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Navy shall begin to reduce the enlisted strength of the Navy, by furlough without pay (and no refunds shall be required of men so furloughed), discharge, or otherwise, under such regulations as he may prescribe, without regard to the provisions of existing law governing discharges, so that the average number of enlisted men, including 6,000 apprentice seamen, shall not exceed 86,000 during the fiscal year 1923."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. There is so much confusion in the Hall that I could not hear all that has been said. We have an understanding over here on the Democratic side that provision is only made for the proponents of the 67,000 idea, which is the bill, and the 86,000 personnel. What provision is made for those gentlemen who will offer an amendment to increase the Navy to the authorized strength, demanded by the experts? I think those who want to follow the experts should be given equal opportunity to offer an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the morning mail has not yet arrived. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Oh, it has not? That gives me the information I wanted, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed 200 graduates of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 shall be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy, and the graduates to be commissioned shall be selected by the Academic Board of the Naval Academy after giving equal consideration to the scholastic standing and adaptability for naval service of each graduate: Provided, That each graduate of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 who is not commissioned as an ensign in the Navy shall be paid mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile from the Naval Academy to his home and a sum equal to three months' pay as a midshipman, such payments to be made from the respective appropriations in this act providing for the transportation and pay of midshipmen.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know if an amendment will be in order to be offered at this time to that part of the section which the Clerk has just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks an amendment may be offered at any time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all of these other matters be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to find out if an amendment offered at this time to the paragraph which has just been read, would it be in order to have the amendment disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not now.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then I ask that my amendment be read, and then I shall agree that it may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, so that there may be no question, I make the point of order against that provision, and let the point of order be pending with the gentleman's request that this go over until the personnel has been fixed.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is entirely agreeable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be read, with the understanding that it goes over until the other matters are disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] to be considered pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: Page 33, strike out lines 8 and 9, and including "in the Navy," in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof: "that in determining the number of the members of the 1922 Naval Academy graduating class who shall be commissioned the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to bring about the retirement of 75 per cent of such officers in the Navy as are eligible for retirement. He shall cause to be commissioned out of 1922 Naval Academy graduating class 200 members, and an additional number equal to the number of officers retired under the provisfons of this section."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the reservation of the point of order would go to the amendment, and the whole matter is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show that the reservation of the point of order also goes to the amendment. Let the Chair state this matter. It is the understanding of the Chair that if amendments are offered to any of these provisions included in the reading down past the paragraph commencing on page 34, that the debate on them will be limited to the four hours, unless otherwise arranged; so that the Chair can not recognize anyone outside of the four hours unless arrangement is made to that effect.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the Chair restate what he has just said?

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that debate on amendments that might be offered to any of these paragraphs will all be included in the agreement ordered, unless otherwise arranged.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No, Mr. Chairman. The intention was that the debate should be upon the question of 86,000 men or 67,000 men, and all other matters should be included outside of this four hours.

The CHAIRMAN. And matters depending upon that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And all amendments to those would, of course, be included in the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, has no objection to that interpretation, so that independent amendments offered shall be considered for debate after the other matter has been decided.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. With that understanding the paragraph is passed, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The authorization contained in section 2 of the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 for the employment of 500 reserve officers in the aviation and auxiliary service is hereby repealed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the section.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and also by the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING]. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Immediately upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Navy shall begin to reduce the enlisted strength of the Navy, by furlough without pay (and no refunds shall be required of men so furloughed), discharge, or otherwise, under such regulations as he may prescribe, without regard to the provisions of existing law governing discharges, so that the average number of enlisted men, including 2,000 apprentice seamen, shall not exceed 67,000 during the fiscal year 1923: Provided, That enlisted men who have served not less than 25 years shall, unless sooner discharged by sentence of court-martial, be permitted to reenlist and continue serving until they are eligible for retirement after 30 years' service as now provided by law: Provided further, That enlisted men of the Navy who would be eligible under existing law for transfer to the Fleet Naval Reserve after 16 years' service at the expiration of the current enlistment in which serving, or who have completed 16 years' service, may be transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve at any time after the passage of this act in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and shall, upon such transfer, receive the same pay and allowances as now authorized by law for men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve at the expiration of enlistment after 16 years' service: Provided further, That enlisted men of the Navy, who have completed 18 years' service, may be transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve at any time after the passage of this act in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and shall, upon such transfer, receive the same pay and allowances as now authorized by law for men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve after 20 years' service: Provided further, That enlisted men who have served for more than 12 but less than 16 years shall be permitted to reenlist and continue serving, unless sooner discharged by sentence of a court-martial, until they have completed 16 years' service, whereupon they shall, upon their own application, be permitted to transfer to the Fleet Naval Reserve: Provided further, That no enlisted men of the Navy shall be transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve unless they have completed 16 or 20 years' service after the Navy is reduced to the number of enlisted men appropriated for in this act, and in no event after January 1, 1923: Provided further, That the enlisted men who have served less than 12 years found to be in excess of the total number herein appropriated for, after all other deductions have been made by way of retirement or transfer, shall be discharged or furloughed without pay for the convenience of the Government, and all recruiting shall be discontinued until the total number of enlisted men has been reduced to the number herein appropriated for: Provided further, That enlisted men of the Navy who may be separated from the service by furlough or discharge under the requirements of this act shall receive travel allowance now authorized by law for men honorably discharged, and shall, upon reenlistment in the Navy at any time hereafter, receive the then current pay of the rating held at the time of discharge plus all permanent additions to such pay authorized by law at time of reenlistment for service equal to that which they had at time of discharge, and, if allowed to reenlist, shall be required to serve under such reenlistment only for a period equal to the unexpired term of the enlistment in which serving when furloughed or discharged: Provided further, That additional commissioned, warranted, appointed, enlisted, and civilian personnel of the medical department of the Navy, required for the care of patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau in naval hospitals, may be employed in addition to the numbers authorized or appropriated for in this act.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROGERS. It is understood here also that all points of order are reserved on the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] reserves all points of order on the paragraph.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. No amendment can be offered for consideration while the point of order is reserved to the paragraph.

Mr. ROGERS. This is being done by unanimous consent for the convenience of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order will not be insisted upon.

Mr. STAFFORD. When is the point of order going to be pressed?

Mr. ROGERS. After the consideration of the main question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of regular parliamentary procedure we should have the regular order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was not that a part of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood it, it was not modified by the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman intends to have a vote on the motion before the point of order is decided?

Mr. ROGERS. On the main question.

Mr. MONDELL. On that theory, if the gentleman is defeated on the vote, he may be able to brush it all out on the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. That is not worthy of the gentleman. My point is to wholly leave it over and let these questions with the points of order go into the details of the paragraph, awaiting the decision on the main question.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] will kindly leave it to me to say what is worthy of the "gentleman from Wyoming," I will appreciate it.

Mr. ROGERS. I have an opinion and I assert it.

Mr. MONDELL. This House can not vote under the rules with a point of order reserved.

Mr. ROGERS. We have already done it twice within a minute.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is not correct. I raise the point of order that no amendment can be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks after the reservation is made the reservation lies.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit me, then if the Chair would ask the gentleman reserving the point of order whether he withdraws it or insists on it——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts did not insist on it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made no point of order. He has not stated what his point of order was. He simply reserves the right to make a point of order to the paragraph after this matter is determined.

Mr. STAFFORD. The regular order demands that he shall make his point of order or not make it. He has not made it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to report the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I understand the last remark made, it was that the gentleman must make his point of order or withdraw it at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, if regular order is demanded.

Mr. TREADWAY. The regular order having been demanded by the gentleman from Wisconsin, it seems to me the point should be made or withdrawn. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] seems very touchy about it, and we had best have it out.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the "gentleman from Wyoming" is not touchy about anything, but it is absurd beyond words to insist that this House shall debate for four hours and then vote, solidly or otherwise, on a proposition that may thereafter go out on a point of order. If anything of that sort has ever been heard of heretofore in a parliamentary body, it has escaped my notice. It can not be done. There is no rule under which it can be done.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, if there is no rule by which an agreement can be entered into of that nature, there is no reason why the point should not be made. The gentleman from Wyoming offered a very unfortunate insinuation, it seems to me, against my colleague from Massachusetts, that if he was beaten he would take some other method of reaching the end he is seeking.

Mr. MONDELL. If that was not the gentleman's purpose, what had he in mind?

Mr. TREADWAY. It was not his purpose. He had no such purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the point of order?

Mr. TREADWAY. That on page 34, after the proviso, you are putting legislation in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to understand the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts please state his point of order?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that beginning on page 34, line 9, and from there on through the paragraph, the various provisos carry with them legislation which is not proper on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, of course, is not good, because the whole paragraph is designed to reduce the strength of the Navy from 96,500, its present strength, to 67,000. Of course, the machinery set up in the paragraph for effecting that reduction is only collateral to the main proposition of the reduction, and the whole paragraph comes squarely under the Holman rule, making a provision in order which effects a reduction in numbers or salaries of officers or men.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Michigan a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Even if these paragraphs were thrown out on a point of order, if the point of order was upheld and these paragraphs did not appear in the bill, would we not then still be reducing the Navy under either circumstance, whether the number we agree upon here is 67,000 or 86,000? Consequently, to my mind, the Holman rule applies before we reach the provisos at all. These are the provisions that you are endeavoring to insert here, of a legislative character, that will qualify the reduction you are to make under the vote we are to take, either for 86,000 or 67,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the other provisions to which he has made a point of order simply provide the methods and machinery by which the reduction is to be effected. If the machinery were not provided, probably the reduction could not be made.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Take the first proviso, for example:

Provided, That enlisted men who have served not less than 25 years shall, unless sooner discharged by sentence of court-martial, be permitted to reenlist and continue serving until they are eligible for retirement after 30 years' service, as now provided by law.

Wherein does that come under the Holman rule?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Those men are entitled to remain in the Navy and subject to retirement privileges. If that retirement is to be effected prior to the time when they ordinarily could retire, you transfer them from a salary higher to a salary lower, so that it comes under the Holman rule under another theory.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. You reduce the Navy to 67,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In one case we reduce the number, and then of those who are reduced by reason of the reduction of the number you also reduce the pay, so that you make a reduction both ways.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. You do not reduce their pay, but you transfer them to the inactive list. They are a charge on the Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But they get less pay.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. They draw pay, but do not perform any service. That is the point. Here you have men who do not perform service who draw pay. Where is the saving on the Treasury?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It has been held many times that the transfer from the active to the retired list comes under the Holman rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. This identic question was submitted to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the War Department appropriation bill was under consideration, and there the Chair ruled that the collateral matters to carry out the main provision of reductions were in order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman has had great confidence in the Chair heretofore.

Mr. STAFFORD. I not only have great confidence in the Chair, but I feel sure he is upholding the position taken by the chairman at that time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say further, Mr. Chairman, that the enlisted force of the Navy is divided into classes. This reduction can not be made all out of one class, but must come out of the classes proportionately all along the line. These paragraphs are intended to bring about that reduction in each case of enlisted men in the Navy, and the various provisions are for the purpose of effecting that transfer, the change from the active to the inactive list, or whatever the case may be; and the whole matter is predicated primarily on the reduction of the number of men, and, second, on the reduction of pay. They do render service when on the inactive list when called upon to do so. They are at the command of the Government in any time of need.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But it will prevent their reenlistment and continuance in the service. It seems to me that is simply particular legislation not necessarily collateral to the reduction of the Navy referred to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Michigan one more question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes, indeed.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will these provisions be applicable whether the final vote on 67,000 or 86,000 applies?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They will be not only applicable but necessary.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VARE: Amend, on page 34, line 7, by striking out the figures "2,000" and inserting in lieu therefor "6,000," and on page 34, line 8, by striking out the figures "67,000" and inserting in lieu therefor "86,000," making the paragraph read: "Immediately upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Navy shall begin to reduce the enlisted strength of the Navy by furlough without pay (and no refunds shall be required of men so furloughed), discharge, or otherwise, under such regulations as he may prescribe, without regard to provisions of existing law governing discharges, so that the average number of enlisted men, including 6,000 apprentice seamen, shall not exceed 86,000 during the fiscal year 1923"—

And so forth.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I understand that the gentleman's amendment is intended only to change the figures "2,000" to "6,000" and the figures "67,000" to "86,000," and that all the other language connected with the paragraph is untouched.

Mr. VARE. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into a while ago I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] one hour, and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my personal views as a member of the committee that reported this bill, and I trust that in my limited time I may be permitted to do this without interruption.

I very much regret to differ with the majority of my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations in reference to the naval strength provided for in the pending bill. This bill was drafted by a subcommittee of five, consisting of one Member from Michigan, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, one from Minnesota, one from Idaho, one from South Carolina, and one from Alabama. These five States have an aggregate membership in the House of 42. Great States like Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Virginia, each an empire in itself, have had no voice in the preparation of this bill, which presumes to determine the naval policy of this country.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is he not?

Mr. MAGEE. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

The members of the subcommittee contend that they desire to give to the country a Navy in numbers and efficiency authorized by the naval treaty recently ratified by the Senate, and that they have done so in this bill. On the other hand, the Secretary of the Navy, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, and other high officials of the Navy, and prominent members on the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, contend that this bill does not do so. [Applause.] The crucial question is one of fact. We must determine who is right in the contention. All the Members of the House, excepting the five Members comprising this subcommittee, can be regarded as jurors. The country will look to us to give a correct verdict.

I do not consider that I am competent to determine the naval policy of the country, and yet I consider that I am just as competent to determine such policy as the other 30 members of the Committee on Appropriations who had no part in the drafting of this bill. However, I do consider myself entirely competent to act as a juror in this case, and to render a true verdict in the public interest upon all the facts presented for our consideration.

It is conceded that we are entitled to 18 capital ships under the naval treaty. The question at issue is the number of enlisted men required on shore and to man those ships and the necessary auxiliary vessels thereto for action in defense of our country upon reasonable notice. The Secretary of the Navy says that it will require materially more men than this bill provides for. The members of the subcommittee say that 67,000 will be sufficient. What is the basis upon which the subcommittee fixes this number? They say in their report that they have accepted the figures given to the Naval Committee by the Navy Department as of February 1, 1922. This statement is a confession of the abject weakness of their case, because those ships and the necessary auxiliary vessels were not ready and equipped for action on February 1.

The Secretary of the Navy, as I understand, contends that on February 1 there were only sufficient men on those ships to man and equip for action 13 capital ships. It is apparent that if we are to have 18 capital ships and maintain them ready for action additional men must be provided for in the pending bill.

The Committee on Appropriations, under the rules of the House, is an appropriating committee. It is not a legislating committee. This committee makes appropriations when appropriations have been duly authorized by the various committees of the House vested with legislative power. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I feel it my duty to protest against the Committee on Appropriations attempting to determine the naval policy of the country through limitation in appropriations. There is a fundamental principle involved here that can not be ignored. Such an attempt is, in my judgment, a direct assault upon the Budget system and, if persisted in, will ultimately end in the House taking away the great powers now vested in the committee [applause] which, when properly exercised, make this great committee the watchdog of the Treasury and the foundation rock of the present budgetary system that means the saving annually of hundreds of millions of dollars to the taxpayers of the country.

Further, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I can not bring myself to the point of striking a blow at the American Navy, which is the pride of the Republic. It is, in my judgment, the greatest asset that the Nation possesses. It is our first line of defense, and, if properly provided for, will prove to be our secure line of defense. The traditions of the Navy are marvelous. It has never failed the country in any crisis that has ever arisen. Its officers and men have exhibited the greatest daring and courage on every occasion when called upon to defend their country. It has never been whipped upon any lake nor upon any sea [applause], and I hope that in the years to come, upon the seven seas, in peace and in war, wherever an American warship may be, the flag will still wave. [Applause.]

I think that a Republican President is entitled to the support of a Republican House. [Applause.] The President was responsible for the International Conference on Limitation of Armaments, and I assume that he knows what he wants. He is the greatest asset that the Republican Party has. [Applause.] The country is overwhelmingly with him and will not tolerate an attempt to nullify his great work. [Applause.] Some of my Republican friends may refuse to sustain the President on a matter arising out of one of the greatest conferences in the history of the world, but I predict that such refusal will not bring you any glory nor enhance your political prestige. Don't fool yourselves. The public will know that a vote for the enlisted personnel provided for in this bill is a vote against the President, a vote against the prestige and security of this country, a vote to make America probably a third-rate naval power. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH].

The CHAIRMAN. In order that the procedure may be understood, the Chair will recognize the supporters of the amendment of the Republican side and the opposers of the amendment on the Republican side, the supporters of the amendment on the Democratic side and the opposers of the amendment on the Democratic side.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be better if the Chair will simply recognize whomsoever is yielded to. We have control of the time on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the right of recognition.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know; but nobody gets the floor except by having time yielded to him by one of four men. The Chair can not determine in what order the speeches shall be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the right to determine and should determine the proper order of debate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How could the Chair determine the order of debate? He does not know what the order of the debate is to be, except as it is suggested by those who have control of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The issue in this case is a simple one. There are some gentlemen on one side that have one hour and some on the other that have one hour.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Can not the Chair trust the men who have charge of the time as to the order in which the opponents and proponents shall proceed? I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], and why should the Chair fail to recognize him?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is recognizing the gentleman. But the Chair announces that he will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] next.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want to yield to anybody?

The CHAIRMAN. That is at the option of the gentleman from Massachusetts. After that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina. The Chair makes that announcement in fairness to all.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I want to be in perfect harmony with the Chair, but when the time is in the control of four men who have among themselves reached an agreement as to the order in which the speeches shall be made, I can not understand how the Chair can arrogate the right of determining the order in which the speeches shall be made.

The CHAIRMAN. If gentlemen desire any other arrangement, the Chair will carry it out.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do. I desire to have the Chair recognize the men who are given time by the Members having charge of the time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no trouble about it. What the gentleman from Michigan means is that if the gentlemen on the floor arrange among themselves the order, the Chair will recognize them as they are yielded time.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; the Chair simply made the announcement as to what he would do without any other arrangement.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, it can not be disputed that this bill just as it is written calls for an expenditure of a million dollars a day on the Navy alone for the next fiscal year. If we adopt the amendment proposed, we will add to this amount $60,000,000 annually to be paid by a tax-paying public that is already staggering and groaning beneath a weight of taxation never before known. These figures are not mere conjectures but are established beyond dispute. When the people of this country learn these facts they will not say that we have been niggardly with the Navy. The expenditure of a million dollars a day on the Navy during times of peace, following on the heels of the disarmament conference, is not a small thing, and we should stop to consider well before adding to this amount.

We should not permit ourselves to be swept off our feet or lose our own poise and power of reasoning on account of the powerful influences at work here in Washington and elsewhere to save men of high places jobs that were scrapped by the disarmament conference. I sympathize with them, of course, but my duty to the people lies plain before me.

Throughout this entire debate the question has been repeatedly asked as to whom we should follow in the many conflicting recommendations which have been made to us upon this subject. Answering for myself, I have, at the cost of days of hard labor delving into brain-racking figures and statistics which have caused me sleepless nights, carefully investigated the facts for myself. I have weighed all that has been said by the Secretary of the Navy, Navy experts, committee in charge of the bill, the 1,086 pages of testimony contained in the hearings, the debates on the floor, and what everyone has had to say upon the subject, and I now expect to keep faith with my conscience by following my own judgment thus formed, which brings me to the inevitable conclusion that I should vote against the amendment proposing to add $60,000,000 annual expense to this bill, and which I will attempt to show you is wholly unnecessary. [Applause.]

Some people fail to realize that we are to-day confronted with a new condition of affairs, so far as relates to our Navy. The disarmament conference has just been concluded, the treaties ratified by our Senate, and for the first time in our history we have a fixed standard or yardstick by which the size of our Navy is to be measured. The people of this country praised God when it was heralded to the world what the disarmament conference had accomplished. Fathers and mothers' hearts were gladdened when it became known that the five great powers of the earth had entered into a compact which made war next to impossible during the life of the compact—a period of 10 years. The struggling taxpayer lifted his head with a wan smile in the thought that at last a means had been found to lessen the awful burden he was carrying. Our own beloved President electrified the world with his now historic statement, which I repeat verbatim:

> Out of the cataclysm of the World War came new fellowships, new convictions, new aspirations. It is ours to make the most of them. A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity, which has been shocked by wanton destruction, would minimize the agencies of that destruction. Contemplating the measureless cost of war and the continuing burden of armament, all thoughtful peoples wish for real limitation of armament and would like war outlawed. In soberest reflection the world's hundreds of millions who pay in peace and die in war wish their statesmen to turn the expenditures for destruction into means of construction, aimed at a higher state for those who live and follow after.

I plead with you that we keep faith with the country, or else this declaration by the President will become mere empty words of mockery. [Applause.]

I stand for an adequate Navy under the peace treaty, but not for a single man or a single dollar more. In my opinion, the future peace of the world depends largely upon the good faith shown in our observance of the treaties and can best be obtained if the United States and the other powers will faithfully stay within the boundaries established by the 5-5-3 ratio of naval strength. If the United States violates the spirit and intent of this ratio—if we fudge over the line and attempt to build up our Navy to a greater strength than that laid down by the plain terms of the treaty, such an act would be an evidence of bad faith upon our part and calculated to cause the other nations to take similar action, and it would soon again become a mad race of the world for naval supremacy.

The question of the correct size of our Navy is no longer an open one or difficult of determination if we will but take the time to go into the facts, and we are not required to rely upon expert testimony from naval officers, but merely to exercise our own good common sense and apply sober judgment to the facts with which we have to deal to reach an intelligent conclusion. I have tried many lawsuits, and when I was compelled to rely upon expert testimony that run counter and contrary to the physical facts of a case the expert testimony had to give way to the established facts, and here are the established facts with reference to the size that our Navy should and must be.

The disarmament conference in fixing the relative naval strength of the three great naval powers of the world at the ratio of 5-5-3 left no room for doubt or uncertainty. They said in plain terms that the size of the navies of Great Britain and the United States as compared with that of Japan should be at the ratio of what five is to three. They did not gauge this ratio or relative strength by numbers of men or by dollars and cents, but, leaving no room for doubt, declared that the navies of Great Britain and the United States were to consist of 18 capital battleships each, with all necessary auxiliary warcraft to accompany that number of capital battleships, while that of Japan was fixed at 10 capital battleships, with like necessary auxiliaries. The conference by this action declared the strength of the Navy to consist of the fighting ships afloat and not the number of men in the offices or on the streets of Washington. This bill proposes to make our Navy exactly what the disarmament conference said that it should be—no more, no less. Figures prove themselves, and here they are: The bill provides that the fleet of the Navy of the United States and its necessary auxiliaries and complement of men shall be made up by 18 capital battleships, with a total complement of men on board of 18,259; 11 cruisers, with 4,248 men on board; 103 destroyers, with 9,579 men; 84 submarines, 2,520 men; 6 destroyer tenders, 2,551 men; 7 submarine tenders, 1,833 men; 2 aircraft carriers, 502 men; 12 mine layers, 1,574 men; 10 mine sweepers, 498 men; 2 repair ships, 727 men; 3 storeships, 612 men; 14 fuel ships, 1,568 men; 2 ammunition ships, 354 men; 2 hospital ships, 629 men; 7 cargo ships, 612 men; 3 transports, 822 men; 9 gunboats, 759 men; 6 yachts and patrol vessels, 545 men; 8 fleet tugs, 338 men; 10 fleet towing vessels, 450 men; 1 survey ship, 137 men; miscellaneous, 7 with 375 men; total number of craft, 327; of men aboard, 49,492. The Secretary of the Navy nor anyone else does not contend that a single additional man is required on board either of these ships.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I yield for a question.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. The argument which the gentleman is making is very convincing. How does the gentleman arrive at the number of auxiliary craft and men necessary to accompany the 18 capital battleships prescribed by the disarmament conference?

Mr. ROACH. From the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy and Navy experts given before the committee in charge of the bill and contained in the printed hearings. I will furthermore say to the gentleman that the number of auxiliary craft, both as to men aboard and ships necessary, which I have just given has been fixed by the Navy Department itself as being the necessary craft and men to accompany the 18 capital battleships prescribed by the treaty. I also wish to emphasize the fact right here that the number of men on board these same ships on February 1, 1922, was 2,000 men less than the numbers which I have given, but the experts were not willing to accept the actual number of men on these ships on that date, so the committee allowed the number of men on each ship that the Navy Department said was necessary, and as a result of their liberality this bill actually provides 2,000 more men than was on board these selfsame ships on February 1 last. There is no dispute and can be no dispute about that. Good measure has been given in every instance where the least doubt existed. I also have here the names of the battleships, submarines, destroyers, gunboats, and other warcraft that I have just mentioned, which will make our future treaty Navy, including the President's yacht, Mayflower, with 160 men on board, and a half dozen other yachts that do not add any strength to the Navy. I will not take the time to read the list. They are thrown in for good measure.

Now, then, these undisputed facts show that the floating Navy of the United States, which is really the test of the naval strength, can be maintained exactly up to the standard called for by the peace conference—with 49,492 men, ship for ship, with every man on board asked for by the Navy Department.

NAVY ON SHORE.

Remember that this bill provides for 67,000 men, which, after placing 49,492 on ships, gives us 17,508 men on shore. It should not be difficult to determine whether this is sufficient number or not. We certainly do not want more on shore since the ratification of the treaties than we had before, and the hearings before the committee show that on February 1, 1922, 12,633 men were on shore, distributed as follows:

Receiving ships and barracks	1,945
Navy yards and stations	1,359
Training stations and trade schools	2,032
Hospitals	1,978
Prisons	23
Communications	1,228
Aviation	2,754
Ammunition depots	605
Recruiting	709
Total	12,633

Using that number as a basis—without reducing a single man—you can see by deducting this number from the 17,508 would leave a surplus of 4,875 men on shore. The evidence before the committee shows most conclusive that there are only jobs for 9,965 of these men on shore, which number would be sufficient to fill every shore station, so that the 17,508 men which we allow in this bill for shore duty fills every post on shore and gives a surplus of 7,543 men to draw from. In addition to these actual figures, which no one dares to dispute, it should be remembered that we have thousands upon thousands of efficient Navy men and seamen throughout the United States and hundreds of young men graduating out of the Naval Academy every year who could on a moment's notice be called into the service of the Navy in the event of war. Where are we going to put an extra 20,000 more? What are they for? Where is the proof of the necessity for them? This is no time to accept the opinion of anyone unless they back up their opinion with facts to prove the wisdom of their judgment.

Are we so rich that we wish to add 20,000 men to this shore list who will have absolutely nothing to do but parade the streets of the city of Washington at the expense of the taxpayers of this country? That is exactly what we do if we increase the number of men in this bill a single man. We are giving the Navy every single man that they say is necessary on the battleships and warcraft constituting the treaty Navy, and if the Secretary of the Navy lays up some of the fighting craft and places the men in offices to ornament the mahogany furniture who is to blame? The Secretary of the Navy is now operating this same number of warcraft with 2,000 men less than we are giving him in this bill. No one has yet pointed out a single reason why he can not continue to do so.

Oh, I will tell you the trouble. The peace conference scrapped a large number of battleships, 200 destroyers, and hundreds of other smaller warcraft, many of which added no real strength to our Navy. Each one of these battleships carried an average complement of 1,014 officers and men, the destroyers an average of 87 officers and men, with a less number on each of the smaller craft, but all of whom will be out of jobs when the treaty Navy is established, and this proposed amendment is simply an effort to put 20,000 of these unemployed on the pay roll with nothing for them to do. Are we going to vote to do it? I stand for an efficient Navy, second to none in the world; for the treaty Navy—this bill gives us all of that. Why should we increase it? If we increase the number of men 20,000, we must increase ships, fuel, and every other expensive item in proportion. Do you know what this means? Let me right here give you exact figures. The fuel bill for destroyers alone during the first three months of the present fiscal year was approximately 980,882 barrels of fuel oil, costing an average of $2.56 per barrel, a total cost in this item alone for three months of $2,511,822, which is at the rate of $10,047,288 per annum, and it should be remembered that prior to the war the entire Navy fuel bill never exceeded $5,631,000 per annum. It is high time to stop some of this expense. If we carry out the intent of the peace conference, 200 of our 390 destroyers must be scrapped. Only a few days ago some of you gentlemen vigorously objected to expending $42,000,000 for improvement of all the great rivers and harbors of the country, others recently said we were so poor that we could not grant a bonus to the ex-service men, while yet others are unwilling even now to pay a pension to men who fought in the Civil War because you say we have not the money, yet you would now add $60,000,000 annually to this bill without batting an eye when the proof shows such expenditure to be unnecessary. [Applause.]

I would do violence to my own judgment and betray the confidence of the people that sent me here if I voted for this proposed increase. Were I not sure of my ground I would yield to the pressure of the almost irresistible and powerful influences at work to secure this increase. It is all right to follow some one else if you do not know the facts, but I have not quit thinking for myself, and I conceive it to be my duty as a Member of the greatest legislative body in the world to inform myself of the facts, which I have attempted to do, and I intend to vote to sustain Governor KELLEY and the majority of the committee, who have taken no one's word but gone into the facts for themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there have been some splendid arguments made during this week in favor of both contentions. Some one—I believe it was the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]—said a few moments ago that many of us would have to act as jurors and decide upon these arguments which have been made. That is true. A great many of us came into the discussion with minds perfectly impartial on the issues involved and with determination to do that which is best for the Nation and best for the Navy. It is for those of us to decide what we shall do and how we shall vote. If we make a mistake and vote for too large a Navy and too large a personnel, then we have made a mistake in voting only for an expenditure of too much money. And yet that money will not be wasted, because it will be spent for the training of young men, it will be spent for equipping the Navy up to a standard which would be valuable in any war that may come; but suppose we made a mistake on the other side; suppose we make a mistake and vote for too small a personnel. Then we do not make a mistake only in the expenditure of money but we make a mistake against our Government, we make a mistake which means inefficiency, we make a mistake which means our Navy is not the Navy it should be under the treaty recently made at the disarmament conference.

For my part, I am going to cast my vote in favor of the larger personnel. [Applause.] Why do I do that? I do it because the Department of the Navy says we need the larger personnel. The President says so; every naval export says this; every man who is very familiar with naval affairs says that we need the larger number. And gentlemen, I am quite sure that if we had some of the witnesses that are dead and gone they would likewise say we need the larger personnel. What would Schley say, what would Sampson say, what would Dewey say if he were alive, what would the other naval heroes of the past say? What would Theodore Roosevelt say if he was still living and was asked on which side he would cast his vote? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how are those of us who expected to get information from this debate to vote? On one side are men true and tried producing powerful argument in favor of the bill as written. On the other side are men equally as good showing almost, if not conclusively, that the increase is absolutely necessary. On one side is a majority of the subcommittee charged with the responsibility of bringing out a proper bill and giving it to the House along with sufficient reasons for the faith that is within them. On the other hand is a minority of that committee, many, if not all, of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, as well as the Secretary of State, Hon. Charles E. Hughes, one of the commission on the part of the United States to the disarmament conference; and that splendid gentleman, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President of the United States.

I again repeat, How are those of us who have not had the opportunity to study the problem in detail and who are now with all earnestness seeking information to vote? Shall we heed here and now the plea of economy and vote for the lesser number of men, or shall we support a larger personnel, as sought by the Navy Department, and vote for the larger number?

Mr. Chairman, I know there is a chance to make a mistake in this matter, as there is in all measures which come up for consideration here. I feel this way about the matter: If we make a mistake and vote for too large a personnel for the Navy, we make a harmless error, except that we cause an expenditure of too much money. If we vote for too small a personnel for the Navy, we make an error that would give us a Navy less than authorized by the conference, a Navy inferior to that of England and almost, if not, inferior to that of Japan, and a Navy not adequate for our protection. On one hand we may lose money, on the other we may lose a Navy which would probably keep us out of war and which would win for us if war should come. On one hand we may lose a few million dollars, on the other hand we strongly chance to lose all. How shall we vote? It is far better to vote for millions for the Navy when those millions are not needed than to fail to appropriate one dollar when that dollar is needed to make our Navy of sufficient strength to insure peace to our Nation, whether that peace be a continuation of the peace we now enjoy or the result of victory in a war thrust upon us.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, it would be infinitely better for us to appropriate every dollar it is possible for this Nation to raise rather than fail in the provision of any amount needed to make our Navy of sufficient strength to absolutely guarantee that "this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people" shall not perish from the earth.

For my part, Mr. Chairman, I am going to resolve my doubts in favor of safety and of the larger personnel. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill has been more exhaustively debated than any other piece of legislation which has come before the House since I became a Member, and there is little that I can add, but I think that by asking ourselves two fundamental underlying questions we can arrive at a very definite decision as to what our action should be in the matter. Since we are the elected Representatives of the people, the first question that the Members of this House should ask themselves, because it is the first question which these same people of the United States will ask themselves, is whether or not the other two parties to this agreement, Great Britain and Japan, will maintain under this treaty arrangement any navy other than one which is fully efficient. To my mind the answer of the American people and the answer of the Representatives in this House will be that they will not; the other question is, Can we afford to maintain a Navy under the 5-5-3 agreement that is any less efficient, under the agreement, than any other of the powers involved? The answer is a categoric "No."

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], in a query which he made on the floor the other day, submitted, to my mind, another question which the proponents of this lame-duck treaty Navy have failed to answer satisfactorily. In the debate he asked the Member who was then speaking, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], I think, what the American people would have said to the American conferees if at any time they had attempted to place our ratio lower than the ratio of any other one of the conferees engaged in the conference. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] replied that they would undoubtedly have been swept from power, but that question has remained unanswered by the opposition, however. We know and they know that the answer would have been, as Mr. ROGERS stated, "We know what they have done." Public opinion would have risen up in its might and would have swept the conferees from out of the conference hall by a wave of protest which would have rocked the Nation. [Applause.]

My distinguished comrade and colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who was good enough to admit to the House that he is not a candidate for the Senate, as are many others of the leading proponents of this bill—Mr. KELLEY, Mr. MONDELL, and Mr. ARENTZ—yesterday made a statement on the floor of this House to the effect that he could offset the 50,000 legionnaires in California who have, through their department commander, telegraphed requesting the California delegation to stand for a personnel of 86,000, with something like 100,000 legionnaires from Mississippi. Now, my friend from Mississippi is frank and always sincere, and I am sure he believes what he stated yesterday on the floor of the House, but to show you how inaccurate these proponents are, even when they are not avowed candidates for the Senate [laughter], I want to read a few statistics relating to Mississippi. Mississippi in the World War furnished for the Army 62,859 men, and for the Navy 4,898, and the Marine Corps 553, making a total of 68,310. She had 4,443 members of the American Legion on October 15, 1921. Where does the gentleman from Mississippi propose to get his 100,000 legionnaires, which is nearly 32,000 men more than she had in uniform during the World War? By what gift of imagination or fancy does the gentleman conjure up 100,000 legionnaires where only 4,443 grew before? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I am sorry, but I have not the time. I hope that gentlemen of the House will bear in mind that the statements which have been made on this floor by the 67,000 personnel proponents are just as generally inaccurate on this question. Now, if the gentleman from Mississippi had been a candidate for the Senate—and I hope he will be some day—after this bill is passed he would probably have said 200,000 instead of 100,000. [Laughter.] That is the way it seems to affect them.

There is no question where we should stand on this bill. We should stand with the Secretary of the Navy, with the Secretary of State, with the President, if you please, and the naval experts who advised the American conferees at the Limitation of Armament Conference. With all due respect to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], the chairman of the subcommittee reporting out this bill, I say that for my part I shall take my stand with the great leaders in this great movement for the limitation of armament, and shall vote for a personnel of 86,000, as proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] [applause], and as recommended by that greatest of all living Americans, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. In reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] I desire to say that when I stated on yesterday that I might offset his 50,000 ex-service men in California who, he says, are in favor of the larger personnel for the Navy with something like 100,000 from Mississippi who are in favor of economy in naval and military expenditures I did not state that all those men from Mississippi were members of the American Legion. An ex-service man has the same right and the same voice in public affairs, whether he is a member of the American Legion or not. [Applause.]

He tells you that Mississippi furnished only about 68,000 men during the war and that therefore my figures were exaggerated; but he overlooks the fact that thousands of ex-service men have moved to Mississippi since the war closed.

We had two training camps in that great State—Camp Shelby, at Hattiesburg, and Payne Field, at West Point—and when those boys from other sections of the country came there and saw what a wonderful country we have, what great prospects are there for the future, and what good-looking girls Mississippi affords, they were simply charmed [laughter], and when the war closed those boys flocked back to Mississippi by the thousands. [Laughter.]

And if my distinguished friend from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] had had the privilege, the pleasure, and the honor of training in Mississippi for the gallant services which he rendered overseas, especially if he had been a single man, no doubt to-day, instead of wasting his time trying to convince this House on the proposition for which he stands or of tantalizing himself with the prospects of going to the Senate, he would be down there in Mississippi cultivating his cotton fields or mowing his alfalfa and singing "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] I have yet failed to hear an argument on this floor that to my mind satisfactorily refutes the figures and arguments given us in the majority report of the committee. Gentlemen insist still that we must accept the views of the naval experts, of the admirals, and of the heads of the Navy Department. I commend the suggestion rather of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]. We are the jury; it is our duty to hear the evidence from both sides and judge seriously whether we really can afford to cut down our Navy personnel and naval expenses as proposed in this bill. I submit that other men have spoken besides the naval officers, and have spoken with reason more cogent and authority more firmly established by facts, figures, and precedent. Again I am irresistibly impelled to tell a story. A gentleman sat in a railway train and held on his lap a tightly closed little wooden box perforated with small air holes, as if it contained something alive. A gentleman sitting by looked curiously at the box, and the conversation ran somewhat thusly:

"What is that in your box?"

"Why, it is a kill-o-ma-dee."

"A kill-o-ma-dee? What is that?"

"Oh, it's a little animal about as big as a rabbit."

"How does it live?"

"It burrows in the ground, like a prairie dog."

"What does it eat?"

"It eats snakes; nothing but snakes."

"That's funny. How do you get enough snakes to feed it?"

"Why, I am a hard-drinking man and I have no trouble finding snakes. I find them all around almost every day."

"But they are imaginary snakes."

"Yes; but that makes no difference. This is an imaginary kill-o-ma-dee."

It seems to me that the advocates of a large Army and Navy are seeing snakes. They are backing their demands with shrieks of fear inspired by imaginary dangers to our national and domestic safety. Especially do some of our friends quake at the name of Japan, which they wave as a red danger signal, and seem surprised that any of us should fail to stop and tremble.

I frankly believe that is all bunk. Japan, struggling under her crushing debt and scarcely able to feed her congested population on her small area of productive soil, Japan who needs our friendship ten times more than we need hers—can it be that she wants to pick a fight with America? No, gentlemen, war with America is about the last thing the real Japan wants. Of course, that nation has its militaristic clique, supported by their jingo press. What nation has not? But these do not represent the true spirit of Japan. This is not only the conclusion of reason; it is the testimony of intelligent and patriotic Americans who have opportunity to know, both of those who have visited Japan to study this question and those who have lived in Japan for years.

I feel an American pride in our Navy. I appreciate its importance, as long as we need it, and I am not yet ready to do away with it entirely. I realize the necessity of maintaining it at a reasonable strength. The question is simply as to what constitutes a reasonable strength. That can not be answered offhand. It requires investigation, the production and consideration of evidence. Our committee have given weeks and even months to such an investigation, considering evidence on all sides of the question, and have brought before us the facts as they have found them, with their recommendations based thereon. These facts which they have brought do not seem to me to have been successfully contested, and hence I believe that the recommendation of the majority of the committee for a Navy of 67,000 men should stand, and that this House would not be doing a consistent thing, but would be doing an unwise and an extravagant thing, to increase the figure to 86,000.

I differ from the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] when he says that our Navy is our greatest asset. The greatest asset of any Government, in time of war even more than in time of peace, is a loyal, patriotic, satisfied, thrifty, and intelligent people.

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> When wealth accumulates and men decay;
> Princes and lords may flourish or may fade,
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
> But a bold peasantry, a country's pride,
> When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

The wisest thing, the most righteous thing, and the most vital thing for us to do as the legislative body of a great nation is to pass such laws and to so direct public affairs as to help the interests, encourage the hearts, and inspire the confidence of the plain people. Notice, please, I do not say the common people—certainly I do not say the lower classes of the people—they are the higher classes if measured by their common sense, their fundamental principles of righteousness, or their importance in our economic, social, or political systems. The foundation of a building may be its lower part, but it is also its most solid part. And the great population that forms the basal part of our civilization is also its most constructive and productive part.

These are the people who work in the shops and the stores, on the farms, on the railroads, in the mines and the factories, on the roads and the bridges—everywhere that honest bread is to be won by honest toil. They far surpass the rest of our population in numbers. "God must have loved them, or he would not have made so many of them." It is not improper to refer to them as the "working class." That they are, and in that is their pride and their strength. If our democracy stands for anything it stands for the principle that no honest labor is menial and for the fact that the man who is poor enough to have to work is, after all, deserving of the most consideration.

The larger part of this great working class, which forms the solid foundation of our institutions, and I venture to say the more virile and the more virtuous part, live on the farms and in the "old home towns." They furnish the strongest and most effective recruits to the great business and professional ranks of our cities. So much is this true and so generally is it recognized that these two phrases, "the old home town" and "down on the farm," have come to be universally associated with our concept of successful men.

A great man in Chicago said to me:

> LOWREY, I will tell you, if it were not for the good, pure, red blood that flows into our cities from the country districts, our cities would rot.

To me some gentlemen seem to consider our Army and Navy as an end sufficient unto itself. Such argument can readily be reduced to an absurdity. They are not an end but a means. They are valuable only as they are really needed for defense. Every cent expended on them beyond that is pure waste. Not only is it waste but the very existence of armaments greater than necessary is a menace and an evil, social, political, and economic. It is a dissipation of man power and money power that should be turned into production and is an encouragement of dangerous autocracy.

Understand again, please, this is not an attack on adequate defense. But gentlemen seem to me to have established clearly that a Navy of 67,000 men is all that is necessary and proper under the terms arrived at by the arms conference. The addition of 19,000 men above that at a cost of $40,000,000 is the thing that seems to me wrong and dangerous. For the people who will feel this burden most are at the very basis of our political and economic system. They are the large majority of our population, and they are the element of our population which most need financial protection and relief. When we legislate for the improvement of the condition of the plain people we are discharging our highest official duty; when we needlessly increase their burdens, we descend to the depths of official iniquity. When we so legislate as to win their confidence and loyal support to the Federal Government, we are building the strongest possible wall of protection around the Republic; when we shake their confidence and shock their loyalty, we are battering the walls which we already have.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have followed the course of this debate from the beginning, and I am thoroughly convinced that the bill provides a sufficient personnel, and I believe, without qualification, knowing the valor of American seamen, that with that personnel we will have the most efficient navy in the world.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MCARTHUR] says he wants a navy equal or superior to that of any other country in the world. Well, we can not have a navy in ships and tonnage superior to that of any other country. The treaty forbids it, and I am thoroughly convinced from the statements of the chairman and the majority report that the personnel provided for in the bill gives us a navy fully equal and, I believe, superior to any navy in the world. I believe also that a large majority of the House believe as I do upon this subject. It may be that on account of the letter of the President addressed to Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio, that Members may vote for the larger number. I know the power of the President is great, his influence is great, but I believe his best friends are those who shall seek by their vote to carry out the spirit of the Conference for the Limitation of Armament; and, further, since I believe that the number of personnel provided in the bill is sufficient, I could not for any reason justify my course in adding $40,000,000 unnecessary tax to the burdens of an already overburdened public. Will not the American Congress, if it shall vote for the larger Navy, place ourselves in a position of discrediting the sincerity of the other signatories to the four-power treaty? Will we not place ourselves in a position of those who take counsel of their fear rather than of their confidence? Is it becoming and appropriate that at this particular juncture, when all progressive nations in the world are longing for the guaranties of peace, that this Nation, which has inspired and initiated the great world conference, shall now by our action proclaim our distrust for its final results?

Much of the argument for a larger personnel revolves around the contingency of war, the imminence of war, not the possibility but the probability of war, and yet no portentous cloud is seen, and unless the nations with whom we are treating and the only nations who are in position to do us harm are utterly recreant to all the instincts of honor and faith there is no danger of war. Further, if there is any one thing that has been more strongly impressed upon my mind than any other since I have been in Congress it is that each and every head of a department of government is religiously impregnated with the idea that his particular department of the Government is paramount, superior, and more important than all others. And that this is true of the Navy Department there is no doubt in my mind, nor do I think in the mind of any Member of Congress. The Congress should act dispassionately, free from the extravagant views of the Secretary of the Navy. We should not lose sight of the enormous pressure brought to bear upon committees and who seek to influence Members of Congress to protect the interests of great Government establishments, such as navy yards, ordnance manufactories, and especially the interests of naval officers, who are naturally loath to reliquish their jobs; but my duty is to the taxpayer of the Nation upon whose shoulders now rest heavy burdens and grievous to be borne.

Closing as I began, I know the valor of American seamen, and with ships of equal tonnage and equal gun power, whether we shall have a few dozen more or less upon a ship, we have yet the greatest Navy in the world, and believing this I would feel that I were guilty of dereliction to the best interests of the people of this great Nation, and especially the people of my own district, whom it is my highest ambition to represent faithfully, if I should cast my vote to add 19,000 men to an already sufficient Navy and thereby add $40,000,000 to their taxes.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I can not consistently, with my conception of my duty, consider the argument of those who have flaunted the specter of war, cast my vote for this increase, but I shall cheerfully and conscientiously cast it to sustain the report of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, when I vote on the bill now before Congress proposing the drastic cut in the enlisted strength of the Navy from the present figure of approximately 96,000 men to 67,000, I propose to follow the leadership of our great President, Warren G. Harding, the Commander in Chief of the naval and military forces of the United States, who personally informed the members of the Naval Affairs Committee that he thought the present strength of the Navy should be fixed at 86,000.

Since the President has confirmed this in his letter to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], I do not fear that I am violating any confidence reposed in that committee by making such a statement.

President Harding is backed up in his view of the situation by Secretary Hughes and Secretary Denby, and while some Members of the House of Representatives do not consider those gentlemen as being naval experts, I can fortunately furnish some information on the subject which you will all agree comes from a man competent to judge the situation.

I refer to Admiral Henry B. Wilson, of Camden, N. J., affectionately known to the "gobs" in the service as "Tug" Wilson. Admiral Wilson comes from my home town and I have known him from boyhood. He grew up with the Navy from midshipman to admiral, and during the great World War was stationed at Brest in charge of the transportation of our millions of soldiers to the battle fields of France. How well he accomplished that great feat is now a matter of history, and his native town and State are exceedingly proud of the renown that he has brought them. Later he commanded the great Atlantic Fleet, and while serving in that capacity did me the great honor of making a special trip to Camden to vote for my election to Congress, the first ballot he had been able to cast in 20 years, owing to his continuous service on the sea for his country. At present he is spending the evening of his life in command of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, training future captains and admirals to take his place and the places of others when their time comes for retirement. Surely my colleagues will not claim that Admiral Wilson is not an expert, fully qualified in every way to express the needs of the Navy.

This is what he has to say in a recent letter to me, in which he gave me permission to publish his views on the question now pending:

MY DEAR MR. PATTERSON: As you well know, these are parlous times for the Navy, to which service I have been attached all my life. Naturally, I am much distressed over the way things appear to be going, and as a friend of mine and my Congressman I appeal to you to help the service of which I am so proud, to keep the drastic legislation which has been proposed from being enacted.

I can assure you, PATTERSON, as a friend, that it will be disastrous, in my opinion, to reduce the number of officers we have at the present time. There are not too many as conditions are to-day. If later other nations honestly reduce, or are willing to reduce, then, of course, I would be in no way against meeting their move. It takes time to make officers. As for the men, I can understand that some reduction can be made without much harm. If you can stand by the commissioned personnel, as I hope you will, I know that you will be doing good work as an American, and you will be more than pleasing one of your constituents, who holds you in high esteem.

I appreciate your stand in voting for a decrease in the Navy to not less than 86,000. All of us who know the Navy feel that it would be a national disaster to reduce the Navy without regard to its efficiency. I can not say more than the press has been saying this week and I agree with much, practically all, in fact, that they have said. The press understands, much as we do, that an efficient Navy is vital. No doubt you have read Mahan's "Influence of Sea Power on History." If you have not, it makes interesting reading. Mahan shows conclusively that there never has been a successful power—that is, successful for any length of time—without control of the sea.

I am glad that the New Jersey delegation is standing behind the Navy. I am sure they are making no mistake so far as the good of the country is concerned, and I feel equally sure that their constituents will agree with them. It is too bad that Mr. HUTCHINSON is holding out, but nine for and one against is a pretty good average for the old State. (Since then Mr. HUTCHINSON has informed me he stands for an enlisted personnel of 86,000.)

As a matter of fact, there is a greater menace in the Butler bill than the 67,000 men proposed by the Appropriations Committee. That menace is the provision for reducing the authorized strength. A reduction in the authorized strength will cause a corresponding reduction in officers, as provided by the bill, and will unfortunately prevent any increase in the Navy in view of any impending trouble without legislative action. When the situation is internationally delicate, legislation for increasing the armed forces is always looked upon with disfavor, as it is possible that such legislation will be looked upon by a prospective enemy as an overt act. To my mind it would be so much better to let the authorized strength stand and reduce the Navy through the Appropriations Committee to 96,000, in order that the President's hands may not be tied in case it is necessary to fill up to capacity suddenly.

The unfortunate part of the whole situation is the unrest in the service, which is inevitable when none of the personnel know just where they stand. A commission in either the Army or the Navy has always been considered more or less of a permanent proposition so long as efficient service was given. With the sword constantly hanging over their heads, officers and prospective officers will look with hesitancy upon a naval career. As you know, the pay is low compared to what a man of Naval Academy education ought to be able to earn in civil life. This low pay has been compensated by the assurance of a permanent position and by the honor and pride of service. Public harping against the naval personnel can not but make the younger officers wonder if it is really worth while, and, of course, when they get in this state of mind it is not unreasonable to expect that they will not give their best. All that we ask is an adequately paid Navy, as good as any navy in the world. The arms conference was a success largely because we had something tangible to give, and we gave it willingly. Were there to be another conference, where we had nothing to give, you would find our position not unlike that of China in the last conference. Look at Japan for a moment. Less than half a century ago they were virtually an unknown, unimportant people, comparatively. They spent huge sums on their national defense. What was the result? In a period of a few years they have reached the top. The last conference has, in fact, made them one of the three great powers. They had might on their side—China had right. Who got the most out of the conference? Japan has in recent years acquired control of many acres of land and they acquired this because they had power. I am not arguing that we ought to be a military Nation. I do not believe in that, but I do believe that if we are to be heard in the councils of the world we must have adequate national defense.

You may quote me as much as you like. I have spent my whole life in the Navy. I know the Navy inside and out. I know that what I am saying is right and I know that any student of world's history will admit that this is right. I appreciate the need for economy and I am heartily in accord with any plan for reasonable economy, but I can not concede that it is economy to place our country in an insecure condition, a condition which may cost us billions in the future. Preparedness never costs as much as unpreparedness. The last war is an exemplification of that. This is a fact and not a theory.

With kindest regards and my thanks for the stand you are taking in regard to the national defense, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HENRY B. WILSON.

Admiral Wilson has won his renown. He has reached a safe anchorage. His only hope and thought is to maintain the glory, the prestige, and the traditions of the American Navy made immortal by John Paul Jones, Barry, Stewart, Perry, Lawrence, Decatur, Farragut, Sampson, Schley, and Dewey.

The proposed reduction in the pending bill to 67,000 men has its economic side. Where are the 30,000 men to be thrown out of the Navy to secure work when there are already several million American workmen seeking jobs because we have failed to enact a permanent protective tariff based on American valuation?

Stoppage of the construction program under the terms of the bill under discussion is costing my district millions of dollars annually in wages. I have no navy yard in my district, but located there is one of the largest shipbuilding plants in the world. Before and during the great World War the New York Shipbuilding Co. built some of the biggest and best ships in the United States Navy, and the same company has constructed some of the finest passenger and cargo carriers of our merchant marine. Now it is building huge caissons for the new Delaware River bridge that will link the great States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey and make Camden a city of half a million people. But in the meantime our workmen and merchants are suffering. One great battleship building is to be scrapped and a mammoth battle cruiser—the Saratoga—we hope is to be converted into an airplane carrier. During the war 18,000 workmen were busy in that hive of industry and the pay roll was $1,000,000 a week. Now there is a skeleton organization of 5,000 of the most skilled men left, with a pay roll of but one-quarter its previous size. Naturally, the business men and merchants are affected as well as the idle workmen, who can not find jobs on account of the depression in all other lines.

Cheeseparing is not always economy. To paraphrase a famous saying, I believe in "millions for defense but not one cent for graft." We are saving $200,000,000 a year under this bill. That will pay our national debt, outside of what is owing to us from our allies, in 50 years. Eighty-six thousand men in our Navy as against 67,000 would increase the expense approximately $20,000,000 for a few years. That is a small premium to pay on a marine insurance policy that will probably prevent our being plunged into another war that would cost us untold billions.

Mr. Chairman, we have all enjoyed the heavy artillery and broadsides fired in the big battle of the general debate of the last few days. We have even enjoyed the smoke screen of false economy thrown up by the opponents of the larger Navy. The decks are now cleared for action, and under the five-minute rule the auxiliaries and smaller guns can be used. Ordinarily I would agree with the hard-working members of the great Appropriations Committee and would gladly follow the lead of such intellectual giants as Chairman MARTIN MADDEN, JAMES R. MANN, FRANK MONDELL, and Governor KELLEY, but under the circumstances I am compelled to forego that privilege and enroll under the banner inscribed "Safety first." [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much disgusted by the constant insinuations that gentlemen who favor the policy of the administration on the question of an adequate "treaty" Navy are actuated by selfish motives. Such an insinuation comes with bad grace from this Subcommittee on Appropriations which in bringing in this bill admits, through its chairman, that it has included appropriations for naval training stations in spite of the fact that the new policy of the Navy Department is in favor of training these boys on the vessels and not on shore. And yet they have included these items in the bill, one of them being located on the Great Lakes. A navy yard is just as important a part of a Naval Establishment as any other part, but there is not a man in this House who believes that any navy yard should be maintained unless it is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of an adequate Naval Establishment. This matter, however, is more important than the question of any particular phase of this appropriation. It is a question of whether this country shall maintain such a Navy as is provided for in the naval treaty which has just been ratified by the Senate of the United States.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] is a clever debater, and, as has well been said, he could make a jury believe that black is white or that white is black, and he could have made just as good a speech if he had advocated a Navy with 25,000 personnel. But he can not get away from the fact that Great Britain and Japan are proposing under this new treaty arrangement to have a personnel of 98,000 and 68,000, respectively.

A Navy does not consist of battleships or of guns alone. It depends upon the men behind the guns, and I do not believe that the American people, when they understand the facts, will ever consent that this Nation shall have a Navy in the ratio of two and one-half compared with five for Great Britain and three for Japan. They expect that the American Republic is going to have a Navy as provided for in that treaty, and in order to have such a Navy we must have a personnel corresponding, at least approximately, to the personnel of the British Navy.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] attempted to show that the marines—20,000 of them—should be added to the 67,000 he provides for, and therefore, he says, we will really have a Navy of 87,000. He knows perfectly well that the marines, taken as a whole, are not part of the enlisted personnel of the Navy, although they are provided for in this bill. They are essentially land troops, and there is no valid reason for including them in the Naval Establishment. On the other hand, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] pointed out, the Royal Marines of England are sailors. They are trained to fight battleships. Our marines are not. It is not expected that any considerable number of them shall be upon these vessels. As has been pointed out, at the present time less than 2,000 of them are on the vessels. The greater part of them are only on the vessels on which they are carried from one particular post of duty to another. So when he says that this bill virtually provides for a Navy of 87,000 men, he is not telling the exact facts and to that extent is misleading the House.

I therefore hope that the amendment providing for a personnel of 86,000 will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Speaker, I favor the amendment for a Navy minimum of 86,000 men. There are two classes of individuals who, for the time being at least, are subject to the shafts of oratorical irony and criticism of the distinguished gentlemen composing the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of H. R. 11228. These gentlemen, representing districts far removed from the seaboard, where naval ships, yards, docks, and bases are supposed to function, are peculiarly fitted for the duties to which they have been assigned, but seem to have discarded as unworthy of consideration information supplied upon request by our naval authorities. Not only has there been a seeming disposition to spurn such information but to laymen, such as myself, it appears that there has been a decided effort to discredit the testimony submitted by the Department of the Navy, and yet this is the only source from which such information can be obtained unless, perchance, one has passed through the various grades of the service and is in close touch with its records, as has been the Secretary and his aids. From the suggestions which, I think, that I have heard upon this floor a novice might infer that those in charge of our Navy are either very ignorant or else are perjurers. To those of us who have associated and have acquaintance with its personnel either suggestion is absurd, and it is my conviction that the public will be equally as loath to accept these views. The conviction has obtained that the standard of honor in the Navy has been of the highest. From the day that a recruit enters the service he is taught that he must be truthful and honest—in short, a gentleman. Those in command having passed through the academy, and all ranks of the service from ensign to admiral having served on ships large and small, in yards, at the bases, and in the offices, having for a lifetime devoted their entire thought to the work of building a defensive organization for a country of which they are citizens, must know that of which they speak. Surely I should not be censured for inclining to follow their advice. Nor can we forget the White Fleet which sailed without a hitch around the world, advising all nations that we actually had a Navy. The daring and successful entrance into Manila Bay, the sinking and capture of the Spanish fleet and the island without the loss of a ship. The Battle of Santiago can never be forgotten, and finally when the order was given to take part in the World War these men were ready to the minutest detail. Under their guidance not a troop ship was molested, not a duty left undone. These men have never failed. It is a long, long trail to undo in the eyes of the public or of this body their capacity or their veracity.

The second class to which I refer are those Representatives who happen to hail from districts in which there are navy yards, bases, and so forth. I happen to be one of those Representatives. Indeed, it may be that no district in the Union is so honeycombed with naval activities as the second district of Virginia, which I have the honor to represent, comprising 312,000 people, nearly 100,000 above a congressional quota. We have one of the best, if not the best, equipped navy yards in America. Three large dry docks, one of which is over 1,000 feet in length with 40 feet of water over the mud sill; a machine shop second to none in equipment; storage space and warehouses unequaled. A naval base with accommodations for 25,000 recruits, located immediately upon the anchorage of our largest battleships, supply houses and docks at which these ships may enter, load, and discharge; a fuel storage for millions of tons of coal; an Army base and terminal, the magnitude of which is appalling; a fort at Cape Henry armed with the heaviest rifle guns, capable of dropping shells upon ships 20 miles off the coast; a marine hospital; a Navy hospital; and, finally, a magazine depot. With all of these Government activities in my district, according to the formula, my views are the very last entitled to the consideration of my colleagues, and yet having lived in the midst of them, having seen them come one by one, develop and grow beyond the conception of a great majority of my colleagues, knowing the hundreds of millions of dollars that they have cost the taxpayers of all the States of the Union. I venture to warn this body of the danger and loss of permitting them to deteriorate, even though I invoke the witicisms and sarcasm and ridicule of the distinguished committee, who have sailed the seas of the great Middle West, who have gained their knowledge of battleships and dry docks and naval bases where the tall corn grows, and to some extent from the naval personnel.

I have the greatest confidence and respect for the committee, for their views and for those who agree with them. Indeed, there have been times during this debate when their evident sincerity of conviction has tempted me to believe there was justification for their view, but when weighed in the balance they seem to me to be wanting.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should practice the utmost economy in all branches of our Government, but there is such a thing as false economy. Under this head I would place the enormous reduction proposed by a majority of the Appropriations Committee in H. R. 11228, both in personnel and appropriation. I have listened with profound interest to many of the debates upon this floor for and against the committee recommendations.

Arguments have been presented by Members of this body who have devoted years of time and thought to the subject. There has been such a divergence of opinion and disparity of figures, even where it is claimed they have been obtained from the same source, that I have been unable to reconcile them. I frankly admit that I have little first-hand information upon the subject; therefore, I accept the Navy estimates as the safest to follow. There are some facts, however, which have not been contradicted and upon which all seem to agree, the first of which is that we are in need of a Navy, that it should be adequate as a first line of defense in event of war. England for a hundred years has maintained a navy superior to that of any other nation, her policy being to keep it at a standard of strength equal to that of any two of the leading naval powers. Under this policy her commerce has extended to the farthest parts of the earth; she has grown in wealth and power. London was until the recent war the financial center of the world, and the day came when her navy saved not only the British Empire and her allies but possibly America from German domination. It requires a generation to train designers of warships, big guns, and submarines, engineers and mechanics to construct them, to build and maintain our yards and docks, and tools that must be kept in constant repair. Turn these men adrift, let our equipment deteriorate, and we will unquestionably see history repeat itself. The eyes of the world are turned with avarice upon the wealth of America, even as were those of the Goths and Visigoths upon the wealth of Rome. Only yesterday there stood upon the floor of the Genoa conference delegates from the most powerful nation of the world in population and natural resources demanding a redistribution of the world's gold supply. America is said to have about half of this supply. These people well know that they have not that with which to buy this gold. Then, how is it to be redistributed? Let us not "destroy our battleships and other impedimenta of war in order to release funds for maternity and child hygiene," War Finance Corporation schemes for private interests, seeds for farmers whose average wheat yields have been above normal, bonuses for the strongest, most healthy, and most virile of American manhood, millions given to foreign countries in direct violation of the mandates of the Constitution that we have all taken a solemn oath to uphold, maintain, and keep inviolate.

It ill becomes gentlemen in this body to chide with extravagance those of us who wish to maintain our Navy at the highest degree of efficiency, when, notwithstanding a bonded debt of $23,000,000,000 as the result of a war which came like a bolt from a blue sky, plus a floating debt of $4,000,000,000, when they have themselves voted during this Congress, in cash and credits directly and through subsidiary organizations belonging to the Government, nearly and probably more than $6,000,000,000. We have been 30 years in the building of a Navy of which the American people are justly proud, a branch of the service that is deservedly popular among the masses, an insurance against invasion, a guaranty of American prestige upon the seven seas, the strong arm that commands the respect of all nations of the world. European statesmen are to-day exerting themselves to draw America into its troubles, to secure our guaranty in some form or other of its war gains and its war losses. It will continue this policy until it succeeds or is convinced of failure. Let our Navy deteriorate and Europe will become convinced of its failure far more quickly. Its attitude of friendship may be, and probably will be, reversed. The murder at Serajevo was the excuse for an explosion of the smoldering lust to take that which thy neighbor hath. Can anyone believe that this characteristic sin, inherent in man since the days of Cain, has changed? Can anyone be so guileless as to believe that the Washington Disarmament Conference has recasted human nature? If so, reduce the Navy and watch the result. Let us not find ourselves in the position of the foolish virgins. We may not, as in the last war, find friends who are willing to "lend us of their oil." I can not sympathize with a policy of opening wide the doors to the vaults of our Treasury and inviting the theorists and idealists who may organize a few thoughtless people, come to Congress claiming to represent millions, and with demands and threats secure millions and billions of dollars from the pockets of the taxpayers, while we pretend to the people at home that we are responding to their demand for a lightening of the tax burden by deleting the necessary maintenance of our Navy, of our yards, machine shops, docks and bases, our harbor and river activities, our public buildings, and our national highways. We can not deceive the people. There was a time perhaps when this might have been done, but our splendid educational system has taught the great majority of our people to read and to think, and with an increasing acquirement of knowledge Congress, the most important branch of our Government, is being held more and more in contempt by the public, because it turns from the highway of statesmanship to follow the narrow trail of petty politics.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HIMES].

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Chairman, I represent a district having no direct contact with navigable waters and so far removed from the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards as to be entirely safe from invasion unless, indeed, this entire land were overrun by foreign hordes. Accordingly, if the people in my district were narrowly selfish or selfishly narrow, it would behoove me to support the Committee on Appropriations in its laudable but nearsighted proposition to reduce the personnel of our Navy to 67,000 men.

But the people of my district, Mr. Chairman, are both broad-minded and patriotic. They have not forgotten that they gave to this Nation one of its greatest Presidents nor that they belong to the State that has become known as the Mother of Presidents. They have obtained and retain a national viewpoint, and I am confident that they would have me insist that we maintain the ratio as fixed by the Conference on the Limitation of Armament and not through false economy lose our prestige among the world powers.

Gentlemen may say that the world is tired of war or that we have no international enemies or that we are too remote to be subject to attack. They may be right, but are those good reasons for our inviting attack and deliberately laying ourselves open to insults that necessarily lead to retaliation and war?

It would be presumptious, indeed, for me, a new Member of this honorable body, to disagree with its distinguished leaders, were it not that in so doing it was possible for me to agree with leaders just as distinguished. Gentlemen say that the Navy can be properly manned with 67,000 men and others say that 86,000 men is the irreducible minimum. It is with no disrespect to the members of the Committee on Appropriations when I say that I choose to rely upon the judgment of the business men of the Navy Department, my colleagues of the Naval Affairs Committee, the Secretary of State, and our President.

From the inception of this Nation we have believed that international matters should be handled by the executive branch of the Government, subject to the approval of the legislative. This administration, in cooperation with leaders of the Senate, with the approval of the great majority of this House, and inspired by the prayers of a Nation, completed an international agreement whereby the United States might join with sister nations in reducing armaments in perfect safety. A ratio, intended to preserve a balance and not only make remote danger of war but to serve as a basis for negotiations looking toward future economies was worked out. I am in complete accord with my colleague [Mr. LONGWORTH] in the belief that our efforts toward international peace depend as much upon maintaining the 5–5–3 ratio as a minimum as upon our fulfilling our solemn pledge that it be our maximum. I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM].

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this has been a very enlightening debate. It comes down to the question of how many men we need on these ships to keep them up under the treaty. Advocates of the committee report for a Navy personnel of 67,000 and those advocating an increase to 86,000 both say their number will be sufficient. But it seems to me that if there is any doubt on the question the way to solve it is to take the greater number, and then you will know you have not made any mistake.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? That being the case, 120,000 would be the number.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The greater number that is before the House. If we had not had a large and potential Navy there would not have been a successful conference here in Washington. We would not have been in a position to call one and we would not have had anything to give up, to trade with, or to persuade other countries of our good faith. Besides, at the end of 10 years, when the treaty ends, we shall be in a weak position if we fail to keep our enlisted personnel to a proper standard. If we had not had a Navy second to only one in the world, that conference would not have come to a successful conclusion; and do you suppose for a minute that Great Britain would not have continued to maintain that she must have the largest navy in the world if we had not had the potentiality here, second to her, and still growing? Do you suppose that otherwise she would have conceded that this country could have a Navy equal to hers?

No, gentlemen; there is only one question, and that is whether you will be on the sure side and vote to have an adequate personnel for these ships, or whether you will let them go down hill.

Now, I would like to say one serious word to this House, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] will give me his attention. I would like to point out one thing that has not been touched on by anyone here yet, and that is what happened at the time of the Spanish War in 1898.

The ship on which I served did not participate in the battle of Santiago, but I went over a short time afterwards with Admiral Sampson and others and visited those Spanish ships. Now, on paper before that war the Spanish Navy was held by some foreign experts to be the equivalent in ships and armament of the American Navy. Those ships were driven on the beach by our gunfire. They would have been driven on that beach anyway, no matter how they had been manned, because the men of the American Navy, their traditions, their ability, and quality were superior to those of any navy in the world.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman know how many men we had then?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I know how many we had then, and I know more or less the number in the Spanish Navy, and those were the competitors then. But I have only a few minutes, and I want to talk on the bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am sorry I interrupted the gentleman.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. It was discovered that those Spanish ships were not in proper condition. Why were they not kept in condition? Because they had not kept up the personnel of the Spanish Navy. They had not been kept up numerically, and it was currently reported that when Admiral Cervera came over here with those ships they had to empty the prisons in Spain to get the necessary number of men to put on them. The Colon, which was supposed to have a speed of 22 knots, was allowed to run down, so that she was overtaken by the Oregon, of 16 knots.

In those days the complement of a battleship was 500 men. Some of you may recall the couplet sent to Captain Evans, as he was then, by Rudyard Kipling. They ran something like this:

Zogbaum draws with a pencil, and I do things with a pen, while you sit up in a conning tower bossing 500 men.

On a battleship now some twelve hundred men are required. It is a city. Submarine defense, radio, wireless, airplanes, anti-aircraft defense, and a change in the method of gunfire have all come in, the guns are bigger, the ships are bigger, and all this requires more men.

Does anyone imagine that England and Japan will not keep theirs up to the limit? Of course they will.

I am for the policy which will keep the personnel of the American Navy first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of its countrymen. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], and I would ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] if he has anybody left to plead his cause that he will use some of his time then. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts that I have a very retiring disposition and do not want to crowd in. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on the bill be permitted to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FESS). That can not be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for one minute.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I feel sure that I voice the sentiment of the people of my district in supporting the committee on this bill.

Living as I do in the midst of the great agricultural belt of the Nation which has been so sorely stricken by the financial stringency which came as an aftermath of the war; being fully cognizant of the difficulty which farmers and stockmen have encountered in securing funds with which to pay their taxes, caused by the enormous war expenditures, and realizing that the funds which must be raised to maintain our Army and Navy must eventually be produced from the soil, I am constrained to support the committee in its endeavor to reduce the Navy to the smallest number of men and ships which in their sound judgment they consider commensurate with our position in world affairs.

The people of my district, regardless of party affiliations, were keenly interested in the Washington peace conference and followed its deliberations with unflagging interest. They have manifested their satisfaction at the wonderful results obtained from the conference and feel that our country should go to the limit in disarmament for the dual purpose of demonstrating to the world that we regard our obligations seriously and are willing to take the lead in abolishing war and the war spirit and also to lift the war debt which hangs over us as the sword of Damocles.

When I made the pledge to do all in my power to reduce needless Government expenditures I meant what I said, and in looking over the legislation of the past year and considering the untiring labors of the Appropriations Committee I can candidly say that we have kept the faith. The Army and Navy have been reduced, useless Government clerks have been dropped from the pay rolls, the Budget system has held a check on the department heads both as to employees and as to purchases for their several departments.

But, Mr. Chairman, while giving the Members my views on this bill I want to present to them another matter which I think is of interest to them.

Mr. Chairman, being a member of the District Committee and my attention having been called to the housing shortage in Washington, which condition seems to become more acute each week, I determined to seek the cause.

Starting with a well-founded suspicion that the Rent Commission was responsible for a goodly portion of the trouble, I deemed it wise to make an examination of its activities or inactivities, as you may choose to call it, and upon merely a cursory investigation I am convinced that this Utopian scheme is the cause of the distress of the wage earner as well as the man of moderate means in the District.

Although the commission is more than a thousand cases behind its docket, it has recently partially abandoned the docket where the rights of wage earners are involved and has upon its own initiative taken up the matter of fixing rents for the Chastleton and other apartments which are occupied principally by millionaires, Senators, and Representatives, in the meantime allowing the wage earners to be mulcted.

The commission is now more than seven months behind in its hearings, and a reference to its docket reveals the fact that there were 800 complaints filed from September 12, 1921, to November 28, 1921, of which number 48 have been acted upon.

In an official statement of the commission for the month of March, 1922, it is shown that 196 rent cases were determined by the commission, resulting in an increase in rents of $311.50 per month and a decrease of $1,277 per month, making a net decrease in rents for the entire month of $965.50.

Assuming that this is a fair average of the results of the deliberations and determinations of the commission it will readily appear that the total net reduction of rents for one year will be less than $12,000, while the expenses of the commission to produce this result will equal, if not exceed, $45,000 per annum.

This means that the taxpayers of the District must pay $27,000 per year, and the taxpayers of the country, your constituents and mine, must pay $18,000 per year to maintain this pernicious system. In plain language it costs the taxpayers of the United States $45,000 per year to secure a rent reduction of $12,000 per year for a few people in the District of Columbia, and the millionaires seem to be given the preference in the functioning of the commission.

Referring again to statistics, it will readily be seen that the average rent reduction is less than $5 per month.

The intimation is given that in partially abandoning the docket to take up the Chastleton hearings on its own initiative the commission is yielding to pressure from the Hill, which I hope is not true, for I do not believe there is a Member of this House who can justify himself in expending $45,000 of the taxpayers' money in such a futile cause.

The Rent Commission renders a report to no one, so far as I can ascertain; is responsible to no one, and functions as it pleases without being examined or supervised at all.

The commission is asking for an enlargement of its personnel that it may catch up with its docket, but I am confident the taxpayers of the country will not look with favor on an extension of this pernicious legislation.

There are hundreds of new houses being built in Washington, and of these hundreds I have been unable to find a single one with a for rent sign upon it, as each house on being completed is readily sold, the result of the Ball Rent Act being to drive wage earners and people of moderate means to buy property on the installment plan at exorbitant prices. The Ball Rent Act has certainly been a godsend to the real estate promoter.

I sincerely trust that although this measure has been jammed through the body at the other end of the Capitol as a result of propaganda, that the membership of this House, pledged as they are to economy in Government expenditures, may defeat it and remain true to their constituents.

I have made these remarks at this time in order that the Members may have time to consider the evil effects of this measure so that if the attempt is again made to force it through the House under gag rule the Members may act with full knowledge of the facts.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, of course I am for an adequate Navy, and I intend, of course, to vote for it.

If the committee, the House Committee on Appropriations, can convince me that this bill—H. R. 11228—as it stands, gives our country an adequate Navy, then I will vote for it.

But until then I am for the minority report, and if I could get a chance I would vote for a Navy of 100,000.

Professing no familiarity with professional figures, having no expert knowledge and no technical experience, I must do the best thing possible—seek the best advice to be secured. [Applause.]

I have been, of course, impressed and swayed by the genial and generous, resourceful and wonderful subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Michigan, ex-Governor KELLEY. I am really afraid I have been too much affected by his impetuous oratory and advocacy of this bill. If ever there was an "imperial wizard" with naval figures it is Governor KELLEY. I would like to vote with him. But his name and fame are secure, anyhow.

However, I find that the minority report appears to embody nearly the views of the Secretaries of the Navy and of State—the trusted heads of the Navy Department and the State Department. We must trust somebody. The people trust Harding, he is trusting Denby and Hughes; both are, in my judgment, worthy of trust. And Secretary Hughes says "To alter the 5-5-3 relation would be a very serious matter for the United States, both impairing its prestige and putting its security in jeopardy." [Applause.]

My people are for an adequate Navy. I may have my doubts as to what is adequate. My people have no doubts. They are positive. They favor taking no chances.

If they ever were ignorant of the Navy they are not now; they know what an adequate Navy is.

They have been informed by those 2,000,000 men who returned from abroad after seeing great sacrifice, great service, and great seas, and the great value of a real Navy.

I am very, very sure that if there is one thing—one thing above all others—that is absolutely demanded by Illinois, it is an adequate Navy. [Applause.]

With this profound conviction and assurance as to my people, and confronted with a radical disagreement between men and officials who ought to know but who radically differ, I face the alternative of voting, on the one hand, for 67,000 men—67,000—as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, or voting, on the other hand, for 86,000 men—86,000—as recommended by the House Committee on Naval Affairs and by the minority of this subcommittee. What shall I do? What would my people do? I feel now that I will vote for the 86,000—"and if this be treason, make the most of it." I will take no chances. [Applause.]

It has been said here—well said—that there is nothing in the history of England or Japan to cause us to trust them blindly or to assume they will not prepare fully.

Be not deceived.

On the contrary, the entire history of both England and Japan warns us that both England and Japan will surely arm—right square up to the highest and last notch of efficiency allowed in the 5-5-3 treaty—and England, by the way, will do it with our money, money she owes us. Be not deceived. This is no time for "weasel words."

It is true that gentlemen arguing for the little Navy—the 67,000 men—67,000—exclaim, "Oh, the country is not rich enough to pay for 20,000—20,000—more men"; and they repeat over and over again, "Is the country so rich?"

The downright answer, stripped of all mental reservation and all equivocation and all evasion, is, "Yes; the country is rich; too rich to be pacifist; too rich to risk again the awful danger of 1917 and 1918; it is rich enough to defend itself, and do it right."

Then why, why, in the name of common sense and in the name of love of country, and why, in the name of our oaths, yours and mine, registered in heaven, should we, we alone, disarm, making the ratio no longer 5-5-3, but 5-3-2½—yes, 5-3-2½—5 for England and 3 for Japan and 2½ for us? To do that would be dangerously near indulging in pacifism.

Theodore Roosevelt, whose name will always be inseparably linked with the American Navy, in a speech to 20,000 cheering people, his last at Springfield, Ill.—the last speech I heard him deliver, said:

> And now comes the pacifist, and he says, says the pacifist, "Come, now, let us be harmless; because the more harmless we are the less harm other people will do to us; so come, now, let us be harmless.

This puncturing of pacifism was greeted with cheers, uproarious and tumultuous.

I believe I know how this lover of liberty and of his country would vote on this question. He would vote for an adequate Navy and take no chances, and would thus insure the peace of the world and thus lessen, at least for a time, the horrors of war, which will always threaten this old world until God sees fit to change the natures of men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. YATES. May I have one minute more?

Mr. VARE. I am very sorry I have not the time.

Mr. YATES. I had the promise of one more minute.

Mr. VARE. I yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. YATES. I want, in that one minute, to answer, with another question, the question asked by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, the Democratic leader. Another gentleman had the floor—the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ]—and he was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee, who, with urbanity and suavity asked the childlike and bland question: "Against whom are we arming? Who can possibly be our foe?" I answer that question by asking, Who will be our friend? Will it be Japan or will it be old England? No; there is not a nation in the world to-day that is our friend. They are all suspicious and unfriendly, and I am in favor of arming on that theory and not disarming on the theory of the gentleman that we have no foe. When he asks, "Who is our foe?" I reply, "We waked up one day 30 years after the Revolution and found ourselves again at war with England. Then, 30 years later, we had to go to war with Mexico. Then, 17 years later, we were on the verge of war again with England over the Trent incident. Then, 35 years later, our foe was Spain. And only 20 years later we were at war with Germany and Austria. Just before all of these wars there were men who asked, "Who will be our foe?"

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. VARE. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, love for the Republic and patriotic devotion to its highest interests should prompt all our actions here, especially in the matter of providing for adequate national defense.

Every Member of this House and of the Senate, every officer of the Government, State and Federal, and, indeed, every American everywhere, should love America as Macaulay says Pitt loved England, as an Athenian loved Athens, as a Roman loved the "City of Seven Hills."

No cowardly impulse, no sectional selfishness, no narrow view of patriotism, no partisan prejudice, no sordid stinginess, should ever remotely influence our legislative conduct in providing for the common defense and promoting the general welfare of our country. Rather let us invoke the lofty and patriotic spirit of the Revolutionary fathers and of the saviors of the later Republic, who held no cost too heavy and no sacrifice too great when the sacred rights of humanity were to be proclaimed and the great cause of liberty and of union was to be defended and maintained.

The people of my district, like those of yours, my colleagues, are God-fearing and peace loving. They pray for peace perpetual with national honor unimpaired. But they are red-blooded Americans all, who love their country, believe in it, adore its flag, and are ready, if need be, to fight and die for both. They believe in both preparedness and peace—peace, if possible, with honor and self-respect; preparedness as a guaranty of victory if war must come.

During the last few weeks my office has been flooded with letters from the people of my district protesting against the destruction of the American Army and the American Navy. Hundreds upon hundreds have conveyed to me the double message of preparedness and peace. These letters are instructions from those whom I have the honor to represent to use my best endeavors to promote and maintain an honorable peace between America and all the other nations of the earth, but to neglect no act and leave no stone unturned to create and maintain a state of national preparedness that would enable the Republic to defend grandly and successfully its territory and its flag if war should come. These instructions are sacredly binding upon me, and by my vote and voice in Congress I shall obey them. In other words, I shall stand and do stand for the strongest possible Navy personnel that the circumstances of this day and time will allow. I shall vote for 86,000, as provided by the Vare amendment, instead of 67,000 as provided by the bill. I should like to vote for 96,000 asked by the Navy Department, if it were possible. I will not consent to the scrapping of the American Navy by the American Congress.

I am in favor of strong national preparedness, but I am opposed to militarism. I want my country to be and to remain forever the great advocate of peace among all the countries of the world. I want our glorious flag to represent forever the force and justice of democracy and military discipline, and not the tyranny and oppression of autocracy and military despotism.

The founders of the Republic designed it to be a perpetual asylum of liberty and of peace. They intended that the civil should remain forever above the military authority. They emphasized this design when they made the President of the Republic, a civilian officer, the head of both the Army and the Navy. I sincerely trust that their beneficent intentions will prevail to the end of time.

But the builders of our Government were not pacifists, "peace at any price" men, who prefer humiliation to battle and the ease and quiet of a voluptuous existence to the fierce struggle of life in which courage and strength are born. They were men of blood and iron who preferred death and annihilation to dishonor and disgrace. They knew that the infant Republic had been created in the throes of revolution—in seven years and eight months of arduous toil and bitter struggle. Their vision was prophetic, and they foresaw that insurrection from within and invasion from without would necessitate military and naval preparedness if America was to remain united and free and if the safety and dignity of the country were to be successfully defended and maintained.

No wonder then that Washington, in his fifth annual address, gave to his countrymen this sage advice:

I can not recommend to your notice measures for the fulfillment of our duties to the rest of the world without again pressing upon you the necessity of placing ourselves in a position of complete defense. The United States ought not to indulge a persuasion that, contrary to the order of human events, they will forever keep at a distance those painful appeals to arms with which the history of every other nation abounds. There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld if not absolutely lost by the reputation of weakness. If we desire to avoid insult we must be able to repel it; if we desire to secure peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our rising prosperity, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war.

No wonder that John Adams, in his second annual message, dealing with our relations with France, should have used this language:

But in demonstrating by our conduct that we do not fear war in the necessary protection of our rights and honor, we should give no room to infer that we abandon the desire of peace. An efficient preparation for war can alone secure peace.

No wonder that Thomas Jefferson, in his fifth annual message, advocated—

The organization of 300,000 able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 26 for offense or defense at any time or at any place where they may be wanted.

It is interesting at this point to note that Thomas Jefferson advocated a larger Army for the defense of a small Republic of fewer than 20 States, populated by fewer than 5,000,000 people, than some of his Democratic descendants are willing to provide for the defense of a giant Republic of 48 States and several colonies, with a population of more than 100,000,000 people. It would be more interesting still if the virile, pugnacious, red-headed author of the Declaration of Independence, founder of the University of Virginia, and third President of the United States could appear again upon the earth and express himself after hearing members of his own party as well as Republicans advocate the gradual disbanding of the Army and destruction of the Navy at the very moment that a justly alarmed people demand that their Representatives in Congress provide them with means of adequate national defense.

The greatest obstacles in the way of maintaining adequate military and naval preparedness are the theories and objections of professional pacifists, who are to be found both in and out of Congress. The convictions of these men should not be derided or denounced. Their aims are high, their motives are pure, and their impulses are generous and fine. Their hopes and aspirations for permanent and universal peace are honorable to human nature and are a splendid tribute to the higher and better qualities of the minds and hearts of men. But they are dangerous nevertheless, for they are nothing more than plain idealists and deluded dreamers. In making forecasts of the future they take no account of the past. The teachings of history mean nothing to them. The inherent savagery in man and the inevitable experiences of human life do not seem to impress them seriously. They refuse to ground their convictions in what men have done as the best assurance of what men may do, but insist on coloring their arguments with all the tints of the rainbow and on weaving them from the warp and woof of mere fancy and conjecture.

It is a ghastly and sickening thought, but if human history teaches anything, it is that man is a savage animal and that recurring wars are as inevitable as the certain return of the tides of the sea.

In 1908, at Chicago, the late brilliant and gifted ex-Governor Black, of New York, nominated Mr. Roosevelt for the Presidency. The following is an extract from that perfectly polished gem of oratory:

The fate of nations is still decided by their wars. You may talk of orderly tribunals and learned referees; you may sing in your schools the gentle praises of the quiet life; you may strike from your books the last note of every martial anthem, and yet out in the smoke and thunder will always be the tramp of horses and the silent, rigid, upturned face. Men may prophesy and women pray, but peace will come here to abide forever upon this earth only when the dreams of childhood are the accepted charts to guide the destinies of men.

This sentiment may seem pessimistic and be painfully disappointing and distressing, but the teaching is sound in the light of human history and experience, and we should never forget that the only safe guide for our footsteps upon the highway of the future is the light of the past.

A state of warfare seems to be the normal condition of human life and the bloody pastime of the nations. For thousands of years the peoples of the earth have been at each other's throats in terrific struggles. The gates of Janus, in Rome, were closed for short periods only three times in 700 years. Within the memory of men now living every important nation on the globe has fought three important wars, and many of them four or five. Our own dear country is no exception to the rule. The brief span of the life of our Republic has been marked by six great conflicts—the War of the Revolution, the War of 1812 with England, the Mexican War, the Civil War, the War with Spain, and the War with the Central Powers. This does not take into account the Florida wars, the wars with the Barbary States, nor the various Indian wars that have marked the progress of our history.

For ages it has been the dream of philanthropy and the hope of religion that the perfection of Christian life and the advance of civilization would do away with all wars by illuminating the reason, softening the heart, and taming the savage qualities of men. But has this been realized? Let the terrible world struggle that has just ended answer.

The Sermon on the Mount is the chart of the soul on the sea of life, and its beatitudes are the glorification of the virtues of gentleness, mercy, love, and peace. Nearly 2,000 years have passed since the Prophet of Nazareth delivered this sublime and solemn message to mankind, and yet within the last six years the appalling and pathetic spectacle has been presented of the Christian nations of the world employing all the devilish ingenuity and the hellish methods that fertile brains and scientific aids could furnish to devise yet more fiendish means and to invent still greater guns to blow other Christian brains into seething froth.

No; let us not be deceived by the thought nor be beguiled by the hope that civilization as we now understand it will ever bring lasting peace. History and experience have taught us that civilization at best is but a veneer, and that the slightest scratch will reveal beneath the surface the savage in the man. A pastoral commonwealth with justice and peace forever seated at the confines of the Nation is a Utopian dream.

Let the pacifists indulge their visions of a millennium of peace. But let practical patriotic men pay no attention to them. Let us not forget that the bitter experiences of our race teach us that wars are inevitable and that they come seemingly in obedience to a law as pitiless and inexorable as that which dooms us to the dust. Let us not forget that a solemn obligation rests upon us, under our constitutional oaths as Congressmen, to provide for the "common defense" as well as to promote the "general welfare." Let us then meet the great issue of national preparedness intelligently and fearlessly in the light rather of human history and experience than in the shadow of the fears of theorists and dreamers.

I do not hesitate to tell you, my colleagues, that I have more confidence in the teachings of history than I have in the deliberations and proclamations of international disarmament conferences. Furthermore, I do not hesitate to say to you that I prefer to guide my political conduct in this body by history and human experience rather than by the resolutions of any handful of men however grandly gifted and endowed.

In closing, then, I wish to state my preparedness creed: I believe that a Republic of 100,000,000 people, with several thousand miles of coast line to protect, with important insular possessions to defend, with the Panama Canal to fortify and guard, and with the Monroe doctrine to maintain should have a standing Army of at least 200,000 men, with adequate militia and volunteer reserves, together with a Navy at least second among the navies of the world.

This belief represents my personal conviction and reflects, I am convinced, the sentiments and wishes of a very large majority of my constituents, and I shall act upon this belief in my vote to-day.

Repeating a single sentence from the fifth annual address of Washington, heretofore referred to, that "there is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld if not absolutely lost by the reputation of weakness," I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, in closing, that I have an abiding and unbounded faith in the great destiny and in the undying glory of my country. I believe that the time is not far distant when American genius and American influence will dominate the nations and overshadow the earth; when our Constitution and our Declaration of Independence will be the mold and model of free institutions among all the tribes of men; when the torch of freedom which was lit at the flame of the American Revolution will be a beacon light to the oppressed of all mankind; when our soldiers and our sailors will be feared and respected on every land and on every sea; when the drumbeat of our country will be heard around the world; when freedom's flag will illumine all the skies; and, whether proceeding from the mouth of an ambassador or from the hot throats of Federal guns, when the mandate of the great Republic will be heard and obeyed throughout the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, certainly there exists no rational ground now for apprehending war troubles in the near future. We have just concluded very far-reaching treaties with all the great naval powers of the world, and the President has spoken in a most assuring vein to the people of the Nation as to what these treaties promise in the way of peace for the future. Since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER], notwithstanding these treaties and the 10-year naval holiday which they promise, seem still to see dark clouds of war hovering over us, I respectfully invite their attention to some excerpts from a speech delivered by the President at the concluding session of the peace conference. Among other things, he said:

> But the whole achievement has so cleared the atmosphere that it will seem like breathing the refreshing air of a new morn of promise.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> When you first met I told you of our America's thought to seek less of armament and none of war; that we sought nothing which is another's, and we were unafraid, but that we wished to join you in doing that finer and nobler thing which no nation can do alone. We rejoice in the accomplishment.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> How sane and simple and satisfying to seek the relationship of peace and security.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> I once believed in armed preparedness. I advocated it. But I have come now to believe there is a better preparedness in a public mind and a world opinion made ready to grant justice precisely as it exacts it. And justice is better served in conferences of peace than in conflicts at arms.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Again, gentlemen of the conference, congratulations and the gratitude of the United States! To Belgium, to the British Empire, to China, to France, to Italy, to Japan, to the Netherlands, and to Portugal I can wish no more than the same feeling which we experience, of honorable and honored contribution to happy human advancement, and a new sense of security in the righteous pursuits of peace and all attending good fortune.

It might be well for the President also to read again his own speech, since in a recent letter to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] he expresses doubt as to whether we have advanced sufficiently along the paths of peace to adopt what the Appropriations Committee of the House now recommend as an adequate and sane naval program for the year 1923. This speech certainly shows that the President, when the conference adjourned, and the Senate's ratification of the treaties was urged, strongly felt that we had advanced far along the paths of peace, and that our country was reasonably safe for the next 10 years at least from all dangers and misunderstandings that might lead to war. The people of our country accepted the action of the conference in that fine spirit and belief that bespoke an international cooperation and understanding, so hearty and sincere as to dispel all thought of impending war, and so great was their faith in the agreements made that very general public approval has been given the Senate's ratification of the treaties. As a result, our country is now preparing to scrap not only 15 of the older battleships but also 13 of the most powerful war vessels ever designed, all of which are nearing completion, and on which millions have been spent. These 13 great warships would have been finished within the next two years, and on their completion America's supremacy of the seas could not have been challenged by any power.

In August, 1916, Congress authorized the building of 10 battleships, 4 of which, when finished, would have been the speediest, the most destructive, the most powerful ever designed by the mind of man. The same act also provided for six battle cruisers, the speediest, the most effective for offensive and defensive warfare ever authorized for any Navy. No nation had any ships like these, built or building, and it is doubtful whether any other nation has the financial ability to construct now or in the near future such giant weapons of destruction. Yet under the treaty all of these great battle cruisers and seven of the battleships are to be scrapped, and included in the seven battleships to be scrapped are our four greatest, with a displacement of 42,000 tons each, a speed of 23 knots, each carrying twelve 16-inch guns, capable of throwing with accuracy steel projectiles weighing 2,100 pounds more than 25 miles. No one questioned on the completion of this great building program, already far advanced, that the United States would possess the most powerful naval vessels of these two types afloat.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Not just now. Certainly America's willingness to scrap her greatest weapons of destruction was the highest evidence of her faith in the treaty promises of peace for the future. [Applause.]

We will now have no battleships of more than 21 knots speed and none with the gun power or tonnage displacement of those we have agreed to destroy; we will have no great battle cruisers in our Navy; and yet so great was our faith in the agreements entered into with our former allies that we have permitted Great Britain to retain many capital ships, with a speed of 23, 25, and 32 knots, carrying great modern 15-inch guns, and to build two additional battleships of 35,200 tons displacement—larger than any we have retained, with no limit as to speed. Mark my prediction, she will build these two with light side armor, with decks well protected, each carrying not exceeding two or four 16-inch guns, and of great speed, with the greatest possible space for aircraft. No navy will have any vessels in point of effectiveness like unto them.

Japan has been allowed to retain battleships faster than ours, and she will also have more than five battle cruisers, armed with great modern guns, having a speed of more than 32 knots.

If, then, there are in fact substantial grounds, as some wildly imagine, for the fears expressed by a few as to our country's security, then the conferees, the President, the Senate, and the people who indorse their action have shown a degree of reckless, thoughtless carelessness, little short of treason, in agreeing to scrap six great battle cruisers and seven great battleships now nearing early completion. These 13 ships, from the standpoint of naval value, measured by speed, gun power, tonnage, and effectiveness, possess more than double the value of the 18 capital ships which the treaty permits us to retain, and which must constitute the entire capital-ship strength of our Navy until long after 1932, because the treaty forbids any further construction of capital ships by the United States until after 1932.

In this connection it may be well to take a passing inventory as to the military value of these 18 capital ships of our Navy. Eleven have a tonnage displacement ranging from 24,000 to 27,000 tons, with a speed of about 20 knots, each carrying from eight to ten 14-inch guns, capable of throwing a projectile weighing 1,400 pounds about 20 miles; three will have a tonnage displacement of 33,000, a speed of 21 knots, each carrying 16-inch guns, capable of throwing a projectile of 2,100 pounds about 24 miles. We at present only have one of this last type; the other two are now in course of construction and will be completed probably by 1925. The remaining 6 of our 18 capital ships are less than 21,000 tons displacement, with a speed of 18 or 19 knots, each ship carrying 12-inch guns only, with a range of about 15 miles and capable of throwing a projectile of 870 pounds only. Two of the 12-inch-gun ships are to be scrapped when the two battleships now building are completed.

The six 12-inch-gun ships have no real naval value; any one of the seven great battleships or battle cruisers which we are to scrap could have successfully met and destroyed all of the six in an hour's time, without even subjecting itself to gunfire from the ships so destroyed. A battleship is like a woman's hat—only good in its season.

So for the next two years our capital fleet will consist of only 12 battleships of real military value, which last number will be increased to 14 about 1925, and this 14 will constitute our Navy's real capital-ship strength until long after 1932. Great Britain in speed, tonnage, gun power, and number of ships is now unquestionably superior, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has well pointed out.

The point that I wish to impress on the House is this: That out of the 18 capital ships we are allowed to retain under the treaty, we will have but 14 of any real military value, and yet we are not complaining. And why? Simply because we have faith in the agreements we have made with the great naval powers of the world, and we believe that for the next 10 years all danger of war has been reduced to a minimum, if not made impossible. [Applause.]

Naval experts know, and our people should be informed, however, that at present we have neither a balanced fleet nor one on a 5-5 basis with Great Britain. We have more destroyers, more submarines, but Great Britain has more and faster battleships and at least seven battle cruisers, whereas we have none; she has five or six aero-carrying ships, and we have only one of very doubtful value. The treaty, however, permits the United States to build five aero-carrying ships, aggregating 135,000 tonnage, and authorizes two of our modern battle cruisers, now in course of building, to be converted into aero-carrying ships of 33,000 tons displacement each, with no limit as to speed, but carrying only 8-inch guns.

It is important, then, that this Congress appropriate sufficient money to build not less than two modern aero-carrying ships of great speed, because only on the completion of the five aero-carrying ships authorized by the treaty can we feel that we have a balanced and really effective Navy. In future the first line of offense and the best line of defense, so far-visioned naval experts advise, will be our Air Service. [Applause.]

Let me again repeat that until you have built great aero-carrying ships and perfected your Air Service organization our Navy will not be equal to Great Britain's, and this fact is frankly admitted by every naval authority; yet, notwithstanding this, I submit America feels unafraid. [Applause.] Not only are we unalarmed but we are even now looking forward to the time when another conference can be called which will place further limitations on capital ships, and limitations also on submarines and other weapons of destruction. [Applause.]

Then why, may I ask, under these conditions should we listen to the insistent demands of the Navy Department to provide at great expense war complements for our capital ships and a great surplus of men for shore stations?

I wish to discuss this matter from a business standpoint with the Members of the House, because I feel that if the House is acquainted with the facts, as we know them, they will not vote millions of dollars for needless expense. We all love the American Navy. [Applause.] No man here knowingly would do it hurt. It is our country's best security, and far be it from me to detract from or say aught in criticism of its wonderful past achievements, both in war and in peace. [Applause.]

Neither the Navy Department nor naval officers, however, are immune to mistakes, and this Congress well knows how extravagant indeed are the estimates they often submit. I have previously called the attention of the House to the fact that it is not unusual for naval officers to widely disagree as to the number of enlisted men required to efficiently man the Navy. In 1919 the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy was 181,000. The following year, over the strong protest of the Navy Department, the committee reduced the enlisted personnel to 120,000. Naval officers then strenuously insisted that the Navy could not efficiently function with less than 160,000 enlisted men, yet Congress wisely and against the advice of high naval officers at the head of the bureaus of the Navy Department cut the enlisted strength to 120,000. Who will undertake to say now that we hurt the Navy by this action? Yet we saved a large sum of money to the Federal Treasury by refusing to follow the advice of naval officers.

Last year these same naval officers insisted that they must have 120,000 men for the present fiscal year, 1922; yet Congress, over their protest, cut it to 106,000; and who, again may I ask, will deny that our action was wise? You will recall that the heads of the bureaus fooled our good friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] last year to the extent that in a speech before the House he stated that he was advised by the Navy Department that if the enlisted personnel of the Navy was cut to 106,000 that only 13 battleships could be kept in commission. We to-day find him again in a speech to the House on last Monday stating that the Navy Department now advises that if the enlisted personnel is cut to 67,000 they can only retain in active commission 13 battleships. Rather a remarkable coincidence that they should have fixed on 13 as being the number of battleships that could be retained in active commission, whether you have 106,000 or 67,000 men. The pending amendment to fix the enlisted personnel at 86,000 will be over the protest of naval officers, because they are now demanding 106,000. In other words, it would seem that we always find them willing to take for the next year what you gave them this year, especially when the question is raised as to whether they are entitled to the number they now have. Congress has not blindly followed in the past the advice either of the General Board, the Navy Department, or any combination of high naval officers, and in failing to do so I submit that we have done no hurt to our Navy.

A careful, judicial, and unbiased study of the facts will now disclose to the Members of the House that the committee in reporting the pending bill have provided sufficient men and sufficient money for the fiscal year 1923 to efficiently man and operate all of the ships which the Navy Department states is its desire or purpose to keep in active commission during 1923.

I respectfully submit that an examination of the table furnished by the Secretary of the Navy to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], appearing on page 5551 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will disclose that with 86,000 men the Navy Department proposes to keep in commission the same number of ships, and no more, than the pending bill seeks to provide shall be kept in commission with 67,000 men. The essential differences, then, between the Navy Department in its use of the enlisted personnel of 86,000 men, provided for in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], and in its use of the 67,000 provided for in the pending bill are simply these: The Navy Department desires to place on 18 capital ships, as shown by the table on page 5551 of the RECORD, 23,369 men, including flagship complements and fleet aviation detachments, whereas the pending bill provides for these same capital ships only 19,591 men, including flagship complements and fleet aviation detachments. The Navy Department further desires, as shown by the table on page 5551, to keep at shore stations, including shore base submarine tenders, 28,732 men, whereas the pending bill provides for these same shore stations only 16,176 men. Certainly this Congress, if the Members will only read the hearings, are not willing to provide 28,732 men for shore station duties in the Navy during 1923. A careful reading of the hearings will show that the committee has made generous provision for these activities.

Now, as to the complements for the capital ships, the pending bill provides not only for all capital ships but also for the other ships which the Navy Department proposes to keep in commission during 1923 more men than were actually carried on these same ships during January of the present year, when the Navy had 100,000 men or more to draw from.

The real item of difference between the table submitted by the Secretary on page 5551 of the RECORD and the pending bill, as the same relates to the enlisted personnel on our ships, is in fact reduced to the size of the complements on our 18 battleships. The pending bill provides not only more men than were carried on these ships in January of this year, but it provides, as complements for each of these 18 battleships, more men than the General Board of the Navy and the Bureau of Navigation fixed as the number to be carried on these ships when the ships were originally designed.

We may even apply a further test to show that an adequate complement for each of our capital ships has been provided for in the pending bill, namely, for 1923 we have given to each of these capital ships more officers and enlisted men than were carried on any 18 battleships of Great Britain's during September, 1918, at a time when Great Britain was carrying on all of her battleships full war complements.

In proof of these claims I submit, first, that a report from the Navy Department itself, as set out in the hearings, shows that we have provided, with the 67,000, more men for the ships to be kept in commission in 1923 than were actually carried on these same ships in January of this year.

As to the claim that we have provided an excess number over the complements fixed by the General Board and the Bureau of Navigation when the ships were originally designed, I respectfully refer the Members of the House to a full discussion of this subject before the House Naval Affairs Committee on December 31, 1918, where Secretary Daniels supplied to the committee a table showing the original complements fixed by the General Board and the Bureau of Navigation for eight of our present battle fleet. I quote from page 916 of the hearings as follows:

Designed complement of ships.

New York	902
Arkansas	916
Wyoming	915
Texas	902
Delaware	830
North Dakota	830
Utah	828
Florida	837

Secretary Daniels, in discussing this table in connection with the increased number of men that some naval officers were then recommending as peace complements for our capital ships, made the following statement to the committee:

> In my judgment, there is not a ship in the American Navy that is not overmanned and the number of men should be reduced; but there are officers in the Navy, able and very splendid men, who believe that we should now make a permanent complement on the ships equal to our war complement which, in my judgment, is the greatest waste of men and the greatest waste of money that could possibly be permitted.

If the Members of the House, in connection with the table giving the complements fixed by the General Board for the ships, as they were designed, will read the interesting speech made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] and add to the designed complements the numbers which Mr. FRENCH points out may be added on account of fire control and other changes made after the ships were designed, you will find that the pending bill provides for this additional number of men on every capital ship in a most generous way. [Applause.]

Now, in support of the claim that the pending bill provides for our 18 capital ships more men and officers than were carried on any like number of Great Britain's greatest capital ships during the war, I beg to submit a table, accepted by the House Naval Affairs Committee in December, 1918, as officially correct, and which table clearly shows that the total number of officers and enlisted men carried on British battleships during the war was less than the number which the pending bill provides for our battleships in 1923. The list I have just referred to was furnished by Secretary Daniels and can be found on page 917 of the hearings, and the following taken therefrom gives the names of 18 of Great Britain's best battleships, with the dates of their completion, their tonnage displacement, and the number of officers and men carried on each ship as of September 30, 1918, which was long after the Battle of Jutland and shortly before the war closed:

Battleships.	Completion.	Displacement.	Officers and men.
		Tons.
Royal Sovereign	Apr. 29, 1915	25,750	942
Royal Oak	Nov. 17, 1914	25,750	977
Revenge	May 29, 1915	25,750	[1]970
Resolution	Jan. 14, 1915	25,750	937
Ramillies	Sept. 12, 1916	25,750	937
Malaya	Mar. 18, 1915	27,500	955
Valiant	Nov. 4, 1914	27,500	957
Barham	Dec. 31, 1914	27,500	[1]985
Queen Elizabeth	Oct. 16, 1913	27,500	[1]1,016
Warsprite	Nov. 26, 1913	27,500	957
Erin (late Reshadieh)	Sept. 3, 1913	23,000	1,130
Benbow	Nov. 12, 1913	25,000	[1]995
Emperor of India	Oct. 24, 1912	25,000	[1]995
Marlborough	Oct. 12, 1912	25,000	995
Iron Duke	Mar. 21, 1912	23,000	915
Ajax	Nov. 18, 1911	23,000	812
Centurion	Oct. 9, 1911	23,000	[1]849
King George V

[1] Flagship.

The above table shows the British war complements on 18 of her great battleships, as carried in September, 1918—6 of the ships included in the list being flagships. The total number of officers and men carried on these 18 British ships during the war was 17,409, and the total number which the pending bill provides for our 18 capital ships during 1923 is 19,591. In other words, the pending bill provides for our 18 battleships as peace complements in 1923, 2,182 more enlisted men than the total number of officers and enlisted men carried on 18 British battleships during the war. [Applause.]

And in this connection, it is proper to say that the statement has been invariably made that the British war complement was at least 10 per cent greater than her peace complement.

Who will now deny that the pending bill provides for all of our 18 battleships, first, a complement in excess of the actual number carried on these same ships in January of this year; second, a complement largely in excess of the number fixed by the General Board and the Bureau of Navigation, when the ships were originally designed; and, third, 2,182 more men than were carried on 18 of Great Britain's largest and best battleships in September, 1918, during war. If these claims be conceded, then what reason can there be for providing 23,369 men—the number which the Navy Department now insists should be carried on these 18 capital ships? The mere statement of the question, it seems to me, carries its own answer.

Now, if it is the desire of the House to provide this large peace complement for 18 battleships, 6 of which have no real military value, and to provide more than 28,000 men for shore stations, then, of course, you should vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE]. It is well to remember, however, when you add useless personnel increases to the Navy for 1923, that the hope of the people of our country that the peace conference would result in substantial reductions in naval appropriations can not be realized.

Already we are told by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that if the enlisted personnel is increased to 86,000, and the amount necessary for scrapping the 28 ships provided for in the treaty is appropriated, that the total amount expended on the Navy for 1923 will total about the same as was appropriated for in 1922. With 28 capital ships to be scrapped, with a large number of submarine chasers, Eagle boats, and other small craft of no military value to be either sold or put out of commission, with a large number of destroyers and other auxiliary craft to be put in reserve, surely the House must know that the Navy enlisted personnel can and should be greatly reduced, and the pending bill undertakes to do this.

I respectfully submit that we have provided an adequate number of men to man our ships and care for all naval activities during 1923, and out of the savings thus effected we should provide for the immediate construction of two aero-carrying ships, which I have attempted to show are now urgently needed in the fleet and the building of which should not be longer delayed.

In conclusion, since strong opposition has now developed in the House, in the administration, and in the Navy and War Departments against any reduction in either the officer or enlisted personnel of these services, it may be well here to set out some facts showing a comparison between our Military Establishment prior to the war and at the present time. In 1916 we had approximately 8,694 officers in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps and the other allied services. We now have in these same services 21,558 officers. The enlisted personnel of the Army is now twice what it was in 1916, that of the Navy is about double the size of what it was in 1916, and the Marine Corps is more than one-half as large again. We have at our universities and colleges 95,000 young men in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps units and a large number under the War Department in training at high schools and other institutions in addition to this 95,000.

The abnormal increase in the number of generals, colonels, lieutenant colonels, and captains of the Army, of admirals, captains, commanders, lieutenant commanders, and lieutenants of the Navy will later furnish interesting information to the people of our country, especially to our farmers, when they study the cost of maintaining the Army and Navy for 1923.

It is evident now that strong pressure is being brought to bear by the administration to maintain the Army at 150,000, notwithstanding the House by a large vote favored its reduction to 115,000, and we have seen and felt in the House during the week the hand of the administration in the increase now proposed for the Navy. Well may we ask: When will the time come that our Military Establishment is to be placed on a peace-time basis?

It would seem that with a strong federalized National Guard, now numbering about 150,000 in its enlisted personnel, and with about 8,000 officers, this country can well afford to materially reduce its regular standing Army, and the recent peace conference certainly gave promise of large reductions in the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Under leave to extend I wish to insert a further statement read to the House Naval Affairs Committee by Secretary Daniels on December 30, 1918, as set out on page 912 of the hearings. The statement is as follows:

It seemed to be universally agreed by all naval experts that in passing from the predreadnought class of battleship to the dreadnought a reduction in the cost of maintenance would result because of two factors: (a) That the small ship with a great number of small-caliber guns required more men and officers than a larger ship with large-caliber guns only, therefore the complement of a dreadnought would be less than the complement of the predreadnought; (b) the change from the coal-burning to the fuel-oil burning battleship would reduce the complement of the dreadnought as compared with the predreadnought.

While only the latest battleships have been oil burners exclusively, and although a reduction in the engineers' forces has resulted, nevertheless the complements of the ships of the Navy have been constantly increasing and have been increased far beyond the designed complement at the time the ships were laid down.

On January 11, 1907, President Roosevelt, in advocating the authorization of the "11 big-gun ship" in his message to Congress, stated as follows upon recommendations of the experts of the Navy Department:

"Moreover, though a large ship consumes more coal, a small ship having a large number of small guns—6-inch, etc.—actually requires more men and officers than a large one having heavy guns only, and consequently each small ship costs at least as much to maintain and repair. For example, the complement of a dreadnought of 18,000 tons is 690 officers and men, while that of the Louisiana of 16,000 tons is about 850."

In 1910 the war complement of the Louisiana was stated as 954 men and the peace complement as 834 men, while in 1915 a report from the fleet itself placed the peace complement of the Louisiana at 1,137 men. The Louisiana is cited because in 1907 the experts in advising President Roosevelt placed the complement at 850 officers and men.

For instance, the New York; the designed complement is 902 enlisted men. In 1915 the complement was stated at 1,094 as a flagship, and to-day she has on board 1,444 men as a flagship, and the peace complement, as determined by a board now in session in the fleet, will be probably 1,410 men. Another instance is the Delaware, whose designed complement was 830 men; in 1915, 981; to-day, 1,094; and the board in session in the fleet will probably recommend a peace complement of 1,247 men. When the plans for the modern dreadnoughts were laid down such ships as the Pennsylvania and Arizona were designed to carry 937 men, but the number of enlisted men actually on board to-day is 1,440 for the Pennsylvania and 1,540 for the Arizona. While it is true that the battleship force has been used for training purposes during the war, there is, nevertheless, a board in the fleet now in session to recommend the complement of the battleships, and it is probable they will recommend a complement of about 1,420 men for the Pennsylvania and 1,490 men for the Arizona. This is an increase of 556 and 626 men, respectively, over the designed complements in time of peace.

The complement of enlisted men of the ships of the Navy has increased to such an extent that the crowded condition becomes a matter of concern as regards efficiency and sanitation. The division commander of the American forces operating with the British Grand Fleet, Rear Admiral Hugh Rodman, has forwarded a criticism to the department relating to offices, compartments, and sleeping space, stating that the men are crowded and are "packed in like sardines in a tin, two and three deep at times, in close, poorly ventilated berth deck compartments," and recommends that no more changes be made in the ship where the change will encroach upon the space for the crew, as it tends to cause more men to find sleeping billets on the "already crowded berth deck."

The number of men on the ships to which Admiral Rodman made reference in his letter to the Secretary were war complements carried on the ships, consisting of about 1,400 men to the ship. This, strange to say, is the peace complement now recommended by naval officers for many of our capital ships. The admonition of Admiral Rodman should be sufficient to warn Congress against placing large peace complements on these ships.

Secretary Daniels, continuing to read from the prepared statement, said:

While it is conceded that the complement of the ship might be necessarily increased in time of war to care for casualties, additional lookouts, and fire-control stations, and even in time of peace, because of additional stations that may become necessary from time to time in the development of modern naval warfare, yet, after careful investigation, I am of the opinion that the complements of the battleships of to-day can be operated efficiently with smaller complements. In December, 1914, a memorandum was filed with this committee setting forth a comparative statement of the commissioned line personnel and of the enlisted personnel of Great Britain and the United States. The statement showed as follows:

Enlisted personnel:
Great Britain, per thousand tons	55
United States, per thousand tons	69
Commissioned line personnel:
Great Britain, per thousand tons	2.21
United States, per thousand tons	2.51

It is therefore submitted that as far as the manning of the fleet is concerned efficient work can be done with smaller complements.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I must ask not to be interrupted during the brief 10 minutes that I shall have. There are a few questions that I want to take up in rapid fashion by way of summary. In the first place, much has been said on both sides of this question upon which there is no difference. We all love our country, we all love our flag, we all love the greatest Navy in the world, and I can join in that wonderful encomium paid our Navy a little while ago by the gentleman from New York, Mr. MAGEE. I agree with everything that he said in tribute about what it has been, what it is, and what its officers and men always will be. What, then, is the question? The question is whether or not under the pending bill we are protecting the 5-5-3 program. Three factors enter into that program in large degree—ships, officers, and enlisted personnel. As for ships, your committee stand for 18 capital ships, 103 destroyers, and enough auxiliary craft to meet the situation under the agreement. Second, we stand for officers to man these ships, and no one challenges our conclusions. Third, with regard to the men, after the most careful analysis that your subcommittee could make, we believe we have taken care of the situation in comparison with that which will be provided for the navies of Great Britain and Japan. We fixed the enlisted personnel as that upon our ships upon the 1st of February last. We provided for shore stations and we added some seven thousand to take the place of men in transit, in hospitals, and away from posts of duty. So figured, we have shown that the enlisted personnel will be approximately 67,000 men.

Then we have cross checked on our figures. We took the complements that were prescribed for the ships eight years ago and increased these complements by men required by reason of new devices and new services and it gave us slightly less than 67,000 men. We went further than that. We subtracted the men now assigned to ships that are to be scrapped and to stations and duties that are to be abandoned from our present enlisted personnel of 96,000 and it gave us 66,000. Further than that, compared by the number of men on the ships making up the capital ships and other craft of Great Britain and Japan to-day, our figures are wholly adequate and comparable.

Why should we provide more? Those who oppose, who want to raise the number up to 87,000, say that we need more men. For what purpose? They do not say. What is the purpose? As has been said by the gentleman who preceded me, there is a certain very definite minimum for men during peace times to be upon the different battle craft. Upon the capital ships it is something like 900 or 1,000. We have gone beyond that. You would have something like thirteen or fourteen hundred, if you please, in time of war. Between that upper line and this lower line you will find something like three or four hundred men. Why should we have a war-time complement upon our ships or anything that would approach it?

What are these men? They are electricians, some of them; some of them machinists, mechanics, laborers. The electrician that is working in the electrical plant to-day in any city in this country is ready, for the most part, with experience necessary to which will be added a short preliminary training as he goes upon shipboard to care for the electrical work upon the battle craft. The man who is at the lathe, the man who is the engineer, the man who is the laborer performing work for which he will receive pay in civil life in any of the industrial concerns of this country is doing that which gives him the experience necessary with a very little adaptation to the work upon the ship that will make him capable of carrying on as a member of the American Navy in war or in the event of an emergency. That is all there is to the proposition. You have that great reservoir of men who are electricians, machinists, mechanics throughout this country and you can draw upon them, and in a few months they can be trained fully to meet the work upon shipboard.

Aside from the quotas we have provided, these men had better be employed in private industry.

You can not do that with officers. It takes time and years to train officers. Therefore, as to them, we have given the high number. You can not do that with regard to ships; it takes years to build them.

ADDED COST.

Several men have spoken to me in respect to the cost of the additional men under the proposed amendment. Figure it up any way you please, and the very minimum cost for the additional men in my judgment, and I think that rests upon estimates of the Navy Department, will fall somewhere near $57,000,000. That assumes that they will be placed in much the order that the personnel we have allowed are placed at this time. But if you intend to bring more of the destroyers into the service—add another 200, say, of the destroyers and put the men on those ships—you will immediately add to the cost, and instead of its being $57,000,000, it may be $60,000,000, $75,000,000, or even more, because vast quantities of money will have to be expended for fuel, for repairs, and for other purposes, to maintain these added craft.

THE RATIO OF UNITED STATES AND JAPAN.

There is another criticism I must mention. We are told that the enlisted personnel for Japan will be from 68,000 to 71,000 men. We are told that if we provide an enlisted personnel of 67,000 we will fall in ratio below the ratio of Japan. But gentlemen who so urge are proclaiming the 5-5-3 ratio and themselves apparently contend that 86,000 enlisted personnel for our Navy will maintain the ratio indicated as against the enlisted personnel of Japan.

Is it not apparent that there is sophistry in the contention of these gentlemen? They make the ratio depend entirely upon enlisted personnel when they consider the figures of 67,000 provided by the committee, while, on the other hand, when they consider the proposed figures of 86,000 they evidently include in measuring their ratio the number of ships and the number of officers that will be provided by the United States and that will be maintained by Japan. If gentlemen would be consistent, instead of supporting an amendment for 86,000 enlisted personnel, they would support an amendment that would bear a ratio of 5 to 3 to the Japanese alleged enlisted figure of 71,000, and they would be asking in their amendment that the enlisted personnel for the United States be 118,330.

OPPOSITION TO THE COMMITTEE FIGURES.

The most vigorous opponents of the proposed enlisted personnel offered by the committee of 67,000 are the officers of the Navy Department, on the one hand, and groups that represent navy yard and navy station activities upon the other. These latter groups are not limited to the Representatives upon this floor from the States where are located navy yard and other activities, but the opposition is reflected through chambers of commerce, commercial clubs, newspapers, and groups of workmen from cities where navy activities are found. During the last few days Representatives from States have come to me and asked me frankly whether or not, in my judgment, a reduction of the enlisted personnel to 67,000 men would reduce the activities of the navy yards. I have been compelled to tell these men that I believed it would; that the navy yard activities would necessarily shrink with the removal of naval craft as provided in the treaties, and with the abandonment, as we propose, of battle craft of various kinds that can serve no useful purpose. These men are between what they conceive to be two duties; they want to serve their country, they want to serve the districts they represent, where men are employed in navy yards; they hope that their two duties will not conflict, and, like the faithful Achates of old, they feel that they must serve those who have sent them here and whose Representatives they feel themselves to be. More than this, the members of your subcommittee have been appealed to by these workmen; they have been appealed to by business men and civic organizations to maintain their navy yards.

A year ago, when your subcommittee refused to appropriate $670,000,000, approximately, asked for by the department, and scaled the appropriation down in the House to approximately $390,000,000, the same fight was waged by people within the navy-yard districts. And not only did the groups to which I have referred urge upon the committee the carrying forward of projects that could not be defended except in war, but the wives of employees of navy yards themselves appealed to the committee. They urged the committee to permit the construction of naval craft for which we had no use in order, as they said, that their husbands might not be thrown out of work and the bread taken from the mouths of their children.

Gentlemen, the American people support the Limitation of Armament Conference and its results. The agreements we are entering into for the limitation of naval craft must necessarily decrease the building of ships as units of our Navy. Do gentlemen believe we should continue to build ships in order to sink them, or in order to salvage them? The agreements of the Limitation of Armament Conference will mean the discontinuance of guns in such quantities as had been anticipated; it will mean that guns of the largest caliber plan will not be built. Do gentlemen believe that notwithstanding all this we should vote the people's money for the building of guns, for the construction of naval materials, in order that employees of the navy yards may be continued in their employment? The appeal that was made to me not to throw these men out of work touches my deepest sympathy, but better a thousand times that we adhere to the plan of limiting our armament and permit these machinists and skilled employees to enter into profitable and productive activities in private life.

Mr. Chairman, those who urge these larger appropriations are sincere in their purpose, but as I see it, they are as incapable of getting the true and entire perspective of the situation as would be a man in the jury box if asked to deliberate upon a case in which he was involved, and so I say of the officers of the Navy. They are honest, they are sincere, but they are enthusiasts, and with that enthusiasm they want to see the Navy Department magnified beyond that which appears to be sustained by sound reason. The enthusiasm on the part of the Navy officers for their work is the same enthusiasm possessed by the successful officers of every bureau in every department of our Government, who somehow feel that their own particular work is after all the reason almost for the existence of government. If your Appropriations Committee were to accept the estimates of the heads of bureaus of the Navy Department and of all the other departments of our Government, the Budget for next year for the United States would be not less than $10,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, the other day when I discussed this bill, and again to-day, I referred to the conditions confronting us six and eight years ago and at this time. I have called attention to the financial, the military, the economic wealth, if you please, of Europe and the countries of Europe, and the same factors pertaining to the United States. I think you should have before you a chart that will indicate to you more graphically than words can tell it the ratio of economic strength, the ratio of burdens borne by the several nations, the ratio of the factors that will enter into just comparison between nations as you consider what should be the policy of the United States in the maintenance of a Navy. Therefore I want to place at this point in my remarks a table that will show the essential factors touching the leading nations of the world approximately eight years ago and touching them to-day:

	United States.		Great Britain.		France.		Japan.
Population	(1913) [1] 95,000,000	(1920) 105,710,620	(1911) 45,370,530	(1920) [1] 50,000,000	(1911) 39,601,509	(1920) [1] 40,000,000	(1913) 52,985,423	(1918) 57,070,935
Debts	(1913) $1,028,564,000	(1920) $24,062,510,000	(1913) $3,485,818,000	(1920) $37,910,000,000	(1913) $6,346,249,000	(1920) $46,025,000,000	(1913) $1,241,997,000	(1920) $1,300,000,000
Army	(1914) 105,032	(1922-23) [2] 126,000	(1914-15) 181,000	(1922)	(1914) [3] 790,000	(1922)	(1914) [1] 250,000	(1922) [1] 250,000
Navy: Tons built	(1914) 765,133		(1914) 2,157,850		(1914) 688,840		(1914) 519,640
Do	(1922) 1,285,343		(1922) 1,787,932		(1922) 538,442		(1922) 584,255
Tons built and building program	(1922) 2,063,173		(1922) 1,984,252		(1922) 606,842		(1922) 1,398,642

	Italy.		Russia.		Germany.		Austria.
Population	(1914) 35,238,997	(1918) 36,740,000	(1912) [1] 171,059,900	(1920)	(1910) 64,925,993	(1920)	(1914) [1] 50,000,000	(1920) .....
Debts	(1913) $2,921,153,000	(1920) $18,330,000,000	(1913) $4,537,861,000	(1920)	(1913) $1,194,052,000	(1920)	(1913) $2,152,490,000	(1920) .....
Army	(1914) 304,672	(1922)	(1913) 1,200,000 to 1,800,000	(1922) 1,000,000	(1913) [4] 790,985	(1922)	(1913) 424,258	(1922) .....
Navy: Tons built	(1914) 283,460		(1914) 270,861		(1914) 951,713		1914)
Do	(1922) 340,669		.....		.....		.....
Tons built and building program	(1922) 383,219		.....		.....		.....

[1] Estimated. [2] Approximately as carried in House military appropriation bill. [3] Including colonials. [4] Peace Army.

WHOM DO YOU FEAR?

Now, I have only a couple of minutes more. Gentlemen, the question has been asked before, of whom are you afraid as a Nation? I pointed out the other day the different nations of the world, their condition eight years ago, and their condition to-day. Let me ask the question again, Of whom are you afraid? Are you afraid as you look across the water to Great Britain, the only country that has a navy comparable to ours? There is a country where every individual, man, woman, and child, is under an indebtedness to-day, owing, by their Government, of from three to four times per capita the indebtedness of the United States. Are you afraid of France? France, poor, stricken France! As you walk down the streets of her villages or go through the country and see her thousands of wounded men, with the country under a load to-day that is five or six times per capita the indebtedness of the United States, do you fear her? Go to Italy and you find another country similar to France. Go to Germany and Austria, with no navies; countries that are practically on the verge of bankruptcy. Or is it Russia that you fear, a country that was a powerful nation eight years ago, and yet to-day a country that is financially bankrupt; a country, if you please, of splendid people, dominated and impoverished to-day through a cruel and tyrannical minority. Gentlemen, do you fear that country to which we are sending from our abundance the bread and butter that her people may not stave? [Applause.] Whom do you fear?

In the other direction, is it China, a better friend of the United States to-day than ever in times past? Is it Japan that you fear—a country with half the population of the United States, a country with a navy that is about 3 to 5 compared with ours; a country that does not have the material wealth that can be found in some of the great American States of our Republic? Now, gentlemen, whom do you fear?

One word in conclusion. If the Limitation of Armament Conference is to bear the fruit we fondly hope, we must show the world that we respect the letter and the spirit of the agreement. There is no prohibition in the agreement touching various kinds of battle craft, yet for us to engage in building such craft would be to proclaim that though we may keep the letter of the treaty we shall forget the spirit. There is no limitation against submarines, so far as their construction may be concerned, and yet in my judgment we would blight the fruit of the conference were we to compete in submarine construction. The agreement of the conference carries dual responsibility; it carries responsibility to the nations of the world besides our own, and it carries responsibility to our people. We must keep faith with foreign countries by refusing to go above the 5-5-3 agreement. We must keep faith with the people of the United States by refusing to go below, except as we may do so through the concert of supplemental agreements. This I hope we may be able to do.

Gentlemen, I believe we have given you a bill that respects the treaty and that will challenge the admiration not only of our own people but of foreign countries as well.

I heard the address of Premier Briand at the second, I believe, of the Limitation of Armament Conferences. He said, in substance, that peace between nations is not insured by destroying arms and tearing down forts, it is not insured by scrapping ships; there must be more than that, said this eminent statesman; there must be the will for peace.

We have given you a bill, in my judgment, that maintains at once the dignity of our country, the dignity of our Navy, the dignity of our place in the ratio of navies, but that must be calculated to let the nations of the world know that with the American people there is the will for peace. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, as I understood the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], in the very eloquent address that he has just delivered, and which he is so capable of always making, he said that one man's guess at the present time is as good as another's in the distribution of the men to be used by the Navy. On the one hand, then, we find the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] are doing part of the guessing, and, on the other hand, we find that the department itself, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of State, and the President of the United States, the ones which you are to put in the scales, are also guessing. Now, if that is in the form of a guess, I for one want to be on the side of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

It seemed to me that this debate was over yesterday when a letter was read from the President of the United States stating that anything less than 86,000 men in the personnel of the Navy would not be sufficient to keep up what we have agreed to as a 5-5-3 limitation among nations. So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we not only have it as our duty toward the administration itself but, further than that, and far above that, we are under obligations to the administration as part of the agreement among the great powers. We can not afford in any sense to have this question settled on other than the basis which the Government itself desires. And when one speaks of using any financial consideration, it seems to me that we can almost, from the way in which money has been spent, not only in this Congress but in preceding Congresses, regard this difference of $14,000,000 between the two figures as presented to us as in the light of practically nothing more than a financial bagatelle. It is true that $14,000,000 is a lot of money, but in proportion to the amount that Congress has been spending for other purposes it is very little with which to maintain the integrity among nations. [Applause.]

Why should we speak of "being afraid" of some other nation? For my part, this additional number is not required in anticipation of any trouble with other nations, but rather that we may continue to maintain an equality with them in line with the recent limitation agreement.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, many of the arguments made here to-day and advanced to the Members of this House are followed by the questions: Of whom are you afraid? Who are we going to fight? In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, let me say that it does not make any difference who we are going to fight. We are not afraid of any nation in the world. We never were afraid of any nation in the world, because heretofore we have had a Navy provided by former Congresses of the United States made up of red-blooded men who never measured the American dollar with the lives of the young men who make up our Navy and who would not be swayed from their duty. [Applause.]

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Can the gentleman tell me whom England and Japan are afraid of? They are keeping up their navies.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the only one that England or Japan will ever be afraid of is the American Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I venture to say, coming as I do from one of the districts which has been referred to as having in it a navy yard, that I will be charged with selfish motives and trespassing on the rights of this House when I advance in a humble way my reasons for advocating a larger Navy. I want to say that our motives are just as honest and just as clean as the motives of those who are advocating the other side of the question. We are not looking upon it from a selfish point of view, because we in those districts have seen the Navies of the United States grow to the size that they were during the late war. We have seen the boys from your districts in the Middle West, we have seen them from the far West, come to the eastern coast, there to make up the red-blooded men of the American Navy, and there they were received by men who had been trained in the service, men who were a credit to the Nation. They were experts, Mr. Chairman; yes, experts of the Navy. I am willing to follow in the wake of those men who have given their lives to the building up of the American Navy.

I am willing to follow men like Admiral Coontz rather than my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and I am willing to follow Admiral Taylor rather than the distinguished leader from Wyoming, as to what I think should constitute the Navy of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

Mr. VARE. And I yield him the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote my own honest convictions on this bill and I am going to vote for 86,000 men. [Applause.] In doing this I am very glad that I am supporting the recommendations of the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and every single naval official who has voiced an opinion concerning the matter. I am not ashamed to be found in this company.

Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to vote for every dollar of appropriation that is necessary in order to maintain our Navy on an exact equality, both in ships and personnel, with the navy of the British Empire and in the ratio of 5 to 3 in comparison with the navy of Japan. I understand the Congress of the United States is entirely within its rights under the treaties adopted at the recent conference in Washington in providing exactly that kind of a Navy. From all the information I can get—and I have sought information wherever it was available—I do not believe the present bill, which is being so ably defended by the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, will give us that kind of a Navy. I understand that this bill gives us not more than 13 battleships with full complement, when we are entitled under the treaty to have 18, and the British Empire is going to have 18. I understand that this bill will give us not more than 10 cruisers, when we are entitled to have 13. I understand that this bill will give us not more than 65 destroyers in full commission, when we now have more than 300, and the very least number that the Secretary of the Navy has recommended is 103 in full commission and 23 in half commission. I understand that this bill will give us a total enlisted personnel of only 67,000, when the British Empire will have not less than 104,000 and Japan will have not less than 68,000. These figures are obtained through the Navy direct from our naval attachés at London and Tokyo. If any other or different figures are given, they seem to be based on nothing more dependable than common rumor or newspaper report. It is therefore my belief that this bill, if enacted into law, will inevitably reduce our Navy in point of efficiency and strength far below the British Navy and probably somewhat below the navy of Japan. It is because of this belief that I shall vote for the motion to increase the enlisted personnel to 86,000 men.

The gentleman from Wyoming, the distinguished leader of the majority, asks with much dramatic effect why it is necessary to accept as gospel truth the recommendation of the naval experts. I think there is no necessity for it. I know of nobody who has suggested doing so. What I do say, however, is this: I see no sense whatever in spending weeks in the examination of experts before the committee if these experts are all to be regarded as prejudiced witnesses, whose testimony in the end is not to be relied upon at all, and whose recommendations and conclusions are to be summarily thrown on the ash heap. Doctors, of course, sometimes make mistakes. But, after all, in time of sickness most of us go to a doctor rather than to a blacksmith. I want to call attention to the fact that these naval experts, whose recommendations seem to be regarded with so much distrust and suspicion, and whose testimony is thought to be so wholly unreliable, are the very same men upon whom our delegates to the arms conference relied entirely in all matters involving expert opinion or advice in framing the treaties. Our brilliant Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, and Senator Lodge and Senator Underwood and Mr. Root found them to be entirely trustworthy. I wonder what has happened in the short space of a few weeks that the chairman of this committee now finds himself unable to trust these same men to advise him as to the proper number of men to serve as the complement of a battleship. I confess I do not exactly understand.

The distinguished leader of the minority, the gentleman from Tennessee, has just told us that he sees no obligation upon us growing out of the treaty to maintain a Navy in accordance with the so-called 5-5-3 ratio. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman on that proposition. But, Mr. Chairman, I say that we do have an obligation to maintain our relative position in exact accord with the terms of the treaty. That obligation arises out of the oath which each one of us took in front of this desk. Our duty, as I look at it with reference to this matter, has a twofold aspect. We owe a duty to the rest of the world with whom we have entered into treaty relations to keep at all times within the limitations prescribed by the treaties. But in addition to that we owe a duty to our own people not to allow the fighting strength of the American Navy to fall below the position accorded us in the treaty. I have a very firm conviction that the American people expect this Congress to do its full duty in both aspects as I have described them.

There is not a man in this House who does not know that if our delegates at the arms conference had been willing to accept a position of inferiority to any other nation in the world in respect to naval strength, the treaties they formulated would never have been ratified by the Senate or by the people, and they themselves would have been quickly swept into oblivion by a thoroughly aroused and offended public opinion. If that is so, it seems to me equally clear that the same public opinion, when it understands the true situation, will condemn any man or any party that is responsible for the weak, timid, pusillanimous policy now for the first time proposed in a great naval bill in the American Congress that would put our Navy into a permanent position of inferiority among the naval powers of the world. I said "permanent," Mr. Chairman, and I use the word advisedly, because it must be plain to everybody that if once we accept a second or third rate position it is going to be most difficult, if not, indeed, impossible, at a later time to take our rightful place. Any subsequent action by Congress looking in that direction will at once excite among the other powers the greatest suspicion, if, indeed, it be not regarded as a hostile act.

Mr. Chairman, I was a strong believer in the so-called Limitation of Arms Conference. I saw in it a real effort along what seemed to be perfectly sane and practical lines to put a stop to the race for naval supremacy among the nations, that was bound to be an ever increasing burden upon every people and nation that participated in it. I believed then and I believe now that the only practical, sensible way for the nations to disarm is by agreement. I most assuredly do not believe in disarmament by example. I am unwilling to see my country disarm either on land or sea as long as all the other nations of the world remain armed to the teeth.

I was proud to see my country take the first step toward disarmament. How was she able to do it? It was only because she had at the moment a Naval Establishment potentially, at least, the most powerful in the world. When the right time comes I want to see her take another step in the same direction, but her success then, as before, will depend upon her having a strong, efficient Navy, the equal of any that sails the seas. If we are to expect others to follow, we must see to it that we maintain our position of leadership. Any other policy spells inevitable failure.

I would go very far indeed to bring about a condition in the world wherein war would no longer be tolerated and when any nation that engaged in it would be considered an outlaw nation. But, Mr. Chairman, while that is true, it is also true that I will never, if I know it, favor or vote for any measure the effect of which is to put the control of American naval policy into the hands of the little group of extreme pacifists that seem to follow the leadership of that other son of Michigan whose chief title to distinction lies in the fact that he has put the "tin Lizzie" into thousands of American homes. So far as I am concerned, I will never vote for any policy or any measure the inevitable effect of which is to cripple and hamstring and dismantle our Navy in order to meet the views of men who, however noble and fine may be their ideals for their country, fail utterly to grasp the fundamental truth that such ideals amount to nothing in the present state of civilization unless we possess the will and power to make them effective.

I appeal to you, my colleagues, not to cripple and destroy our splendid Navy. Its noble traditions are the pride and glory of America. It is and must always remain our first line of defense. It is both our right and our duty to keep it on a basis of equality with the best. In the name of John Paul Jones and Perry and Decatur and Farragut and Dewey I ask you to-day to maintain that right and perform that duty. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any event of the past half century has met with such universal approval as the achievement of Secretary Hughes and our American representatives at the disarmament conference called by President Harding, which convened in Washington on the 12th day of November last. I believe that 95 per cent of the American people are in favor of some kind of an international understanding to prevent a race in armaments and to minimize the dangers of war. Many Americans were in favor of the League of Nations for this reason. The last election, however, demonstrated that a vast majority of the American people were afraid that the covenant of the League of Nations went too far and threatened to involve this country in European conflicts. I am persuaded that the overwhelming sentiment among those who opposed the League of Nations is in favor of an understanding, such as President Harding and the American peace delegates brought about through the disarmament conference.

Prior to the World War Great Britain stood first in naval strength among the nations of the earth. Great Britain was the mistress of the seas, and under the protection of her navy her commerce entered with security into every port around the world. Next to England came the navy of Germany, and under its protection the commerce of Germany became a strong rival to the commerce of Great Britain, while the commerce of the United States, lacking the protection of an adequate Navy, was greatly retarded in its development.

Our representatives at the Disarmament Conference succeeded in getting an amicable arrangement whereby the navies of the three great naval powers should be limited, and providing that the navy of Great Britain at the end of 10 years should be no greater than that of the United States, while the size of the navy of Japan, as compared with that of the United States, should bear the ratio of 3 to 5.

What was it that made this achievement possible? What was it which made England willing to surrender her proud position as mistress of the seas and to consent to a limitation of her armaments which made it possible for the United States, without excessive expenditures, to have a Navy equal to that of any nation upon the globe? What was it that made Japan, proud as she is, with an extensive navy building program, submit to a naval ratio of 5 to 3?

It was the fact that America had undertaken with determination to carry out a program which by 1926 would give America the greatest Navy afloat, coupled with the further fact that both England and Japan knew that the resources of the United States were such as to insure victory for America in an international race in armaments. I believe that every patriotic American feels that the establishment of this naval ratio by amicable agreement—a ratio which makes the naval strength of the United States at a moderate cost equal to that of Great Britain and vastly superior to Japan—was the greatest achievement of this age. What would the American people have said of the work of our delegates at the arms conference if they had consented to a naval strength between Great Britain and the United States upon a ratio of 5 to 3 and a naval strength of the United States less than that of Japan? And yet that is the thing which the bill now under consideration proposes to do.

Why do I make this statement? What evidence have I to sustain it? The chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, and our leader, Mr. MONDELL, declare that the provision of the bill providing for an enlisted naval personnel of 67,000 men is fully adequate to take care of our Navy's needs. But what are the facts? Great Britain has provided in her naval budget for enlisted personnel, exclusive of marines, amounting at the end of the next fiscal year to 98,000 men. Japan has provided in her naval budget for next year for a personnel of 68,252 men, and yet this committee tells us that an enlisted personnel of 67,000 men for the American Navy will maintain our ratio equal to that of Great Britain and as 5 to 3 when compared with the navy of Japan. The fallacy of such a contention is obvious. To begin with, the training of England's naval personnel is far superior to that of ours, because her enlistment is for a period of 12 years. The training of Japan's naval personnel is superior to ours, because her enlistment is for a period of six years, while the enlistment of the personnel in our Navy is for an average period of three years.

On June 3, 1921, out of 119,000 men in the American Navy, 98,000 had less than 4 years' experience and 87,000 of them were less than 24 years of age. Experience shows that it takes at least one year to make any sort of a sailor out of enlisted men and that it takes at least three years' training to prepare men for efficient service in operating a battleship. Furthermore, our naval records for the last year show that we had 55,000 new enlistments of young men who had never seen naval service, while we had only 16,000 reenlistments.

Thus it will be observed that at least one-third of our enlisted men must necessarily be in training all the time and thus incapable of active naval service, while a considerable percentage of the remaining two-thirds must be engaged in training the one-third raw material. This handicap does not apply to the British and Japanese Navies under their long enlistments.

Thus it is evident to any reasonable man that the contentions of the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan] and the floor leader [Mr. MONDELL] that this bill provides for our complement under the terms of the treaty is totally without foundation. Battleships do not make navies, and the finest battleship in the world is of no value as a fighting force unless it is manned by trained, intelligent, and skillful seamen. You can not have a 5-3 ratio between the United States and Japan so long as Japan has 68,252 men, seasoned and trained under long enlistment, while the United States has only 67,000 men, one-third of whom are not trained at all. And you can not maintain a 5-5 ratio between Great Britain and the United States so long as Great Britain has 98,000 enlisted men, seasoned and trained under 12-year enlistments, while the United States has only 67,000 enlisted seamen, one-third of whom are not trained at all.

If we are to keep up our complement and help to insure peace by maintaining our ratio with England and Japan, as provided in the treaty, we can not do so with a personnel of enlisted men such as that which is provided in the bill now under consideration. If we are going to disarm alone and ignore the splendid ratio which caused the American people to hail the achievements of our delegates at the arms conference as a great success, then what did the accomplishments of the conference amount to? If we do not maintain the strength allotted to us, in order that America's views and ideals might be respected over the world, then what advantage was there in having a conference? No other nation is going to interfere with us in disarming alone. We had a right to do that without a conference. But the American people know that to do this means to invite trouble, and I do not believe that they will approve of any such program.

The American people have learned by experience in recent years that unpreparedness invites conflict. They have learned that such a condition of our Army and Navy, coupled with an election in this country, strongly declaring in favor of peace, regardless of the insults which we endured, resulted in our being hurled into a world conflict which cost this country $40,000,000,000 and 70,000 lives, and placed a responsibility upon this Government to care for sick and wounded soldiers amounting to more than $500,000,000 a year.

I do not believe the American people want this mistake repeated. I believe that they approve of the achievements of President Harding and Secretary Hughes. I believe that they feel that a great step has been made toward permanent international peace by agreement, and I believe they want us to keep our complement up to its full strength, as Great Britain and Japan are doing, until the time comes when further declarations by agreement can be made. If we ignore the provisions of the treaty and take our place in naval strength in the rear of Great Britain and Japan, it is reasonable to assume that at the end of the 10-year period the agreement for the limitation of arms will not be renewed and we will again be off on another international race in the construction of machines for war.

I am convinced not only from the facts which I have presented to you that the provisions of this bill are totally inadequate to provide for our complement under the arms conference, but even if I did not have these facts I would vote to increase the enlisted personnel of the Navy to 86,000 men. Why do I say this? The chairman of the subcommittee, who served for some years upon the Naval Committee of the House, has declared that the enlisted strength of 67,000 men is adequate. The Republican floor leader [Mr. MONDELL] has declared the same thing. Why should I not follow them? I will tell you why. Because the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, consisting of Members of this Congress who have devoted years of study to the naval problems of this country, say that we can not keep up our complement and maintain the ratio provided by the treaty with less than 86,000 enlisted men; because the Secretary of the Navy and the naval experts who have devoted their lives to the study of naval problems and who so successfully advised our delegates to the peace conference tell us that we ought to have at least 96,000 enlisted men and that we can not maintain the 18 first-line battleships allotted to us by the treaty, together with the necessary auxiliary equipment, with less than 86,000 men; and because the Secretary of State, who so successfully led our delegation at the peace conference in the greatest achievement of world peace yet known, and who, as the head of the State Department, together with the Secretary of the Navy, is in a position to have in his possession information upon international questions which are not and can not be available to Members of Congress, urges that we must not provide for less than 86,000 men; and because the President of the United States, who is acclaimed by the nations of the earth as the great leader for international peace, and who is in a position to have information and to understand far better than we the complicated angles of this great international problem, said to us in a letter yesterday:

> I shall be greatly disappointed, and I believe the country will be greatly disappointed, if the appropriation, to which the Navy must and will adhere, is reduced to a point where the limitation of enlisted men and apprentices is below 86,000.
>
> Ultimately, perhaps, the lower figures proposed may be reached, and I hope it will be possible through later international concert, but the trend toward peace and security ought to be more firmly established before going beyond the limitation to which we were gladly committed at the international conference.

There is no official of this Government more insistent upon national economy than President Harding; no one more determined that the tax burdens of the people shall be reduced. It was under his leadership that this great achievement for peace was accomplished; it was under his guiding hand that this international race in armaments was stopped. He is in a position to understand better than we the purposes and inclinations of the other nations of the earth. No man in this Government carries greater responsibility than he; no man in this country is more patriotic than he; no man in the Government is more concerned about the welfare of the Nation and its future than he. He is the commander in chief of the Navy, and when he tells me, as he did upon yesterday, that he will be greatly disappointed if we fail to provide for an enlisted naval personnel of 86,000 men, I, for one, will not cast my vote to hamper him in his fight for world peace. He is the head of our Nation, the leader of my party, and when he appeals to me, as he did upon yesterday, you may depend upon me to respond. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to recognize any gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. VARE. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How much time has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]?

Mr. GALLIVAN. A little over 30 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I suggest that the gentleman use some of his time.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I would prefer to have a vote, but I yield myself three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts for such time as he desires to use.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I approach once more the consideration of this tremendously important bill with some fear and trembling. In the general debate we progressed as one happy family until the closing hour; then almost in the closing minute the motives of the men who come from the big cities on the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast who advocate a larger number of enlisted men in this bill were questioned. I come from a city which has within its limits the oldest and the finest navy yard in all the land. It has helped to make the history of this Republic, and we in Boston are proud of its achievements and glory in its record. But do you men believe that the three Congressmen from Boston who favor the larger number of men proposed in the amendment are interested solely because of that navy yard? Does any man within the sound of my voice believe that we are made of that kind of stuff? Yet our motives were attacked openly, and, as I say, it is with fear and trembling that I dare return to make another appeal for the flag. [Applause.] The other day I told the House of the newest navy in our land, the prohibition navy. I see, by the way, that it got into operation yesterday and it fired its first shot, and it was a wet shot. [Laughter.] I said then that this Congress was at all times ready to vote millions for prohibition, but in this hour pennies for the flag. What of it if it is going to cost $47,000,000 more to put this amendment on the bill? What of it? Is it the cost of your Navy that you are sitting here to estimate? Is it the cost or is it the character of your Navy and the kind of a Navy you are going to have? Oh, let me say to my friend King KELLEY of Michigan, whom I love [laughter and applause], I want to read to him some lines from Rudyard Kipling. I should have opened my brief speech with these lines. I know he will applaud.

No doubt but ye are the people—your throne is above the king's,
Whoso speaks in your presence must say acceptable things:
Bowing the head in worship, bending the knee in fear—
Bringing the word well smoothen—such as a king should hear.

Such as a king should hear!

I do not want to take up any more time of this House, but this is going to be my last word on this proposition. I was ready at noon to submit the question to a vote without any further debate, and I appeal to the men of Congress to realize that at no time in their career, in my judgment, have they had a more important question handed to them; and I appeal to them to go slow before they follow the recommendation of a committee of five men, coming from the States so well pictured as my colleague from New York [Mr. MAGEE] pictured them. In closing again I go back to Rudyard Kipling, and this is for the whole House:

No doubt but ye are the people—absolute, strong, and wise;
Whatever your heart has desired ye have not withheld from your eyes.
On your own heads, in your own hands, the sin and the saving lies!

[Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, our genial and distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] in the speech which he has just concluded, made one of those striking statements for which he is talented when he said, "Congress is willing to vote millions for the enforcement of prohibition but pennies for the support of the Navy." In the first place, the genial gentleman from Massachusetts might as well recognize that prohibition is now a part of the Constitution of the United States, and Congress, which is sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution, is going to appropriate whatever money is necessary to enforce the prohibition laws. All gentlemen who are advocating light wines and beer and who would like to see an abandonment of efforts to enforce prohibition might as well recognize the eighteenth amendment as part of the law of the land and join hands to bring about its effective enforcement. In the second place, the gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken when he says Congress is only "spending pennies for the Navy." He should recall that if this pending naval appropriation bill is passed without any additions, coupled with the amount already appropriated for the support of the Army, the Government of the United States will be appropriating for the fiscal year 1923 upwards of $500,000,000 for the support of the Army and the Navy. And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts says, "What does it matter if you add $47,000,000 more?" Well, gentlemen of the Congress, what does it matter? Is it no matter if you add fifty million more dollars tax burden to the already bended back of the taxpayer? I believe I recall that some one has said that there is one thing that is stronger and more powerful than armies, and that is an idea when its hour has come. The hour for the relief of struggling humanity from the crushing burdens of military and naval armaments has come, and happily it has fallen to the lot of America to lead the way. [Applause.]

It is not the first time that the forces of destiny have bestowed upon us the power of a great opportunity. Our Revolutionary fathers of 1776, when they declared by the pen of Thomas Jefferson that all men are created equal and endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, and that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, set in motion forces which have crumbled thrones and empires and have scattered the emblems of despotism and tyranny like as a sand storm scatters before it the dust of the desert. Those who have visited Washington's home at Mount Vernon will remember that hanging on the wall of one of the halls is the key to the Bastile which was sent by Lafayette to Washington through Thomas Paine. In the glass case where the key rests is the note which Paine wrote to Washington upon delivery of the key. It reads thus:

Our very good friend, the Marquis de Lafayette, has intrusted to my care the key of the Bastile and a drawing handsomely framed representing the demolitions of that detestable prison as a present to Your Excellency, of which his letter will more particularly inform. I feel myself happy in being the person through whom the marquis has conveyed the only trophy of the spoils of despotism and the first ripe fruits of American principles translated into Europe to his great master and patron. When he mentioned to me the present he intended you my heart leaped with joy. It is something so truly in character that no remarks can illustrate it and is more happily expressive of his remembrance of his American friends than any letters can convey. That the principles of America opened the Bastile is not to be doubted and therefore the key comes to the right place.

When the news reached England of the fall of the Bastile the great statesman Fox, perceiving its significance for liberty, exclaimed:

How much is this the greatest event that ever happened in the struggle for liberty and how much the best.

And now, at another epoch in the world's history, America is again privileged to lead the way, and by her own unselfish example at the recent Limitation of Armament Conference has laid out a path for other nations to follow which they can not afford to ignore. The American people heartily approve and support the work of that conference and expect Congress to give effect to its program by real reductions in expenditures. If Congress votes the increase in naval personnel, as proposed by the pending amendment, from 67,000 enlisted men to 86,000 men, and follows it up by increases in other items of appropriation made necessary by the increase in personnel, will we be giving to the American people any substantial reduction in naval expenditures? I say no. Gentlemen, we must avoid that sort of a situation. The people are entitled to have some of the burdens lifted.

NATIONS SHOULD PAY AS MUCH ATTENTION TO TRAINING FOR PEACE AS IS PAID TO TRAINING FOR WAR.

Now, I am not laboring under any delusions as to the effect and benefits of limitation of armaments. I realize that it is not a sure and certain guarantee of peace. Causes of war run deeper than armaments. Men went to war long before gunpowder and firearms were invented, and when there were only clubs and sticks and crude spears for weapons. There must be a moral reformation, a universal will and purpose for peace among the nations of the world before we may expect permanent peace. I would hardly be optimistic enough to say that we have reached that millennium yet. But while I realize that humanity is yet very far from the perfect ideal, I would hate to see its shortcomings and imperfections made the basis for a do-nothing policy.

A policy of just sit back and say human nature is selfish and men are grasping, and therefore nothing can be done except to let things drift along until another crash comes and the world is plunged into another war more horrible than the one through which we have just passed. No; civilization has never made any progress that way.

We rise by things that are under our feet;
By what we have mastered of good and gain;
By the pride deposed and the passion slain
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.

A nation should pay as much attention to training for peace as it does in training for war. If the Neitches and Bernhardis and Kaiser Wilhelms of Germany had devoted their attention to developing a spirit of peace and good will among their people instead of a harsh and intolerant military spirit, in all probability the world would have been spared the horrible holocaust of the recent war.

One of the best ways to train for peace is to lay aside some of the burdens of military and naval armaments and enter into treaties of arbitration and understandings with other nations to which we can resort when the war clouds do threaten, instead of resorting to an appeal to the sword. Men who take time to think and nations who take time to think, usually find that they have acted the part of wisdom. The man who is always thinking about achieving his rights and nothing about fulfilling his obligations is likely to come to grief, and the rule is not different among nations. So while I want to see the United States protected in all of its rights, I am equally anxious that it recognize and fulfill all of its obligations.

The agreements entered into at the recent Limitation of Armament Conference are distinctly forward steps in training the world for peace, therefore I favor observing these agreements in letter and in spirit, and it is for this reason that I will vote against the amendment to make the proposed increase in naval personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has 40 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is my unalterable determination to uphold the hands of the President of the United States, of his great Secretary, and of the American delegates to the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments, by voting for that reduction in naval personnel and naval cost contemplated by the treaty they negotiated, and faithfully reflected in the provisions of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is true that the Washington conference does not bind us in the matter of personnel or cost of the Navy. It does bind us in the number of effective fighting ships. It is true that we could maintain our present personnel of 96,000 enlisted men; we could increase that to the 120,000 which the naval board recommends; we could maintain our present expenditures, we could increase them, as the Naval Establishment desires, without violating the letter of the treaty. But is there anyone so dull, so insensible to national obligations as to believe that we could do that or anything approaching it without violating the treaty in every phase and factor of its essential principles, without making it a mere scrap of paper begrudgingly adhered to in the letter, flagrantly violated in the spirit? [Applause.]

Gentlemen express a desire to follow the naval experts. How far do they expect to follow them? The officials of the Naval Establishment, civil and military, have never budged from their insistence upon a Navy of from 94,000 to 120,000 enlisted men, or qualified their demand for naval expenditures as great or greater than those of the days before the ratification of the treaty. Is this to be wondered at? Not at all. I challenge anyone to find in all the history of the world a time or place when a professional fighting establishment ever voluntarily or willingly reduced its costs or forces by a single man or a single dollar. [Applause.]

We have heard much of the importance of maintaining a treaty fleet, 18 battleships in full commission and their necessary auxiliaries. With that thought and purpose I am in complete accord, and it is accomplished by the provisions of this bill. There was no other thought or purpose in drafting it; but, Mr. Chairman, there is a wide difference between the reasonable and proper maintenance of a treaty fleet and the continuation of the unhappy and unholy competitive naval race for supremacy which it was hoped the Washington treaty had brought to an end. [Applause.]

If it were true—which, in my opinion, it is not—that Great Britain was, with her wide-flung empire, maintaining under arms a few more men than we, must our sole effort and endeavor be to hunt out and count the last man she has in order that we may match him with another? If that is the theory on which we are to carry out the treaty, then it were just as well that the treaty had never been negotiated. Save for the fact that we have surrendered and propose to sink our finest fighting ships, we have come out of the conference just where the nations went in—suspicious and determined to outrace and outclass each other. If it be true that Japan, following the usual oriental custom of having two men do the work of one, is maintaining in training or otherwise a few more than the forty or fifty thousand men which might properly man her fleet, would that fact alone justify us in maintaining a larger establishment than is necessary to keep our treaty Navy in fighting trim?

Mr. Chairman, this committee undertook in good faith the task of preparing a bill which, while making sufficient provisions for our Navy under the treaty, does at the same time—and what is equally important—translate into legislation and in the figures of appropriations the spirit and purpose of the treaty in the reduction of naval costs and naval establishments. Notwithstanding the committee's best efforts, this bill, without any increases, with the necessary additions which must be made to it in pay and in provision for aircraft and for continuing construction, will involve a cost of upward of $300,000,000, as compared with a naval cost of less than $150,000,000 for the years immediately preceding the Great War. No one knows how much more must be added to this cost through the cancellation of contracts on ships now building and to be abandoned. Some have placed it as high as $50,000,000. I trust that figure is excessive, and yet it is possible and would result in an outlay of approximately $350,000,000 for the Navy the first full year after the treaty and within a few millions of the cost of the Navy before the ratification of the treaty.

That is the bill as it is now before us. Add the 19,000 men proposed and the cost increases by from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000, or to at least $400,000,000; or about the cost of the Navy this year. Add another $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, as your naval experts will all demand when this bill goes to the Senate, and your naval costs and your naval personnel will be greater after the treaty is ratified than it was before. This is no fanciful suggestion; this is what I know to be not only in the minds of naval men but, unhappily, I regret to say, in the minds of men on this floor. I am for a treaty Navy but I am also for the spirit of the treaty. [Applause.]

The crowning achievement of our great President and of our great Secretary of State, the crowning glory of this administration is the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments and the treaties resulting from it—if they be adhered to in their spirit and their purpose. It is our duty, regretful as we are, that we may seem to differ from the view of those in high places, here and now to sustain the President and his administration, to meet the expectations of the people of the country by crystallizing into law and appropriations the purpose and triumphant accomplishment of the conference through the reduction in the Navy and naval expenditures proposed by this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if we make the increases that are now asked of us we shall raise the cost of the Navy and the Naval Establishment higher after the ratification of the treaty than before it, and shall in so doing violate the spirit of the treaty we profess to desire to observe. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, ordinarily I have great respect for the judgment and opinion of the gentleman from Wyoming. Generally I follow his judgment as the floor leader of my party, but I can not follow him to-day. He has just told us that if we pass this amendment and provide for 86,000 enlisted men in our Navy that we will thereby scrap the naval treaty which was but recently entered into at the Washington conference. He has so informed us notwithstanding the fact that the President of the United States has requested this number of men. Does the gentleman contend that the President, who has so successfully negotiated this treaty, now intends to scrap it? I wish to say to the gentleman from Wyoming that, so far as I am concerned, as to the effect of this amendment upon that treaty I prefer the judgment of the Secretary of State and the President of the United States. [Applause.]

The people of the great Middle West who furnished some two millions to our Army and Navy during the late war believe in the treaties negotiated at the Washington conference. They believe in the naval treaty and in maintaining the strength of our own Navy at the 5-5-3 ratio agreed upon. That ratio places our Navy as second to none in the world, and they want no Congress to change that position.

A navy is made up of ships, guns, and men, and one might almost say that the greatest of these is men. This treaty authorizes us to maintain a Navy based on 18 capital ships, placing us on a par with Great Britain and making us second to none among the naval powers of the world. In negotiating the treaty and providing for the necessary capital ships the question of the guns upon the ships was fully considered. The treaty therefore considered the first two elements—ships and guns—and it is up to this Congress to provide the necessary men to maintain that Navy and to keep it up to a high state of efficiency.

The bill before us does not provide a sufficient number of men. I have great confidence in the gentlemen in charge of this bill, but their statements are disputed by the naval officers, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of State, and the President of the United States. It seems to me that the preponderance of the evidence submitted before us is on the side of those in favor of this amendment for 86,000 men. [Applause.]

I want to make this further observation: If this Congress should adopt this bill as it is and fix the Navy enlisted personnel at 67,000, we would, in effect and for all practical purposes, fix that figure as a maximum for the full 10-year treaty period. For all practical purposes it would be impossible in the future to come in with a bill increasing that number, for the very moment that we did so it would be charged, and with some reason, that we were violating the spirit of the naval treaty by increasing its strength. To-day we are just commencing upon the first year of this treaty period. No such situation can now confront us in fixing the number of men for this year. With a Navy of 18 capital ships properly balanced we require some additional ships, such as two airplane carriers of 27,000 tons each. There is a bill before us authorizing the conversion of two battle cruisers now under construction—which construction is to be abandoned under the treaty—into two airplane carriers.

The construction of these and two more additional carriers is contemplated under the treaty. Furthermore, we should complete the 10 scout cruisers that are under construction. The Committee on Naval Affairs has recommended to the House the completion of these auxiliary ships, and their completion is necessary if we are to have a properly balanced Navy and to maintain our position as a coequal naval power of Great Britain.

Now, then, those ships have not yet been completed. No provision has been made in this bill for manning those ships with the proper number of men. When the ships are completed those ships will, of course, have to be manned with the proper complement of both officers and men. If, therefore, we now limit our Navy to 67,000 enlisted men, where are we going to get the men to man these additional and most necessary units to our Navy? If after fixing the Navy at 67,000 enlisted men we then seek to raise that number, it would be claimed at once that we were violating the spirit of the naval agreement. It seems to me, therefore, with this conflict of opinion and conflict of figures, and the necessary additions to the Navy that must be provided for, that we had better play safe and adopt the amendment fixing the Navy at 86,000 men, for if that proves to be more than sufficient in the future it will be easy for us to reduce that figure, whereas if 67,000 men proves to be too few it will be embarrassing and exceedingly difficult to raise that figure.

Mr. Chairman, to me there is but one thing to do, and that is to support the amendment for a Navy in accordance with the desires of the President, backed up by his able Secretary of State. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, one who has not participated with the committee in the formation of this bill can only give impressions rather than produce any very solid information on the proposition. My own impression is, Mr. Chairman, that in framing this bill, with a purpose of cutting expenses, a very worthy purpose, the committee have cut too deep—they have cut the Army too fine and the Navy too fine. The questions have been asked on the floor, Where are we expecting trouble? Who will make war on us? We can not tell where trouble is coming from. In 1912 nobody would have believed that it was possible to have a war with Germany in 1917. We are in this position: That this country is a very rich country. Human nature is the same all over the world. We have the accumulation of the gold of the world. We have lots of property, lots of riches, and lots of prosperity as compared with other countries. Undoubtedly we excite the envy of other powers, as wealth and success always excite envy. The possibility always exists that we may find ourselves in trouble from unexpected sources. So far as I am concerned, I am going to vote for a Navy that I think is as near as possible to the limit of what we are permitted to maintain under the treaty of the Conference on Limitation of Armament. We ought not to fall behind the naval strength of any other power. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MONTOYA].

Mr. MONTOYA. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of an efficient Navy. It happened that during the war I had three of my boys in the service. One of them was in the Navy. He was shifted from training in California to Hampton Roads. He wrote to me from there and said, "Father, I have been here two days and I have looked all around, and I see over in the bay 12 or 15 American warships and cruisers. I shall be on one of them in a few days, and I assure you that I know that we will lick the whole world." [Laughter and applause.]

I want to keep faith with my boy and I want to keep faith with the American people. I shall vote for a bigger Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLINE].

Mr. KLINE of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oregon and the gentleman from Massachusetts have most ably stated to you their reasons why we should not pass the naval bill carrying 67,000 enlisted personnel as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I heartily agree in all that they have said. There are, however, certain aspects which they have not covered. They have dealt with the Navy afloat, but to keep the Navy afloat there is necessary a large and highly developed force ashore. We have at this time throughout the United States navy yards and stations where there are employed about 53,000 civilians. We have an investment in these navy yards exceeding one-half a billion dollars. The corps of navy yard workmen is not a mushroom growth. It has been built up through years. It is composed of men of training and skill, many of whom have given the better part of a lifetime to this Government work. Should this bill carrying 67,000 personnel prevail, this shore organization will of necessity have to be in large measure discontinued. For example, I am reliably informed that with a 67,000-men Navy a great majority of the yards on the east coast would have to be closed. The business of yards is repairing the ships. If the ships are put out of commission, there is no work for the yards. Under these circumstances they could not be continued. The discontinuance of the yards will not only involve a great hardship upon the employees, who would thus be left without work, but would also destroy at a blow the very specialized organization which has been built up through so many years and which is an absolutely necessary integral part of the Nation's defense. Such an organization can not be assembled overnight. It is of necessity the product of long years of work. I therefore bespeak your consideration for this very important aspect of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRENNAN].

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, one day about six years ago I sat in the balcony of this House as a spectator and listened to a portion of a debate on what was then known as one of the preparedness bills. One of the Members who opposed that measure made the argument: "With whom are we going to fight? Is it with England, our friend of a century? Is it with Japan, an island smaller than many of our States? Can it be with Germany, with an ocean lying between us?" Within a year from that time we were plunged into the World War.

Yesterday I sat in the same balcony with some visitors and heard the identical argument delivered against the amendment now before us, and delivered with the same vehemence and eloquence: "Whom are we going to fight, England, Japan, Russia?" It is as unthinkable to-day as it was in 1916 that this country should ever again engage in armed conflict. But the inconceivable happened once. It can happen again. We fervently hope and pray that it will not, but no one can issue a guaranty.

But we are asked: "How about the treaties that you have ratified? Do they not guarantee this country against war?" No one has claimed for them that extravagant virtue. No country to-day, in the present state of civilization, is war proof any more than the most skillful engineers or builders have been able to construct with all their ability a building which is fireproof. We hear occasionally of some new marvel of engineering construction which is heralded as fireproof, but we have never yet heard the architect or the builder tell the owner of the building not to carry any insurance on it because it could not burn. In this instance our architect and engineer is the Commander in Chief of the Military Establishment of the United States [applause], and he has given us a solemn warning that the bill as proposed by the subcommittee does not furnish adequate insurance and protection for the building of which we are the custodians, and which houses 110,000,000 of American men, women, and children. [Applause.]

My genial colleague and neighbor from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] on Monday last said that the President is a man who has upon his shoulders the weight of the world, and that he had something else to do besides going out and counting up the number of men required for the operation of the Navy. Mr. Chairman, by his letter of yesterday the President has given us to know that with all of his multitudinous cares, responsibilities, and obligations he deems it essential to give his attention to the size of the Navy personnel, and that there is no responsibility weighing upon him which is greater than that which has to do with the security and the safety of the people who look to him for guidance. [Applause.]

It has been said that this amendment is sponsored by those who live upon the coasts. I come from the Middle West, and I intend to vote for the amendment. It has been said that the amendment is backed by only those who have navy yards in their district. There is not a navy yard within 500 miles of Michigan, so far as I know. It is with reluctance that I find myself unconvinced by the able and plausible argument of my colleague, but I take solace in the thought that I am in accord with another gentleman from Michigan, a man who in the earliest days of the war, at the age of 49, enlisted as a private in the Marine Corps, and who served throughout the war with distinction, and who sits to-day as Secretary of the Navy, not with a smile upon his lips, but fearful, and yet hopeful, that the American Navy will not be destroyed by the American Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I have no letter to read from any man in high official position, and I have none to read from naval experts and none to read from navy-yard employees. But if I were to read a letter I would read one of many I have received from persons of position in my district, in humble station and in high, the one letter expressing the sentiment of the many, and the many expressing the sentiment which I feel prevails in my district, in my State, and in this Nation—the sentiment that this Congress should give to the Nation a Navy worthy of the flag it bears. [Applause.] A natural corollary of the Washington conference, so happily and so successfully terminated, prompts us to curtail the human as well as the material forces of the Navy if we are to keep abreast of the advanced thought of the hour and are to meet fairly and squarely the spirit of that conference. To make effective this curtailment the Naval Affairs Committee, after very exhaustive hearings, determined to recommend to Congress that the authorized strength of the Navy be reduced to 86,000 men, believing that while this number would represent a substantial reduction in personnel it would not render the Navy impotent nor ineffectual. I am glad to say that the prevailing opinion of the Naval Affairs Committee was and is that the actual strength shall approximate the authorized strength, and therefore it is with a clear conscience and a firm conviction that I am willing to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. I regret I can not yield. My colleagues, as we approach the subject and as we vote upon it, let us remember that the American people feel kindly toward the Navy; they appreciate its value for defense; they appreciate its value for protection to our commerce; they appreciate its value in maintaining our national policies, and I believe they are willing to pay the cost of keeping it well equipped, well maintained, and well manned. [Applause.]

As the nations of the world, in the arms conference, followed President Harding, a man of sympathy, a man of world vision, a man whose heart is attuned to the aspirations and the hopes of humanity, let us, his fellow citizens, follow him to-day in his patriotism and in his statesmanship as he has interpreted that conference by pointing the way to a Navy worthy of a mighty people. [Applause.] Colleagues, let us vote for the amendment [applause], let us have a Navy worthy of the name, worthy of the glory, worthy of the deeds of that Navy which throughout the years has been the pride and the bulwark of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 39½ minutes remaining between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] and the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has 23 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] 25 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the chairman of the committee, Mr. MADDEN. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Appropriations Committee recognizes itself as the servant of the House, and we recognize the House as the servant of the people, and we believe the American people are in favor of decent economy in the conduct of the Government. [Applause.] We give as conscientious study to every problem that comes before us as it is possible for disinterested minds to give. We have no preconceived notions about anything. We have no special interests to serve. We serve only the American people, and we believe when we come to you with a recommendation seeking to preserve the integrity of the economic side of the American Government we have a right to expect reasonable and decent consideration at your hands. [Applause.]

There has much been said to-day about the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. I think he has no peer anywhere. [Applause.] For integrity of purpose, useful, unselfish devotion to duty, industry, knowledge, and experience no man of my acquaintance surpasses the distinguished gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.] As chairman of the subcommittee which prepared the pending bill, he has shown that he possesses an amazing fund of naval knowledge, more knowledge of naval affairs than any naval officer that came before us. [Applause.]

It has been said that we have acquired no information. Well, if we acquired no information, it was because there was no one in the Navy who had it [applause], for we had every man presumed to have any knowledge before us, and we made up our minds we were going to acquire the knowledge if it could be obtained.

Why, the distinguished Secretary of the Navy was before the Committee on Appropriatons for three weeks every day; so was the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and they learned more about the Navy during their sessions with the Committee on Appropriations than they would have learned if they had been in these positions for a thousand years. [Laughter and applause.] Why, that is the place where we compel men from the departments to expose their ignorance or their knowledge or experience, as the case may be. Oh, we frequently have been compelled to send them back to learn their lesson. You talk about the Navy and about the expert knowledge which the men in the Navy possess. Everybody else has been telling tales out of school, and I presume it is no crime for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to tell his tale, and I propose to tell it. Why, it is not long since, as you all know, that the Navy was before us for $12,500,000 of a deficit for fuel for the ships. They withdrew. They came again. We had further hearings. They reduced from $12,500,000, as the hearings went on, to $10,900,000, and, as the hearings proceeded, from $10,900,000 to $9,900,000. We gave them $6,283,000 for the rest of the fiscal year. They said that the Navy would be tied to the docks.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman remember that the floor leader, yielding to the importunity of the experts, begged the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to give them this sum which they said they must have?

Mr. MADDEN. I do, very well indeed.

Mr. MONDELL. I believed in them for the moment.

Mr. MADDEN. But I did not. [Applause]. And we gave them $6,283,000. It may be of interest to the House to know that only a few days ago I received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy saying that in the original instance they made a mistake; that they only should have asked for $7,700,000 instead of $12,500,000. [Laughter and applause.]

There is your expert knowledge taken from the Navy books by the Secretary of the Navy. Why is their expert knowledge more valuable as to the men on the ships? No two men in the Navy will tell you the same thing about the number of men on the ships. We have agreed on every ship except 23 destroyers, which they wanted in half commission. Twenty-three destroyers in half commission would mean 50 men to a destroyer. Fifty men to 23 destroyers would mean 1,150 men. They have 18 battleships. They had on board on the 1st of February, 1922, 18,258 men. They said they wanted 21,158 men as the extreme maximum. That would be only 2,900 men more; 2,900 and 1,150 would be 4,050 men. If there is any difference at all between the Committee on Appropriations and the Navy, it is 4,050 men. That is all there is to it. They said they would be able to function these ships if they had these men.

We had 301 destroyers built during the war. Everybody knows we do not need 301 destroyers in time of peace. Even the Navy says they do not need them. They say they are going to lay up 198 of them. They have laid them up. Why, the destroyers cost $75,896,000 last year, within $4,500,000 of the total cost of the Navy before the war, except for repairs and construction.

Do you want to maintain this sort of a Navy forever? The American people, I believe, are waiting, anxiously waiting, to see whether we are in earnest in the promise we made of economy in the conduct of the Government. Why, the total cost of the Navy and of the Army in 1916 was only $280,000,000. The total cost of the Army and Navy for the current fiscal year is $800,000,000. The total cost of the Army and Navy for the year 1923, if the House and the Senate will concur in the recommendations made by the Committee on Appropriations, will be $500,000,000. [Applause.]

That is 100 per cent more than before the war. Why, the Navy had in 1916, 51,000 men. They had then as many battleships as we have now. If they could conduct the affairs of the Navy with an equal number of battleships then on an expenditure of $147,000,000, in God's name is there any reason why they can not conduct it now on the basis of $233,000,000? [Applause.]

Do you know, gentlemen, that if your amendment is adopted it will add $60,000,000 to the recommendations of the committee? That is not all; oh, no; that is not all. There is a bill pending here to-day for increased pay for the Navy which will mean, when passed, $15,000,000 more. There is a bill pending for $8,000,000 for the Navy for Air Service construction. That will have to be added to this bill. There is a bill pending, or one that will be pending, for the cancellation of the contracts due to the conference limitation, which requires the cessation of construction on several battleships now under way. That will cost $75,000,000 more. This program, then, would read like this: The bill instead of $233,000,000 would mean $391,000,000.

Are you ready, gentlemen, to go before the American people and say that you are willing to keep this load upon their backs forever? We supposed when the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments was called that that would mean economy. But does it? Not if this program goes through.

What we maintain is this: That we give the Navy every man and every ship except the 23 destroyers in half commission that they ask for, and we maintain that what we have given them is compliance with every line of the naval treaty. [Applause.]

Now, we are your servants. You will do what you please. We come here to recommend. You have the power to act. Whatever your action may be, it will be our action when it is over.

But we plead with you on behalf of an overburdened taxpaying public to stop, to think, to listen, to wait for the verdict; for the verdict if it does not come to-day, gentlemen, will come in November. [Applause.] And I would like to know how any Republican can go back home and make any claim for the support of his constituents on the ground that he has voted for economy when he must make that claim in view of extreme extravagance; and that is what your proposal with respect to this bill means.

The Budget submitted to the Congress was $167,000,000 more than the revenues, and since that time we have $85,000,000 more of estimates. That makes the Budget to-day $252,000,000 more than the revenue. The Budget did not contain any estimate for carrying out the pending reclassification act, which will cost several million dollars more, and likewise it did not contain the probable action that will be taken by the House under the so-called $240 bonus, which will cost you $35,000,000; and it did not provide for the $17,000,000 bill that you passed a few days ago for the veterans' hospital fund; and it did not provide for the $65,000,000 road bill, which is pending, and which undoubtedly will be passed. And it did not provide for the pending river and harbor act amounting to more than $31,000,000. The items for which the Budget did not provide amount to $163,000,000, and $163,000,000 added to the $252,000,000 to which I have called your attention will make a deficit on the face of the case of $415,000,000. If you add the figures which it is proposed to be added to this bill you will not only eat up all the revenues but you will leave the Government with many hundred millions of deficit, and we shall be compelled to go to the American people with a new tax bill. Do you want to do it? Do not do it. I plead with you.

There is no man living who loves the President of the United States more than I. I am his friend; I am unselfishly devoted to him. I love him with a love that knows no turning. I would go further for him than any man I know. I was one of the first seven or eight men in the United States who declared for Mr. Harding for President. There is nothing in the world that he could ask me to do—and I know he would not ask me to do anything that his conscience would not tell him was right—that I would not do.

He has asked me for nothing in this. He has asked no one for anything in this. He has expressed an opinion as to what he thinks, but the expression of that opinion does not disclose the facts as they exist. We have obtained the facts from a close, earnest, untiring, unselfish devotion to and study of the case. I come to you, gentlemen, pleading with you to sustain the Committee on Appropriations and to let the party go to the country with a fulfillment of its promises for decent economy in government. [Applause, the Members rising.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. VARE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] two minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, a sentence spoken by a very great American:

> But there is something we need even more than ships, and this is officers and men. To provide battleships and cruisers and then lay them up with the expectation of leaving them unmanned until they are needed in actual war would be worse than folly. It would be a crime against the Nation.

Those are the words of Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause.] They were expressed to this Congress of the United States on December 3, 1901. Roosevelt had the gift of vision; we should follow him to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to a real expert, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on last Tuesday it was my pleasure and privilege to submit to the House some remarks on this bill. So deeply impressed am I with the gravity of the situation, so serious are the conditions that are threatened, not alone to the Navy but to the country, by the provisions of the pending bill that I feel justified in appearing before you again.

Before the armistice was called we had built and building the finest and best Navy in the world. In military and naval efficiency and value it stood number one. With a generous response the people of the United States said through the conference, "We are willing to yield our first position and come down and put ourselves upon an equality with another country," when we had a position of superiority over that country in the military value of our Navy.

The other day I called your attention to the fact that this agreement for a 5-5-3 ratio was based alone upon tonnage of battleships. It ignored every other consideration. It left out gun power and it left out speed; and I submitted to you facts showing that in speed England had many ships faster than our battleships that we retain, because in our generous response, in the overflowing generosity of our country and our people we scrapped 13 of the finest, greatest, strongest, and best ships that were ever planned and put in the course of construction in all the history of the world. That is what we did. We surrendered gun power, we surrendered speed, and took ships with inferior gun power and with inferior speed, and put ourselves upon an equal basis of tonnage alone.

My friends, I call your attention to that to emphasize the fact that it does not behoove us, it does not become the American Congress further to sacrifice the efficiency and the ability of the American Navy. [Applause.] The responsibility rests upon us to see to it that the proper standing, the proper ratio, of the United States is maintained. [Applause.]

A moment ago the distinguished leader of the majority, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], came before the House and said that it was always his proud pleasure to support the President of the United States. When I heard him say that I could not withhold the reflection that if the President heard that expression he would say, "From such friends and supporters, good Lord deliver us." [Laughter and applause.] Again, the gentleman said that he was maintaining the treaty, that he wanted to save the treaty that had been agreed upon, that the treaty should not be sacrificed, that the treaty should not be salvaged; and I thought to myself, "Does he think that the President of whom he is so proud has not good sense enough to know whether or not he is sacrificing and salvaging the treaty?" [Applause.] But, my friends, do not forget that the President of the United States has not only a personal but he has a historical interest in this transaction. The President of the United States is interested in preserving this treaty, and he understands it, and I dare say that the President is as proud and is as jealous and is as deeply interested in the preservation of the treaty as is the gentleman from Wyoming, and I dare say that he understands our international relationships, that he understands the purposes of the treaty and its intertwining relationships with all the countries of the world as well as does the gentleman from Wyoming. I want to say also that I think the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, understands the details and the particulars and the circumference and the center and the whole of that treaty as well as does the gentleman from Wyoming. [Applause.]

I think he is as deeply interested in it. I think in the history of these days that is to be written hereafter his name will be coupled with it as proudly and as intimately as that of the gentleman from Wyoming, and he will be accredited in history as having as deep and abiding an interest in its preservation, and he would as deeply protest against its salvage and its sacrifice, as would the gentleman from Wyoming. [Applause.] And yet, my friends, we find the President of the United States so deeply impressed, so thoroughly aroused, over the tremendous consequences of this pending bill, so aroused over the disastrous results that will come to the American people, that he has not been content to have the purported interviews that have come out in the press of the country to give his views and his ideas of this matter, but in answer to a letter from a Member of this body he comes out and in specific terms warns this House and warns the people of this country of the disaster threatened by this legislation. And more than that, my friends, if you will read that letter in the spirit and the motives in which it was written, you can not escape the conviction that the President was coming and even pleading and begging the membership of this House in the name of the history of this country and the preservation of its standing and its relationship with all the countries of the world to maintain and preserve the standards and the integrity and the relationship of the American Navy. [Applause.]

My friends, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN] said that the people of this country were in favor of economy. Exactly so. We are all in favor of it. But what is economy? I want to say to you and to say to him that withholding money is not always economy. Economy is the judicious and rightful use of money for a necessary and a proper purpose. [Applause.] I called your attention the other day to the fact that as the result of the Hughes conference that just closed we had 812 ships, and under the provisions of this bill we will have in operation 277, and we will have in ordinary and reserve 535. I called your attention to the fact that the initial cost of these 535 ships that it is proposed to put out of commission and allow to go to waste and ruin was $541,000,000. I ask you, my friends, is that economy?

I want to say more. The people of the United States are not only in favor of economy, but I want to say to you what you know and what everybody in this country knows, and that is that the American people are in favor of and honor the American Navy. [Applause.] They do not want the American Navy scrapped. I have noticed as I have gone among the people and have met the plain man that he says, "I want a good Navy. It is our first line of defense. It keeps our enemies from our shores. They can not set foot upon our soil to molest us and to attack us. We want a great and a capable and an efficient Navy."

Now, my friends, these gentlemen say that they are providing for that; that is their ipse dixit. But on what do they base it? It is simply just that, for if they had put in any other figure they could say the same thing, "We have provided for all the necessities of the Navy." But what do you say? The President of the United States says it is inadequate, that it is insufficient and not providing the proper personnel for the Navy. As Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, as President of the United States, as an interested, honorable, upright citizen, is not his judgment and his word entitled to some consideration and weight? Charged with the duty and responsibility as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy in this country, shall we give no weight, no credence, no credit to the statement of the President of the United States? And, more than that, my friends, the Secretary of the Navy, who is charged with the duty and responsibility of executing the laws and maintaining a Navy and distributing the personnel that goes into details, he has submitted figures and details in the hearings and says that if you provide for 67,000 men he will have to put out of commission in ordinary and reserve 535 of our ships, and can equip only 277 of them; and of those ships, the 18 battleships constituting the basis of the tonnage agreement, we have got to scrap 5 of them and put them in ordinary with only one-sixth of the personnel, barely enough to look after them and keep them cleaned up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. No, I can not; I have but little time. Then comes the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who has given the matter close personal investigation, and he corroborates the others. Then comes every responsible naval officer in the Navy, every single one without exception; they have not a single man on whose statement they can predicate their assertion. They say to you that if you only give us 67,000 men, here is the distribution that we will have to make of them; here are the ships that will have to go into ordinary and into reserve; and here are the only ones we can equip in commission and operate.

Now, when you come to think of the vast investment that is in this, when you come to think of the morale, when you come to think of the fact that it has taken generation after generation to build up the American Navy, that it represents struggle, that it represents contest, that it represents the education of the masses of the people in which they can build up a great and honorable history; history the tradition of achievement in results that you have built up, and now they come and say it will be economy to starve it to death.

My friends, I do not believe in that sort of economy. I believe that the American people want a navy that is provided for of 5-5-3, and they want it 5-5-3. I stand before you today to say that if that conference had agreed or submitted a proposition that the English Navy should be 5, and the American Navy should be 4 or 3, and Japan's Navy should be 3, every man in this House, every man in this country that has one drop of patriotic blood in his veins would rise up and damn them beyond recognition. [Applause.]

Our people would not have stood for it one minute. These gentlemen are proposing to put us on a basis of Japan, and Japan has 1,252 men more than we are providing for our Navy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if a Member of the House reaches the conclusion expressed by my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] that he must follow the advice of the experts in fixing the number of the enlisted men, and he has the courage of his convictions, then he owes it to himself to vote either for 120,000 men, recommended by the General Board, or for 95,000 men, recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, upon the advice of his expert advisers. [Applause.] If he refuses to do that, then he must admit that he is casting a vote in defiance of the advice of all of the experts. If gentlemen reach the conclusion expressed by the gentleman from Nebraska, that this bill does not provide for a 5-5-3 Navy, they may well suffer some disturbance of mind; but the members of the committee who listened to the testimony of the experts of the Navy Department, of the Secretary of the Navy, and the Assistant Secretary know that this bill provides sufficient men to man a fleet that will provide us with our part of the 5-5-3 ratio. [Applause.]

Regardless of the statements that have been made, no intimation was given to representatives of the department of the men that would be allowed to them when they were asked to outline the ships which under the treaty they would put in commission next year. We simply asked them to indicate the ships they would retain and they outlined that list. I checked them off one by one, as did other members of the committee. Then we asked them to give us the number of men on those ships. They said they did not have that number as of that date, but would furnish the list reported as of January 1, and it amounted to 49,492 men. We said, then, that we would allow for the ships 49,492 men, but they said that they wanted more than 49,492 men for next year; that for the same ships they wanted 61,000—after the peace pact had been signed and after the naval holiday had been agreed to. Mr. Chairman, I wish the newspapers would state to the country that for the next year the Navy Department wants 12,000 more men than they had on the same ships this year on January 1. [Applause.]

Oh, but they say it does not provide a 5-5-3 Navy. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] thinks that for us it means a two and a half Navy. Does the gentleman mean what he says? My friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said the same thing yesterday. Then, if 67,000 men means a two and one-half Navy, in order to be five you would have to vote for 134,000. If you do not, then you sacrifice the ratio of 5-5-3. Sacrificing the ratio of 5-5-3 is what they charge us with, but they advocate the sacrifice themselves when they vote for 86,000. I say that we do not sacrifice it, and all of the correspondence school that we have had thrust upon us in the last few days—the letter from the President, the letter from the Secretary of the Navy, the letter from the Secretary of State, from the chamber of commerce, and from all of the other inhabitants of the correspondence school—every last one has been based upon the statement of the Navy Department that under the personnel provided we will have a Navy less than that of Great Britain and only equal to Japan. I deny it, because the figures do not support it.

Gentlemen say that this committee did not ask the Navy Department for a statement as to the personnel figures of other navies. That statement, too, is untrue. When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] and others were charging the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] with that fact I knew that one week before the gentleman from Michigan made a report to this House I went to the office of the Chief of Operations to ask him to authorize the intelligence office to give me the latest figures they had on the British and Japanese personnel. His aid, Commander Hill, very courteously stated that he would present the figures to me there, and he gave them to me, and I hold in my hand a statement signed by the aid to Admiral Coontz, the Chief of Operations, which is based on the March report, but yet differs from the statement furnished by the Navy Department, and which has been placed in the RECORD.

In this statement placed in the RECORD the figures as to total personnel exclude marines and officers. Why did he not exclude the Coast Guard? I have a statement here in which they do that. Did he exclude the midshipmen? No. He says here in the statement which has been put in the RECORD that the total enlisted force on March 31, 1923, will be 94,500 men; and in a statement furnished me, based on the same report, on March 25 it is 97,450. And then in order to secure the figure of 104,000 he adds 111,000 of last year to the 97,000 for this year and divides it in two. No two figures furnished us being the same, we determined to check up these figures. I have here the debates of the House of Commons on the naval estimates, the statement of the parliamentary secretary of the Admiralty of Great Britain. I have read every available service paper of Great Britain, and I find that the figures furnished by the department are inaccurate and misleading. I charge nothing venal.

I do charge that the statements upon which the President and the Secretary of State and others have reached the conclusion that Great Britain would have in its personnel next year a much greater number of men than we have is wrong. I can not go into all the details. Here is one glaring misstatement. They told you that next year Great Britain would have in the Royal Air Force 30,000 men and that one-third of them would be devoted to naval aviation. Knowing how inaccurate their statements were, we determined to investigate. We learned that Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, Assistant Chief of Operations of the American Army, as splendid an officer as ever wore the uniform, had just returned from Great Britain, where he had been studying aviation. We summoned him before the committee. Here is the transcript of his testimony. He says while the authorized strength of the Royal Air Force is 30,000 that they have not recruited more than 23,000. Instead of one-third of that force, or 10,000, being assigned to the naval service that only 2,500 men are assigned to the naval service. [Applause.] And he did not make any general statement. Here is his testimony. Because of his service during the war he is very intimate with the English aviation officers, and he had excellent opportunity to acquire information, not from newspapers but by personal visits to their headquarters and to practically every important aviation station, and he sets forth here station by station the number of men and the number of officers. He says that assigned to the fleet there are only 850 men—that there are located at training stations only 1,197 men, making 2,047 men. To be liberal he allows 500 mechanics, giving every doubt to the naval service, making the total number of men of the Royal Air Force assigned to the navy only 2,547 men in time of peace. In time of war one-third would be assigned to the fleet and coast defenses, only one-sixth going to the fleet.

Now, let me ask you, if the Navy Department can send through this entire country, sticking in every newspaper this chart which is based upon the statement that there are 30,000 men in the Royal Air Force and one-third assigned to the naval service, when there are only 2,500 assigned to it, how can you depend on any figures that they give you on this subject?

Now, you have been told that the English complement on battleships is going to be greater next year. Have they not told you that every day here? Here is the statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty, explaining the naval estimates, that because of the improved international situation, they will this year reduce the complements on their battleships by 15.7 per cent.

Instead of increasing it, they are going to reduce their complement 15 per cent because of the improvement in the international situation. If the international situation has improved for Great Britain, what has occurred to so menace the security of this country that the Navy of the United States wants 12,000 more men on the same ships than they had on January 1 of this year? The militarists of one country act very much like the militarists of another country. Here are the debates of the House of Commons. It may remind you of what you have heard here this week:

> The parliamentary secretary of the Admiralty, Mr. Amery: The American Navy, following the same policy as ourselves in reducing strength, proposes to reduce from 139,000 to 115,000; that is to say, to a strength slightly above ours. The position of the Japanese Navy is that their figure stood at 82,000. The latest figure stood at 80,000. I am not aware of any suggestion for still further reduction.

This statement was made as late as 24th of March, 1922. We could have told him better than that. But Great Britain is told that we contemplate keeping 115,000, a force greater than theirs, and Japan is to keep 80,000. In Japan doubtless the people are being told that Great Britain and America are increasing their enlisted men, and here we are told that Great Britain is to retain a superior force and Japan an equal force.

Can not you imagine a scene similar to this in London, a debate along the same lines? But the secretary to the Admiralty did make one statement which should be interesting to the gentlemen who claim that we are providing so small a force compared to that of Great Britain. He said of us:

> The committee of their lower House has made suggestions which, when you include all the different items comparable with the items which come under our vote A, would reduce the total to something over 99,000 men, or a figure very slightly in excess of our own.

Now, remember, that while the Navy Department asserts that the British intend to keep in the service 104,000 men, the secretary of the Admiralty time after time in this debate states that they intend to reduce the total force to 98,000 at the earliest possible date in this fiscal year. Now, let us see how he figures that with comparable figures our total will exceed that number. Their 98,000 will include marines, officers and men, officers of the navy, and officers and men of the coast guard. This is admitted by the statement I have from the office of Chief of Operations. It appears from the English statements. It does not indicate whether midshipmen, numbering approximately 2,500, should be included. But take our 67,000 and add 19,500 marines, 6,156 officers of the line and staff, 1,244 warrant officers, 1,000 marine officers, approximately 4,000 Coast Guard men and officers, and 2,500 naval cadets, and you have a total of 101,400. This evidently is how the secretary to the Admiralty figures our force in excess of theirs. Does it impress gentlemen at all that while they are charging that we have reduced the force so much below Great Britain's that the British Admiralty is asserting that the force proposed in this bill when properly compared with theirs is greater?

One very pertinent remark was made by Lieutenant Commander Kenworthy. As gentlemen argued for increased appropriations for the navy yards of Great Britain, he said:

> The navy does not exist for the dockyards but the dockyards for the navy.

Let me call attention to this statement by the Secretary of the Admiralty:

> I omitted to answer the question put by the right honorable gentleman the member for the city of London as to the numbers in the Navy in 1914. The figure is 150,300, which we are now reducing to 98,000.

So that while Great Britain can reduce its force from 150,300 to 98,000, including marines, officers, coast guard, and all, which would really bring the net down to 70,326, including aviation, this peace-loving country of ours must increase its force from 54,000 in 1916, after the sinking of the Lusitania, up to 67,000, and if some of you have your way to 86,000. And remember that under the treaty Great Britain is allowed for the next year 580,450 tonnage as against our 500,650, and manifestly if they are to keep in commission their treaty navy it would require a few thousand more men than it will require to keep ours.

But the gentlemen who have not studied this question assert that the force provided could not keep the 18 battleships in commission. If, with 54,000 men in 1916, they could find 18,000 men to keep battleships in commission, why can not they find 18,000 men for the battleships out of the 67,000 men provided by this bill? They say it can not be done. Before the committee the Secretary stated that with 67,000 men he could keep in commission only 12, and the table on page 232 so shows. But the table, when prepared by the Secretary and inserted in the RECORD yesterday, shows that with the same number he now says he can keep in commission 13 battleships.

And my good friend from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] says that if you provide 67,000 men you can keep in commission but 12 battleships. I love him, but he is not always the best prophet. Last year when we had the appropriation bill up the Navy swore if we gave them 100,000 men we were going to scrap the whole shooting match, and on February 10, 1921, Mr. PADGETT said:

> The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] stated that it would keep all of our dreadnoughts in commission. I must disagree with him. I have a statement, received this morning, to the effect that if the personnel were reduced to 100,000 men the ships of the Navy will be in the following status: Battleships, first line, in commission, 13.

[Laughter.]

That is the high-water mark. They can not exceed 13. Last year they could not. This year they say they can not. When we passed the 100,000 provision, instead of putting in commission 13, as Mr. PADGETT predicted, they put in 18, and they have 18 to-day. So what becomes of the prophecy of my good friend from Tennessee?

Oh, they say, "We ought to follow the experts on the question of personnel for battleships." Well, the General Board says you ought to put 22,000 on them. The Chief of Operations says you ought to put 21,000 on them. And they have to-day 18,000. They ought to have 18,000. And when we give them that 18,000, when we give them the exact number they have on the ships they want to keep in commission, then if they do not keep them in commission it is not your fault, but the fault of the naval officers, and the President ought to remove some of them. [Applause.]

Now, let me say a word to this side of the House. We have heard much of the Limitation of Armament Conference. We Democrats believed in limiting armament. During the World War we told the people that we fought that war in order that war might be no more. Then, under the leadership of our President, we endeavored to provide for a limitation of armament on land and sea through the League of Nations. When the last naval bill was considered Members on this side fought for an amendment providing for a limitation of armaments, among them being the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

When the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], against the wishes of the Republican leaders of the Senate, placed his amendment on the naval bill, this side of the House with only one or two exceptions stood for it and fought for it.

Now, after this conference has been held up to the world as a success, shall we vote for an amendment here that will mean increased naval appropriations instead of decreased appropriations in the next fiscal year? If I wanted to play politics with you gentlemen on the Republican side, I would advocate it; I would help pile up appropriations, so that when you went before the people we could say the Limitation of Armament Conference was a fraud. But a man's duty is not to his party but to the people of America. In every hamlet they prayed for the success of this conference, and they thought they were getting something. Shall we tell them before the ink is dry upon the peace treaty that we have only distrust for the signers and that the people, instead of getting reduced taxation, will get a gold brick at the hands of the American Congress? [Applause.]

We have heard from all the lobbies, the naval lobby, the steel lobby, the newspapers in communities where naval activities exist, some unselfish and some selfish. But back home there are people from whom you have not heard, people who do not write you letters, but who stay upon the farms and in the factories of America and place their trust in you. Among these people who sent you here there is unemployment and distress. The people are sorely oppressed by taxation. Will you listen to the plea of the special interests, or will you consider the interests of the people who sent you here, and vote to reduce to some extent the taxation which now threatens to exhaust the rich and beggar the poor? [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, has the time all been consumed except what I have reserved for myself?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] has five minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the great old patriarch of national defense, the real hero here of the World War [JULIUS KAHN]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the Lord that I have learned and remembered some lessons of the World War. On the 6th day of April it was only five years since we got into that war. We were absolutely unprepared for the war. In 1916 the national defense bill was up before this House, before this committee; I had the pleasure of supporting that measure. I repeatedly called the attention of the House to the fact that we were not prepared for war.

Unfortunately the House was not willing to vote for all the amendments that I had proposed at that time. Gentlemen then asked me on this floor the very questions or, rather, questions similar to the ones that have been asked here to-day. Repeatedly I heard men on this floor say, "Whom are you going to fight? Whom are you going to prepare for? What is the need of getting ready? There is no enemy in sight." I told the House frankly that I did not know who would be our enemy; I did not know when war would come; but I believed in keeping this country of ours measurably ready to meet any country in the world. [Applause.] And after an interim of six years I still feel that way regarding the United States of America. [Applause.]

Now, the Members in charge of this bill speak of the economies that should be practiced at this time because of the great burden of taxation. I agree that the taxes are terrific, but what brought them upon the shoulders of the people of this country? The war, for which you would not get ready in 1916. [Applause.] Practically $1,000,000,000 a year is the amount that the people of the United States are called upon these days to meet in the Treasury of the United States our annual war expenses. That is a terrific amount; that is what our unpreparedness in 1917 cost us. Yet the people are paying the indebtedness cheerfully. But they expect this House to do those things that will prevent the possibility of any future war.

The Democratic President was elected in 1916 on the score that "he kept us out of war." It was at that time a pacifist country. A few months later, when we took up those very questions of preparedness on this floor, we could not induce the Members of the House to make appropriations for necessary preparation. And yet in less than seven months afterwards we were in the war up to the very hilt. We had to pour out $24,000,000,000 to meet the expenses of the war. Our interest charges alone cost us a billion dollars a year. It took us 13 months to get ready for that war. Fortunately for us, England and France and Belgium were able to hold the lines while the Americans were being trained and put in a condition to help win the war.

That kept on for some little time; in those days we were not prepared to fight. But our Navy was able to help the bringing of 2,000,000 American soldiers to the war areas of Europe. Finally, in May, 1918, we were able for the first time to send our forces to fight. America needs make no apology for the work of our soldiers. But no loyal patriotic citizen wants our boys to go through such another experience. That is why I support the amendment for 86,000 men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from South Carolina yields one minute, his unexpired time, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], so that the gentleman has 21 minutes. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, we have debated this bill now for an entire week, and we have at last reached the point where we are to make a decision. The bill is important in the highest degree, both because it directly relates to the national security, which must always be our first concern, and also because it carries an appropriation of nearly a quarter of a billion of dollars. It has been asserted that the amounts carried in the bill are insufficient and that the number of men provided will not properly man the ships which we are to retain under the agreements reached at the Conference on Limitation of Armament. If I believed that this were true I would not vote for the bill myself. The amounts carried are based entirely upon the theory that they are adequate to meet all the requirements of the treaty navy. I do not believe that the position of the committee as to this has been shaken in the slightest degree during the entire week of debate. The propositions laid down at the beginning of the debate have not been successfully met. The most serious criticism of the work of the committee, apparently, has been that we were not willing to accept without challenge the views of the Navy Department, particularly with regard to the size of the enlisted personnel necessary to operate a navy based upon the 5-5-3 ratio.

I need not say in this connection that the committee has at all times been eager to obtain the viewpoint and the opinion of the Navy Department, but we have been just as eager to ascertain the reasons as we have been to learn their conclusions. An opinion, no matter from what source it may come, is of little value unless the reasons lying at the bottom of such opinion appeals to the judgment. I am frank to say that we have not accepted statements and opinions without question, and I may say we have scrutinized every demand for money with more than usual severity. We believed that the conditions of business in the country and the state of the finances of the Government demanded such a course. We proceeded upon the theory that no person under the Government, high or low, was entitled to a single dollar for his department unless he could sit on the opposite side of the table and show with a reasonable degree of certainty where that dollar was to be spent and why it was necessary to spend it. [Applause.] We assumed that you wanted us to pursue this course. If we were to accept without question whatever was laid before us in the form of demands for money, the labor of the committee might as well have been eliminated and the estimates brought directly to the House. We regarded ourselves as the agents of the House, to inquire into all the facts, and felt ourselves charged with the duty of making a most searching inquiry and examination into the needs of the Navy in the light of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament before bringing for your consideration this great bill, carrying more than $230,000,000. We have kept the faith to the very best of our ability. [Applause.]

I will admit at the outset that the committee and the Navy Department have not always been in accord, and that we have not accepted in every instance the views of the advisers of the Navy Department. There is in the Navy the same difference of opinion with reference to naval matters as exists in the professions of medicine or the law as to legal and medical affairs. The committee did not, therefore, expect to find that every naval officer agreed with every other naval officer. If it were merely a matter of disagreement between two officers of equal rank and experience, the committee could choose between them or disregard either or both. But the thing that has disturbed the committee more than anything else has not been the varying opinions of different men but the widely differing statements of fact made by the same naval officer under exactly the same conditions and within a comparatively short period of time. [Applause.] The committee has been obliged to adopt a most searching attitude because of this fact. The military head of the Navy under the Secretary is the Chief of Naval Operations. The same officer who held that position a year ago holds it now. During the course of the hearings last year the Chief of Naval Operations was asked to state to the committee of the House the number of capital ships and necessary auxiliaries which could be maintained in full commission with an enlisted force of 100,000 men. He put into the hearings a table on January 10, 1921, which appears on page 65 of last year's hearings. In this table it appears that he could keep in commission 17 battleships and the necessary auxiliaries with an enlisted force of 100,000 men. The bill passed the House carrying approximately $400,000,000.

The Senate added approximately $100,000,000 more. During the consideration of the Senate increases this same officer testified before the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, on the 18th of February, 1921, with the same bill under consideration and with no change in world conditions, that he could keep in commission only 15 battleships and necessary auxiliaries with 120,000 men. [Applause.] At the same time, and while before the same committee, he put in another table showing that with 110,000 men he could keep in commission only 13 battleships. [Applause.] We gave him 106,000 men and he has kept in commission 18 battleships. [Applause.]

I am going to make a statement which I fear may sound somewhat harsh, but I believe that it should be said. No executive department of the Government should permit its officers to juggle with facts in the manner above stated. [Applause.] I do not believe that any officer ought to be continued as the military head of the American Navy who appears before two different committees of Congress within a month and makes such varying and contradictory statements as a basis for increased appropriations. [Applause.] I have always been glad to be guided by the counsel of the officers of the Navy Department whenever such counsel has been consistent and appeals to the judgment and can be defended in reason. The experience of our committee, however, last year made it necessary to adopt more searching methods of inquiry this year than heretofore in determining the requirements for the Navy. We did not believe that the House would be satisfied with the mere statement of the Chief of Naval Operations that any particular number of ships could be kept in commission with any particular number of men.

We therefore decided to determine the needs of the Navy in a more detailed and thorough manner. Instead of inquiring as to the number and type of ships that could be kept in commission with a particular number of men, we decided, first, to require the Navy Department to furnish us a complete list of all ships of every type, by name, which in the judgment of the department would be necessary to a properly balanced 18-battleship fleet. This list the committee has printed in its report. We then assigned to each ship the number of men now carried on that particular ship, as furnished us by the Navy Department itself, as of February 1, 1922. The bill, therefore, provides for all the ships of the treaty Navy, with as large a personnel carried thereon as was on board on the date above mentioned. I do not see how a fairer or more accurate method could be devised. [Applause.] But they say we took advantage of them. I suppose that what they really mean is that had they known that we intended to base our appropriation upon the number of men upon the ships on a certain day the results might have been quite different. [Applause and laughter.] Be that as it may, it is claimed the number was not normal. This debate has been going on now for a full week. Officers from the Navy Department have been in constant consultation with Members of Congress, supplying information and making suggestions relative to the various proposals carried in this bill.

I have no criticism whatever on account of their doing this, but I am sorry that some of them thought it necessary to exchange their uniforms during the past week for civilian clothes, whenever they came to the Capitol. [Laughter.] If the number of men carried on the ships, as of February 1, 1922, was abnormally low, if there had been an hour during the last 12 months when the records would show a larger number carried on the ships than were carried on that date, have you any idea that my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] would not at least have had a letter from the Navy Department advising him on this fact? [Laughter and applause.] But we go through the whole debate for an entire week, the department claiming that the number of men on the ships was below normal on February 1 last, with all the records in their office to show this fact if it were true, but we come to the very hour of voting and no such proof has been furnished. [Applause.] No other proof is necessary, in my judgment, to convince the House that the number of men carried on the ships on February 1, 1922, represented a fair average of personnel afloat on these particular ships for the year. The number of men we have, therefore, allowed for the treaty navy stands upon as solid a ground as to accuracy and sufficiency as when printed in the report and laid before Congress. So much, then, for the Navy afloat. They have not shown that they need another man. We have provided for 50,000 men for the treaty Navy afloat—2,000 more than were carried upon these identical ships before the great nations of the earth entered into a solemn compact to keep the peace of the world and to maintain friendly relations with one another. [Applause.]

No one has yet given any reason why a larger number of men should be supplied than the ships actually carry at this time. The only other question, therefore, is, did we give them men enough on shore? My answer is that it gave them a man on shore for every job on shore, and 7,000 men besides. [Applause.] But it did not seem to be sufficient. They had on February 1, last, only 12,600 places on shore where they could legitimately put men, and yet they are asking this Congress for 32,000 men on shore to fill 12,600 jobs at a time when farmers, merchants, and manufacturers are borrowing money to pay their taxes. [Applause.] If the Committee on Appropriations had actually followed any such advice as that, then, indeed, the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCGEE] that the Appropriations Committee might well be abolished would be timely. [Laughter.]

Why do they desire this large number of excess men on shore? I am sure that question has been running through your mind constantly during this week of debate. I asked the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] the other day if he, as a business man, was willing to say that we ought to appropriate for 32,000 men to fill 12,000 jobs, and he said that he thought so if the Navy Department wanted them. [Laughter.] But the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], with a mind as sharp as a razor's edge, was not so easily satisfied, and he pressed me for an answer as to what the department could do with all these extra unassigned men. And the question is still unanswered by any proponent of this increase of 20,000 men above the amount provided in the bill.

In my judgment there is only one possible reason for asking for these 20,000 extra men. It can not be because they are to be added to the ships of the treaty Navy. Those ships already carry enough, as has been shown by Mr. OLIVER, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and other gentlemen on this floor. They are not needed on shore because we have given them a man for every job and 7,000 unassigned men for training or to take the place of men who are sick, on leave, or in transit in the service. But that was not enough. They come here and want 20,000 more. What for? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] on yesterday asked to have the navy yard items passed over until the number of enlisted men were agreed upon. In answer to a question by me as to the theory upon which his request was based he replied that an increase in the number of men, of course, would mean an increase in the number of ships and a consequent increase in the item of repairs. Inasmuch as the committee had provided for the treaty navy, it becomes apparent that those who demand the increased number of personnel expect a larger Navy to be kept in commission than that required under the treaty. The other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] also let the cat out of the bag a while ago when he condemned as unwise the policy of not keeping all our fighting ships in full commission. And the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], more frank than all the rest, urged that all our destroyers should be kept in full commission. And at last we have the reason why the 20,000 extra men are demanded. It proves out with almost mathematical precision. We have 200 surplus destroyers and it takes 100 men for each destroyer. So that if we keep them all in commission it will require exactly 20,000 men to man them. This is the only logical reason which has been given by anyone for increasing the personnel provided in this bill from 67,000 men to 86,000 men. But what does this proposal mean?

Are we ready to send this challenge out to the world, that we intend to keep in commission 200 warships over and above the number required to maintain the treaty Navy? How does such a performance on the part of Congress harmonize with the lofty ideals enunciated by America at the time of the assembling of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament? What will the world say to-morrow morning as the Christian people of the earth assemble for worship on the Sabbath day if they are told from the pulpit that the American Congress has just appropriated $54,000,000 to keep in full commission and ready for instant war 200 ships of war in addition to those permitted under the treaty? [Applause.] Such a proposal as that would strike at the heart of civilization everywhere throughout the world. [Applause.] The mischief that such a course on the part of Congress might do can not be calculated. But it is said that the President and the Secretary of State have advised this. If they have been misled as to the effect and the purpose of this increase in personnel, the responsibility upon Congress to prevent the mischief is only thereby increased. [Applause.]

Why have our naval officers taken this position? Why do they desire all these surplus warcraft to be kept in commission? They have simply fallen into a panic. The 200 surplus destroyers require 1,600 officers, and if we lay up the 200 destroyers the officers are lying awake nights wondering what will be done with the officers thus released. I think the officers have made a mistake.

Personally, I have not been in favor of greatly reducing the number of officers. In fact, I am willing that we should have a surplus of officers. I believe that should be the policy of the Government. If we have the officers and the ships, the enlisted personnel is not so serious a problem and could be quickly supplied. There is no provision, therefore, in this bill for any reduction in the number of officers, although it is possible that some reduction may be necessary at an early date. Thus through fear of losing promotion or perhaps through fear of being severed entirely from the service, I fear the officers of the Navy have made common cause with the various localities of the country whose business interests have been adversely affected by the agreements reached at the Conference on Limitation of Armament. We therefore find arrayed against this bill all the local influences from Maine to New Orleans on the Atlantic and from San Diego to Seattle on the Pacific. I do not say that this is not a natural attitude for these various navy-yard communities to take. They naturally feel the loss of business as a result of smaller naval activities. I can well sympathize with the employees here in the Washington Navy Yard. Some of them have been employed by the Government for 20 years. They have been manufacturing the great 16-inch guns that were to be placed on ships that are never to be built. These guns will never even fire a salute.

When the agreement was reached at the conference the major portion of the work in the Washington Navy Yard came to an end, and the thousands of employees had to look for employment elsewhere. There is a great navy yard in Boston. I do not censure Representatives from that locality who reflect the opinion of the city which they represent. There is a great navy yard in Philadelphia, and I do not censure Mr. VARE for looking after the interests of his constituents who will suffer financial loss because of reduced naval activities at that point. But the fact that new adjustments will be necessary, and that temporary losses must be sustained in certain localities, must not be permitted to retard the work so gloriously begun at the Washington conference.

Gentlemen of the House, it is very well to sympathize with those who may be financially or professionally affected by the great world movement having for its object a reduction and a limitation of armament. Where it is possible and proper, no doubt some temporary adjustments should be made until employment in civil lines can be obtained. I want to say, however, in conclusion, that the American Congress must not permit any group of individuals or any combination of localities anywhere under the flag to throw themselves across the path of the world's progress in its onward march toward the goal of international understanding and good will. [Prolonged applause, the Members rising.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Vare amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair stated that he was in doubt.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. VARE and Mr. KELLEY of Michigan were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 177, noes 130.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], who is present in a wheel chair, be permitted to be counted in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11228, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oregon please state where the figures which he has in his amendment came from?

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, the figures in my amendment were prepared at my request by the Paymaster General of the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Do they provide for taking 10,000 men out of the lower grades of the Navy and keeping all of the high ones in, or are they proportional?

Mr. MCARTHUR. They are proportional. That is my understanding.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman say so of his own knowledge?

Mr. MCARTHUR. I can not say so of my own knowledge. That is my understanding.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Are the amounts carried based upon present law or the law of 1916 and prior to that?

Mr. MCARTHUR. They are based upon the same law that the bill is drawn upon. They are presented to the House upon the theory that the increase would be made which the House has just voted to make in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11228, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken upon the bill have permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, availing myself of the privilege to extend my remarks on the Navy appropriation bill, I desire to submit a telegram from Myer C. Rubin, adjutant of the San Francisco chapter of the Military Order of the World War:

Resolution adopted by San Francisco chapter, Military Order of the World War, Wednesday, April 19, 1922, at San Francisco, Calif.

Whereas it has come to the attention of the San Francisco chapter of the Military Order of the World War that certain Senators and Congressmen intend to legislate for the further reduction of the personnel of the Army and the Navy and to curtail the Navy building program; and

Whereas the excuse given for the proposed legislation is for economy of administration funds and a consequent lessening of the burden of taxation now being carried by our people: Be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the San Francisco chapter of the Military Order of the World War that the sum so saved would be so small as to be insignificant in proportion to the danger involved in reducing the already inadequate number of the armed forces of this country; and be it further

Resolved, That this order is most emphatically opposed to any reduction in the numerical strength of our Army and Navy as now proposed and insisted upon by the departments of the Army and Navy; and be it further

Resolved, That this chapter of the Military Order of the World War use every endeavor to prevent the ill-advised legislation mentioned in the first paragraph of this resolution and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the representatives in Congress from California, and that they be requested to reply by formal letter setting forth their attitude in this matter.

(Please transmit copies to chairmen Senate and House Committees of Army and Navy Affairs and Members of Congress from California.)

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. DUNBAR, for six days, on account of important business.

Mr. HAMMER, for four days, on account of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Wyoming if it is the intention to call up the naval bill for consideration on Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. The Unanimous Consent Calendar will, I assume, be considered on Monday, unless the House determines otherwise by vote. Later in the afternoon, if it is desired, if we get through with the Calendar for Unanimous Consent early, we might take up the naval bill, but I should think it would be doubtful.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman not think it would be well to have it thoroughly understood to-night when the final vote will come on the bill—that it will not be on Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentlemen ought to know, and I doubt if under the circumstances we ought to take up the naval bill at all on Monday. I think we should adjourn after consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar is concluded. I make that suggestion, because there are gentlemen who desire to go home who would not return Monday if the naval bill is not to be taken up at that time.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 17, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

590. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of Lake Washington Ship Canal, Wash., was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ELLIS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 9615. A bill for the relief of Sarah Green, Virginia Green, and Henry Green, next of kin of Lydia Rivers; with an amendment (Rept. No. 906). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 11322) to amend paragraph (11) of section 6 of the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WARD of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 11323) to provide for a post-office building at Williamston, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. UPSHAW: A bill (H. R. 11324) to amend the Federal farm loan act so that branch banks shall be established in the capital of each State; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 11325) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Kirkpatrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROWTHER: A bill (H. R. 11326) granting a pension to Judson B. Luckhurst; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FAUST: A bill (H. R. 11327) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain claim as the result of damage sustained to Leslie J. Kennedy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 11328) granting a pension to Lucy E. Porter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 11329) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Waddell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11330) granting a pension to Deliaette Bruno; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 11331) for the relief of Rudolph Ponevacs; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 11332) granting an increase of pension to Amanda E. Pollard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 11333) for the relief of Francis Leo Shea; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 11334) granting a pension to Sarah Anderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11335) for the relief of the widows of certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: A bill (H. R. 11336) for the relief of Joseph L. Galle; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. YOUNG: A bill (H. R. 11337) for the relief of Anna Volker; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5128. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Union League Club of Chicago, opposing the proposed reduction of the Army and Navy as provided in bills now pending and indorsing the President's stand on same; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5129. Also (by request), petition of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, opposing the reduction of the Army and Navy as proposed in bills now before Congress; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5130. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, supporting the conclusions reached by the disarmament conference and later embodied in the four-power naval treaty and the President's recommendations regarding the Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5131. By Mr. DARROW: Petition of more than 200 members of Trinity Presbyterian Church, of Philadelphia, urging the passage of House bill 2193, regulating the export of opiates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5132. By Mr. FAVROT: Petition of sundry citizens of Baton Rouge, La., opposing the passage of the Fitzgerald Sunday observance bill for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5133. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Resolution adopted by the United Veterans of the Republic, Unit No. 12, of Charlestown, Mass., relative to the Navy personnel and the Boston Navy Yard; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5134. Also, petition of Charles A. Waterman, of 18 Ethel Street, Boston, Mass., urging the passage of House bill 2894, calling for a 25 per cent reduction in interchangeable mileage; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5135. Also, petition of the New England Confectionery Co., of Boston, Mass., urging passage of House bill 10159, known as the "commercial bribery bill"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5136. By Mr. HADLEY: Petition of sundry citizens from the State of Washington opposing the Sunday blue law; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5137. By Mr. KEARNS: Petition of Mrs. Burt L. Knotts and others of Lewistown, Ohio, opposing the passage of House bill 9753, or any Sunday bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5138. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Leon Dickinson, Esq., of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against the reduction of the Navy from 86,000 to 65,000 men; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5139. By Mr. MANN: Petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., opposing the passage of pending compulsory Sunday observance bills (S. 1948 and H. R. 4388 and 9753); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5140. By Mr. MORIN: Petition of the First Baptist Church of Pittsburgh, Pa., Rev. James K. Kirtley, acting pastor, urging immediate action on the Miller bill (H. R. 2193), as it will prevent all improper exportation of opium and other harmful drugs; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5141. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of F. W. Delventhal, secretary of Lodge No. 1246, United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railroad Switchmen's League, indorsing House bill 10798 and urging its passage; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5142. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, indorsing The Hague rules regarding ocean bills of lading and urging legislation looking toward its adoption; also petition of the Dried Fruit Association of California, of San Francisco, Calif., indorsing the McKellar amendment to the Harter Act, permitting ocean carriers to make contracts in accordance with The Hague rules, 1921; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

5143. Also, petition of John R. Quinn, department commander, American Legion of California, of San Francisco, Calif., protesting against the reduction of the naval forces of the United States below 90,000 men; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5144. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, relative to Federal taxation; also, petition of Ray Hays, of Nevada City, Calif., protesting against a tax of $2.35 a pound on imported wrapper tobacco; also, petition of the Foreign Mission Society of Vincent Methodist Episcopal Church, of Los Angeles, protesting against the proposal to tax wine and beer to raise revenue for the soldiers' bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5145. Also, petition of J. J. Borree, brigadier general, National Guard of California, indorsing Senate bill 3325 and House bill 10972, the Army pay bill, as amended; also, petition of Snow Shed Lodge, No. 743, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Roseville, Calif., indorsing House bill 6432, for the relief of the Russian Railway Corps; also, petition of George M. Krone, of Los Angeles, urging action on the Bursum bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5146. By Mr. SNYDER: Petitions of J. T. Smith, William Zeiter, Frank E. Marshall, Morris Rosenthal, and J. W. Shotthafer, of Utica, N. Y.; W. J. Doyle and Parker L. Scripture, of Rome, N. Y.; and Alvie Carlstran, of Oriskany, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Chandler bill (H. R. 9198) providing for an increase in pension for veterans of the War with Spain; to the Committee on Pensions.

5147. Also, petitions of granges at Lee, Columbia, and Steuben, N. Y., favoring equal privileges in granges and land banks which other American banks enjoy; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

5148. By Mr. WILLIAMSON: Petition of sundry citizens of Hot Springs, S. Dak., opposing the passage of the bill to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 17, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for yesterday and all that it means, for the hopes stimulated, the desires realized in the fact that there was an open tomb emptied, and that through the life of Him who lived and wrought so wondrously and died, was buried and rose again, life and immortality have been brought to light.

We bless Thee this day for all its associations and ask that our lives may be ennobled by the thought that the Risen One lives and loves to-day as ever. Grant Thy blessing upon the work of the day and glorify Thyself in every act and word. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, April 14, 1923, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McCormick	Sheppard
Broussard	Hale	McKinley	Simmons
Bursum	Harreld	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Harris	Moses	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	Myers	Stanley
Caraway	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Colt	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Swanson
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
du Pont	Kendrick	Overman	Warren
Edge	Keyes	Owen	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	King	Phipps	Weller
Fletcher	Ladd	Pittman	Willis
France	La Follette	Poindexter
Gerry	Lenroot	Pomerene
Glass	Lodge	Rawson

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that the announcement stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may continue through the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House:

H. R. 2556. An act to advance Maj. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major; and

H. R. 7589. An act for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller.

SPECIAL CANCELING STAMPS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts conferees on the part of the Senate.

SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, on Thursday of last week a committee known as the schedule committee of the Southern Tariff Association met in this city for the purpose of urging increased protection for southern industries. They asked for a meeting with a number of Republican Senators who have been urging proper recognition and protection for the agricultural industries of the country. A very interesting communication addressed to those Senators at that meeting was read by Mr. Woodall, of Texas. I ask that the communication may be read.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. GOODING. Yes; I desire to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the communication.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, may I ask from whom this communication comes?

Mr. GOODING. I ask that the names attached may be read so that Senators from the South may understand from whom the communication comes.

The reading clerk read the signatures attached to the communication.

Mr. GOODING. I ask that the reading of the communication may be proceeded with and concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The reading clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the communication, which, entire, is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1922.

To the Republican Senators representing agriculture and affiliated industries:

The schedule committee of the Southern Tariff Association appreciates the opportunity to appear before you and present its case. It is conscious of the deep solicitude of all of you for the well-being of the Nation as a whole, and is grateful that the vital interests of a great section, itself almost an empire, will be safeguarded by you equally with the vital interests of the particular States and sections which you represent by special commission.

We are convinced that the Nation stands at a critical point in its economic development. Fortunately, there is the light of human experience to designate the proper path to take. The genius of the American people has transmuted a continent into the world's treasure house. The historians are as one in ascribing the downfall of Rome to the economic destruction of the free farming population, caused by the great wealth of the cities and the cultivation of the soil by cheap slave labor. A wise policy of protection has piled up prosperity and wealth in the United States. The rewards of manufacture have been large and constructively beneficial. Through protection it was possible to forge in this country the machinery of supply that terminated the Great War. This commanding success of manufacture, which is in itself a convincing demonstration of the value of protection, has enriched the great industrial centers and attracted to them the youth of the country. Invention has softened the asperities of rural life, but it has also visualized for the young man the superior rewards the city has to offer. The balance in attraction has been disturbed.

The South has been traditionally a great agricultural center. So, also, is it rapidly becoming a potent factor in pure industrial achievement. We speak for the South, however, when we say that the preservation of the integrity of its agriculture is of supreme importance. A national policy devised to restore some sort of parity between industry and agriculture is, therefore, of paramount interest to the South, as it is to the West. Our plea primarily is for an avoidance by this Nation of the economic error which sacrificed agriculture to the demands of manufacturing. We contend for a national policy so broad in its scope and so fair in its application that it will make the country self-sustaining in all its elements. We argue for a general prosperity on farm and in city alike.

This is the goal that all southern statesmen have before them. Unfortunately, the political tradition of the South has been favorable to nonprotective tariffs, and extraneous issues have influenced the South to support that theory. We hold no commission from the electorate, but we do speak for the enlightened business judgment of the South, which may rapidly become a political pronouncement, when we say that if the pending tariff legislation gives just and fair tariff protection to southern products the prosperity resulting will be an object lesson in the value of the protective principle of so convincing a character that the advocacy of free trade will cease to offer attractions.

The finished product of the farmer is the raw material of the manufacturer. We can not comprehend how any manufacturer can fairly contend for protection for his own finished product and at the same time protest against protection for the raw material that is the finished product of the farm. The doctrine of free raw materials breeds discontent and social unrest. The farmer protests, as he ought to protest, against having to sell in a free market and buy in a protected mart. That is discrimination and unworthy of sound statesmanship. We respectfully urge on you that when any manufacturer's finished product is granted protection there be accorded likewise to the raw material that the manufacturer uses, which is the finished product of the farmer, if produced in this country, corresponding protection.

Evidence has been presented to Congress to show that a considerable volume of American capital has been sent to foreign countries, where labor is cheap, with the intent of bringing back for sale in the American market the products of such cheap labor. We regard it as economic lunacy to erect barriers against the immigration of pauper labor and at the same time to permit the products of such labor to compete with goods produced under American standards in a free market. The country can be swamped no less by an influx of cheap agricultural products from the Orient than by the entrance of oriental labor. The latter is prohibited by law and the former should be.

The tides of economic destiny are not yet charted in Europe. A major catastrophe has swept aside old landmarks. Not only are the continental currencies in a state of flux, but there is also no longer a yardstick with which to measure foreign values. On all ad valorem duties the basis of valuation is determinative. A great gap will be torn in the whole fabric of protection if Congress fails in this emergency to recognize the new conditions with which trade is confronted. To base rates on foreign valuations when foreign valuations notoriously can not be accurately found is to make a covenant with uncertainty and cut breaches in the tariff wall. The assumed difficulties of administration under American valuation can not be compared with the difficulty of arriving at anything like a fair estimate of foreign cost. We ought to know our own business better than we know the business of other people. Surely we can trust our own valuations better than theirs. We can not understand how legislation, the very purpose of which is to maintain American standards, can reject American valuation. American standards and American valuations are almost synonymous terms in the present peculiar position of the world. The two will stand or fall together. * * *

We have given careful study to the tariff bill as introduced in the Senate. There are some features of it which are not in accord with the principles in which we believe. There is not adequate protection for certain products of vital importance to sound and general national prosperity, and particularly to the South. We seize the opportunity to present for your consideration the corrections that we believe to be desirable. Each such suggested schedule is the result of long and careful study on the part of those whose knowledge of their special industries is exact and thorough. No schedule is suggested that is in any respect out of harmony with the general purpose of the bill. The least possible protection that will meet the situation is asked in every case. It has been a constant purpose to do no more than ask for a differential which will take up the inequality between labor costs at home and abroad.

The emergency tariff act, the record shows, has saved whole sections in the United States and prevented great numbers of agricultural producing units from going under the sheriff's hammer. The evidence on this point is decisive and cumulative. We are convinced that an impartial permanent tariff act, spreading its benefits into every part of the Union, enriching no section at the expense of the other, but uniting all in general prosperity, will serve to establish permanently the protective principle in American legislation and policy. We urge upon you that you be solicitous to see that the pending tariff bill, when enacted into law, be of such a character, and it is to that end that our suggested amendments are brought forward.

In appraising the results of the emergency tariff act we find it has added $8 per ton to the farm price of cotton seed, or a total of $25,000,000 to the 1921 crop. It has added $18 per ton to the farm price of peanuts, or a total of $10,000,000 to the 1921 crop. It has added $12,000,000 to the farm value of the 1921 rice crop and saved the industry from destruction. It has saved the sheep and wool industry from annihilation and made it a prosperous industry. It has saved 90 per cent of the sugar planters of Louisiana from bankruptcy.

Without the emergency tariff act agriculture would have been completely paralyzed and many of our important agricultural industries would have perished.

Respectfully submitted by the schedule committee of the Southern Tariff Association.

E. A. Burguieres, chairman; B. E. Chaney, Stuttgart, Ark., rice industry; A. M. Loomis, Washington, D. C.; John M. Rogers, Washington, D. C., 817 Union Trust Building; P. H. Whaley, Washington, D. C., Munsey Building; T. S. Kenan, Atlanta, Ga., vegetable oils; E. A. Burguieres, New Orleans, La., sugar industry; Joe Chaffe, New Orleans, La., sugar industry; C. S. Matthews, New Orleans, La., sugar industry; Judge R. E. Milling, New Orleans, La., sugar industry; John J. Sheehan, New Orleans, La., sugar industry, rice industry; F. B. Wise, New Orleans, La., Rice Millers' Association; H. M. Grandstaff, Asheville, N. C., mica; W. S. Phillips, Brownsville, Pa., glass; E. A. Eignus, Beaumont, Tex., rice industry; J. S. LeClercq, Dallas, Tex., vegetable oils; Robert Ash, Washington, D. C., Munsey Building; Ed. Woodall, Hillsboro, Tex., vegetable oils; John H. Kirby, Houston, Tex., president Southern Tariff Association; P. D. Bain, Norfolk, Va., peanuts; Percy Stevenson, Norfolk, Va., peanuts; J. C. Beale, Norfolk, Va., peanuts; T. H. Birdsong, Norfolk, Va., peanuts; N. M. Osborn, Norfolk, Va., peanuts; J. B. Pinner, Norfolk, Va., peanuts; Frank Kell, Wichita Falls, Tex., flour milling; C. J. Harris, Dillsboro, N. C., clay; George A. Sharpe, Birmingham, Ala., graphite; C. A. Moffitt, Birmingham, Ala., iron and steel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have a large number of statements and petitions and communications entirely adverse to the views expressed in the remarkable document which has just been submitted to the Senate, but I shall not ask to have them read.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baldwin, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizen of Kansas City, Kans., April 3, 1922, favoring the passage of the Dyer antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors, Columbus (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the establishment and maintenance of an American merchant marine, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Columbus (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against further reduction of the Army and Navy personnel, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution adopted by Londonderry Grange, No. 44, Patrons of Husbandry, of Londonderry, N. H., protesting against the passage of Senate bill 2747, the so-called McNary cooperative reclamation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Colebrook, Portsmouth, New Castle, Rye, and North Hampton, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 2747, the so-called McNary cooperative reclamation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. SPENCER presented petitions of members of the Women's Self-Improvement Club, the Phyliss Wheatley Club, the Twelve Charity Girls' Club, and the Kensington Art Club, all of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of the Dyer antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented a letter from the San Francisco (Calif.) Labor Council, giving their views relative to the Volstead Act and favoring enactment of legislation permitting the manufacture and sale of light wines and beers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the making of an appropriation to defray expenses of training the citizen soldiery for a period of two weeks, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Los Angeles, Calif., protesting against increase in the postal rates on second-class mail matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Los Angeles, Calif., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of legislation to create a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (S. 3465) to amend section 42 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3291) for the relief of Henry Cordes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 603) thereon.

Mr. NEWBERRY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2436) to amend section 25 (a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 2743) to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 604) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 57) making the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 607) thereon.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3163) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) providing for survey of the Potomac River banks from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls, with a view to possible extension of the District park system, reported it without amendment.

MEAT PACKERS IN UNRELATED LINES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LADD. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, under the second resolving clause of Senate Resolution 211, I submit a report, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The report was read as follows:

REPORT.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which committee has been referred Senate Resolution 211, providing "that the Attorney General of the United States be requested to report to the Senate what steps, if any, have been taken to enforce and carry out the terms of said decree," being the decree entered by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on February 27, 1920, in the suit of the United States of America v. Swift & Co. and others, in equity No. 37623, recommends that the hearings before the Interdepartmental Committee on the question of modification of the consent decree in the case of the United States v. Swift & Co. et al., with reference to unrelated commodities, be published as a Senate document to accompany the communication from the Attorney General of the United States. The manuscript contains approximately 3,065 pages of typewritten data as the result of these hearings and contains most valuable material which should be made a permanent record available for use not only for the subcommittee in their hearings but to Congress as well, and will, in the judgment of the committee, be of great value for court use.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, the resolution reported by me from the committee provides for the printing of the hearings before the interdepartmental committee on the question of the modification of the so-called consent decree in the case of the United States v. Swift & Co. and others, with reference to business conducted by the meat packers in unrelated lines of industry. Under Senate Resolution 211, the committee have had under consideration and examination the report of the Attorney General, together with the hearings referred to, and request that they be printed as a part of the proceedings as a Senate document. There are approximately 3,065 pages, for which I have had prepared an index. We find it is almost absolutely necessary to have this matter printed before we can proceed with further hearings under Senate Resolution 211, and several Senators outside of the committee who have examined it think that it would be advisable and desirable to have it printed.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a document of that size I think should certainly have an estimate of the Public Printer of its cost before it is ordered printed without any further explanation; and the law further requires that a document of that size shall have such an estimate. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate briefly to just exactly what this document is.

I am not a member of the subcommittee. I have not heard the evidence, of course; but some time ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] introduced a resolution that contained two propositions. They both referred to the so-called consent decree in the packer cases, where an attempt was made by some of the packers to modify the consent decree that prohibited the packers from going into unrelated lines. The resolution that the Senate passed directed the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make an investigation of that subject. It also called upon the Attorney General to send to the Senate the information that he had.

At that time I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that this resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin contained two things. One was calling on the Attorney General for certain information. The other was directing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make an investigation of the same subject, and the suggestion that it be modified and proposing that we get the information first from the Attorney General, and then we could decide whether we wanted to investigate.

That proposition was rejected by the Senate upon a vote and the resolution passed; that resolution directed the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make an investigation of this subject, and also directed the Attorney General to make a return. It was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with directions to follow out the instructions of the Senate. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], acting in behalf of that subcommittee, reported to the full committee, and then was directed by the chairman of the full committee upon the approval of the report to bring this report, as he has done, into the Senate.

Mr. President, this investigation that was made in the Department of Justice in regard to the modification of this consent decree contained a good deal of evidence, as the report of the committee shows. It is of no value whatever unless that evidence is put in such shape that it can be read. I happen to know that there is a great demand for it from the calls that have been made upon me from all over the country, and also from other Senators, who, I presume, in turn have been moved by requests from their States asking for this document, which they suppose has been printed.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. The committee itself, so the subcommittee says, can not make an intelligent investigation of this subject, as it is directed to do by the Senate, unless that evidence is put in acceptable form. That is, it must be printed; and while I have not read the evidence, I suppose it will be explanatory, at least, of what was attempted to be done in the modification of the consent decree on the packer situation. It is a very important proposition.

When we passed the packer legislation, while the Congress did not pass the bill that I wanted or the bill that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate brought in here, we do know that the legislation was influenced to quite an extent by the fact that while these questions were pending before the committee the Attorney General went into court, with the consent of the packers, and obtained what is known as a consent decree. The legislation of Congress was undoubtedly modified because of the existence of that decree, which resulted in a permanent injunction in which the packers were enjoined from doing certain things. With that condition, Congress enacted the packer regulation act. If I had had my way, or if the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate had had its way, we would have ignored that decree entirely. We did ignore it in our investigations and in reporting our bill, but the Senate thought otherwise.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. The House also thought otherwise. We did not have our way, and we legislated on the theory of that decree being permanent law.

Not much time had elapsed after that legislation was enacted before an attempt was commenced to modify that decree. This evidence that was taken by the Attorney General was offered by the packers and by those who are opposed to the modification of the decree. It therefore bears directly upon the act passed by Congress that attempted, at least, to regulate the packers. The proposition now is to print that evidence so that it will become available.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Why, Mr. President, it seems to me self-evident—that is particularly true if this committee is going to make any investigation under the direction of the Senate—that that evidence must be printed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to yield to everybody in due time. Do not worry.

This document was brought to my notice by the chairman of the subcommittee when it was presented, and he asked me whether it ought to be printed, whether he had authority to have it printed in the hearings; and I presume technically he had. I told him at first that I thought the thing to do was simply to hand it to the reporter and have it printed as part of the hearings; but that night I got to thinking about it, and I thought, since perhaps it was the main thing that was to be investigated, that that ought not to be done unless the Senate ordered it done. So I saw the chairman of the subcommittee and took it up with him again, and suggested, as he said that the subcommittee had gone about as far as they could go without doing something with this evidence, that they make a partial report to the full committee, and that we would undoubtedly order him to make a report, or I would, if the committee authorized me to do so, direct him to make a report to the Senate.

That is how the matter happens to come to the Senate. I presume the committee could simply have had the evidence printed, and it would have cost just as much one way as the other; but it is better to have it printed as a Senate document, by itself, than it is to have it locked up with some of the committee hearings, for we are going to have demands for it, and we would have to fish it out of the hearings and send this evidence in connection with something else.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. First, let me yield to the Senator from Ohio, who rose first.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply desire to ask this question: Has the Department of Justice recommended any modification of that decree?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand not; although I have not read the evidence that has been presented.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask a further question. As I am told, this investigation was being made by one representative from the Department of Justice, one from the Department of Commerce, and one from the Department of Agriculture. Has that committee made any recommendation to the Attorney General bearing on the subject?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know; not that I know of.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator from Nebraska stated the proposition fairly when he said that the fact that this decree was entered modified the views of Senators somewhat with respect to the pending legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, there is not any doubt about it; and the thing is happening now that I thought at the time would happen—that as soon as Congress got through legislating and passed the law, there would be an attempt made to nullify the decree; but that attempt has not been successful. The evidence upon which it is based, and, as I understand, the evidence of the other side in controverting it, coming from the organization of farmers, consumers, and so forth, who have obtained notice of what was going on in the Department of Justice, constitutes this thing that the committee now desires to print as a Senate document, mainly because of the demand that is coming from the country, from people interested in the subject, to get it.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I simply wish to state to the Senator from Nebraska that the logical and obvious and natural way of dealing with this document would have been for the committee, under its undoubted authority, based upon a resolution adopted at the beginning of the Sixty-seventh Congress—a resolution such as is adopted at the beginning of every Congress, authorizing the committee to act through subcommittee under that resolution—to print this evidence in the report of the hearings. When, however, the committee brings in an excerpt from hearings to be printed as a Senate document there is a clear and unmistakable regulation with reference to public printing connected with documents of this bulk. Small documents, the cost of printing which can be estimated by anybody, because we know what it costs per page, are authorized to be printed here day after day by unanimous consent; but it has been the invariable rule of the committee, certainly since my connection with it—which has been during the whole of my experience in the Senate—to secure the estimate of the Public Printer in cases of this kind.

I wish the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from North Dakota to understand that the motion I have made to refer the manuscript and the report to the Committee on Printing is by no means made with any hostile intent toward the report or any of the suggestions which the committee makes. It is in order that in the case of a document of this size we may follow the logical, regular, and statutory method of having it printed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not criticizing——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the request of the Senator from North Dakota. The request was that he have unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of his report. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I say just one word?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator let me finish first? I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am not objecting even to having this resolution referred to the Committee on Printing. The thing I wanted to do, principally, and the thing that it seemed to be my duty to do, was to state to the Senate the exact situation. We probably could have had this evidence printed without coming to the Senate to ask for it, but it would not have been in as good shape as it will be if it is printed as a Senate document. It will not cost any more one way than the other.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interject right there that having it printed as a Senate document makes available for the use of the Senate only 300 copies, whereas if the subcommittee had proceeded to have it printed in its record of hearings, under its undoubted authority, it could have had all the copies necessary to meet the demand.

Mr. NORRIS. No; we are limited——

Mr. MOSES. The committee could have had a thousand copies to start with, and it could have had reprints made by order of the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. NORRIS. To cut the matter short, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota to withdraw his report, and we will try to handle the matter without bringing it into the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I only want to state that if this evidence is printed as a public document, the great bulk of the numbers of the print will go to the libraries throughout the country and to places where nobody will ever see them at all, and Congressmen and Senators will get only two copies in all. It seems to me it should be printed in a different way from that; but if the Senator is going to withdraw the request, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. LADD. I ask permission to withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request is withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I wish to make response to the inquiry propounded by my colleague to the Senator from Nebraska. I call my colleague's attention to the fact that the Department of Justice has taken no action whatever looking to a modification of this decree, and to the further fact that when an effort was made by the packers to have the decree modified the Department of Justice, as my colleague has stated, referred the whole matter to the court, as it were, made up of the three distinguished representatives of three separate departments, and before the matter came up here, and before this resolution was considered by the Senate, that court had already determined, and so reported to the Attorney General, that there ought not be any action by the Department of Justice looking toward a modification of the consent decree. So the department was not prodded into it; it had already acted promptly.

Mr. POMERENE. If my colleague will permit me, I had this matter up with the Attorney General some considerable time ago, shortly after he had determined to refer the subject to a committee consisting of one representative from each of the several departments. I did not understand at that time that he had come to any conclusion, but he very courteously indicated to me that this committee would be glad to hear anyone who was interested on either side of the case.

Mr. WILLIS. The thing I wanted to make clear to my colleague is the fact that this investigation had been had and recommendation had been made by these three investigators to the Department of Justice before any action was taken by the Senate on the resolution.

Mr. POMERENE. I had not known they had made any recommendation upon the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. A point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the Senator withhold his point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I withhold it for one moment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think I ought to make reply to what the Senator from Ohio has said. I have no interest in this matter. I do not know, and I care not, whether the resolution was offered or whether there was action taken by the Senate before the Attorney General acted. It is not my purpose to criticize anybody, but I want the facts known.

It was alleged that there was great danger of the Attorney General or his committee permitting the decree to be reopened and changed and modified. I think that was before the introduction of the resolution. The question was raised on the floor of the Senate as to whether they had made a determination, and I was informed by a Member of the Senate who had been in communication with a member of this committee that they intended to modify that decree. I do not know whether he was right about it or whether he was wrong about it; I think it is immaterial now. At least, it has not been modified yet.

It was the object of the resolution, I think, in part at least, to give publicity to the facts, so that in the future there would not be a modification brought about without laying the whole thing before Congress. I said when the resolution was up, I remember, that since it did affect legislation by Congress, it seemed to me that no Attorney General ought to consent to any modification without first submitting it to Congress, because of the peculiar way it came about. It affected legislation, because there would have been different legislation, without any question, if the Attorney General and the packers had not come to this agreement about the decree.

While I can not say what action the committee will take, it is very likely, at least, that when the committee get through with their investigation and make a final report to the Senate, they will recommend that no Attorney General ought to consent to any modification of the decree until Congress has given its consent to the specific modification.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I know the Senator from Nebraska wants the exact facts, because he is always fair. I call his attention to the fact that the original resolution for this inquiry was offered in the Senate on the 3d day of February, 1922. I have a copy of the resolution here. I call his attention to the further fact that in Exhibit B of Senate Document 145, beginning at page 18, he will find the report of the interdepartmental committee. That report was made on the 20th of January, two weeks before the resolution was offered in the Senate. That keeps the record absolutely straight.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad that is true. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio, before the Senate passes from this question, whether that was acted on, and when it was finally acted on?

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that the report of the interdepartmental committee was accepted by the Attorney General, and no further action was required.

Mr. NORRIS. When was it accepted?

Mr. WILLIS. The document does not indicate.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator has not shown it all.

Mr. WILLIS. I have shown it all. What I have undertaken to show was that the interdepartmental committee had already made its recommendation to the Attorney General before the resolution was introduced.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly, and it was probably pending there at the time the resolution was introduced.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Attorney General had taken no action on it.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly, and has not taken any action yet.

Mr. NORRIS. The Attorney General has taken no action yet.

Mr. WILLIS. And so far as I know, no action is contemplated.

Mr. NORRIS. There will probably be no action on the resolution.

Mr. BURSUM. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. WILLIS subsequently said:

In order to make the record absolutely straight relative to the matter just under discussion between the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the decision of the Attorney General as of date February 7, 1922, on the consent decree matter.

Mr. NORRIS. The action of the Attorney General, I understand, was after the submission of the resolution.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; the action was after the introduction of the resolution. The resolution was adopted the 3d of February.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Extract from letter of Attorney General in response to Senate resolution of February 3, 1922.]

On February 7, 1922, in agreement and in accord with the views of the Secretaries, the Attorney General approved such report and issued the following official statement thereon:

"On the question of a modification of the consent decree in the case of United States of America v. Swift & Co. and others, with reference to unrelated commodities, I have come to the conclusion that such grave and far-reaching questions which affect not only the provisions of the decree with respect to unrelated commodities but which also strike at the very foundation of the entire decree and are of such vital interest to the public generally are matters which, regardless of what position the Department of Justice might assume, must be ultimately decided by the court which entered the decree before any modification could be made, and as those who most strongly oppose any modification (namely, the wholesale grocers) are now parties to this cause, by intervention, which intervention has been sustained by the court since the request for this hearing before the Attorney General was granted, it seems that the way is now open for those who urged a modification and who so earnestly contended that they have been seriously injured by this decree and have never had their day in court, to present such questions and contentions in the first instance to the court for decision, without the same being in any way prejudged by the Attorney General.

"Therefore I feel that this request by the California Cooperative Canneries Co. and others for a modification of this decree should be presented in the first instance to the court which entered this decree and not to the Attorney General."

WEST FORK, SOUTH BRANCH, CHICAGO RIVER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment Senate bill 3177, a bill declaring a stream in Illinois nonnavigable, a bill urged by both Senators from Illinois, and to which the War Department has no objection. On behalf of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3177) declaring a portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, Cook County, Ill., to be a nonnavigable stream, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of that portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, extending west from the west line of the Collateral Channel of the Sanitary District of Chicago, in the northwest quarter of section 36, township 39 north, range 13 east of the third principal meridian, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL BANK CHARTERS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3255) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate power of associations, and I submit a report (No. 606) thereon. This bill permits the extension of national bank charters. It is urged by the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal reserve system. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. KING. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. CALDER. In view of the objection, I shall call this bill up at the very first opportunity. It is necessary that it should be passed at any early date, or hundreds of national bank charters will lapse.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 605) thereon.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator when he expects to call up the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I want to have it printed to-day and placed on the desks of Senators to-morrow; and if possible I shall call it up to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 3469) granting a pension to Charles E. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3470) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 3471) granting a pension to Adra Cranford; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT OF SENATE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment proposing to authorize an appropriation of $477,125 for intracoastal waterway, Bayou Teche to Mermentau River, La., in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 610, Sixty-third Congress, second session, intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3017, the Senate river and harbor bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. MARDIS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 278), which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to consider and determine the equities and enter judgment upon the claim of James W. Mardis, deceased, for the sum of $18,815.50, in full for property taken by the United States Government in the year 1867 for the United States Army, at the time of the establishment of Fort Ellis, near Bozeman, Mont., in the County of Gallatin, in the Territory of Montana.

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. DIAL. On April 12, 1921, I introduced a bill (S. 385) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, and on February 13, 1922, I introduced another bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act. These bills were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. No reports having been made thereon, I enter a motion that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar shall begin with Order of Business 398, where we left off at the last call of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will announce the bill on the calendar at that point.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1456) for the relief of Col. Herbert Deakyne, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A House bill identical with this has been passed, and this bill should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KING. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2493) to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE VAN DERBURGH BROWN.

The bill (S. 1297) for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 10, to strike out "$12,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$5,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George Van Derburgh Brown, of Brookline, Mass., whose wife was killed and he was severely injured, by being struck by a mail truck in use in the Boston postal district and operated by the Post Office Department, as a result of gross negligence on the part of the driver, on the night of Sunday, January 2, 1921, the sum of $5,000, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Merely for the purpose of offering an amendment, if it should seem necessary, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill just acted on was passed. I do not want to offer my amendment now. I want to talk with some person interested to see whether or not this would be a complete release of the Government from any claim by the estate of the woman who was killed, as well as a release by the husband. I have no objection to the bill being passed, and I merely note a motion to reconsider. On looking into the legal question, if I discover that there is nothing in that point, I shall withdraw my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a motion is entered to reconsider.

Mr. LODGE entered the Chamber.

Mr. KING. I merely enter a motion to reconsider. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is here now. If I may have his attention, I will say to him that I offered no objection to the consideration and passage of Senate bill 1297. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts the question that I raised when the bill was passed, namely, whether it was intended to be a complete quittance and discharge, not only for the death of the wife but for injuries sustained by the husband, or whether or not, in the form of the language here, the estate of the wife might not prefer a claim? All I am anxious for is that the Government shall be clearly relieved from all claims by the husband or the estate of the wife.

Mr. LODGE. I understand this closes the whole matter.

Mr. KING. I am not asking for any explanation. I am familiar with the case.

Mr. LODGE. It happened some years ago, and I understand there is no other claim.

Mr. KING. I think it is a little unfortunate that the bill was not drawn so as to make it clear, but on the assurance of the Senator I withdraw any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill stands passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 103) for the relief of Morgan Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2258) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. FRED S. JOHNSTON.

The bill (H. R. 927) for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Capt. Fred S. Johnston, supply officer One hundred and eighth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, the sum of $68 in full payment of all claims against the Government for reimbursement on account of newspaper advertisements of proposals for bids for forage supplies for the use of the Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, National Guard, United States Army, at Rochester,

N. Y., from April 26 to May 8, 1917, said advertisements having been published on the order of said Capt. Fred S. Johnston without specific authority of law or departmental orders.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTELLA BARNETT.

The bill (H. R. 3270) for the relief of Estella Barnett, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,250 to Mrs. Estella Barnett, of Toledo, Ohio, in compensation for injuries sustained April 24, 1920, in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, when struck by a United States Government mail truck.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNER OF VESSEL "MARIA ARTAU."

The bill (H. R. 5965) for the relief of the owner of the vessel Maria Artau was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,901.35 to the owner of the vessel Maria Artau as compensation for and in full satisfaction of all claims of such owner for any damages to said vessel sustained as a result of a collision between said vessel and the U. S. S. Kittery on August 7, 1917, in Santo Domingo waters, the responsibility for such collision having been placed on the U. S. S. Kittery by a naval board after investigation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask some member of the committee or some Senator who is familiar with the matter why we make a direct appropriation in cases of collision in some instances, whereas in others we authorize the parties to bring a suit before the Court of Claims, and when the Court of Claims has heard the evidence and adjudicated the liability then we make the appropriation? It seems to me it is discriminatory to make appropriations directly in some instances and refuse to make appropriations in others, and compel the parties to go to the Court of Claims and establish a lack of negligence upon their part and negligence upon the part of the Government.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, in the first place, the amount involved is comparatively small and the Navy Department unhesitatingly recommended the payment of the amount claimed. The Secretary of the Navy says there is no question that the U. S. S. Kittery was absolutely responsible for the accident and that there is really no question about the justice of the claim. In cases where the amount claimed is comparatively small, it has been the policy of the committee, and especially after the bill has passed the House, not to cause the parties to go to the trouble and delay of referring the matter to the Court of Claims. The bill now pending has passed the House. The matter was gone into very carefully by the Committee on Claims of the House, and our committee took it up with the Navy Department. It appealed to the committee as being a just claim.

Mr. KING. I do not like to object to the bill, but the Senator must know that a large number of claims have been preferred against the Government for collisions upon the high seas or in our harbors where it is alleged the Government was at fault. We have compelled in those instances the person who claimed to have been injured or damaged to go to the Court of Claims and establish the liability of the Government. Then after the Court of Claims has made a ruling we have made an appropriation where necessary.

Mr. CAPPER. I think the position of the Senator from Utah is correct as a general proposition, but there are many of these minor claims and it would be loading up the docket of the Court of Claims with a lot of small cases to refer them all to the court, and probably be a waste of time of the court. When the statement of the department is so clear on the matter, it seemed to the committee useless to go through the further procedure and expense of adjudicating such matters in the Court of Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. The claim is for a citizen of a foreign country, is it not?

Mr. CAPPER. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is true, I hardly think the bill is in the regular form. If the Senator will let it go over, I will look it up.

Mr. CAPPER. I am very glad to give the Senator an opportunity to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill is in proper form, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. CAPPER. The Navy Department is pressing the claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, when the United States declared war on Germany three sons of A. V. Howe, of Tallapoosa, Ga., volunteered for service. They were anxious to serve their country and concealed any physical defects which might prevent their acceptance. Their father was active at home in all war work. The records made by all of these young men reflected credit on themselves and their country. When the war ended they came home to find positions to take up work again.

About the time of their return Judge A. I. Head, the postmaster at Tallapoosa, resigned, and under President Wilson's orders these appointments were made on merit under an examination by the Civil Service Commission instead of the old spoils system. President Wilson had issued an order that ex-service men should be given preference in these examinations, and the first person on the list was nominated. Victor L. Howe, one of the three brothers I have referred to, stood the examination and was appointed postmaster. I am informed that he gave satisfaction to the people in the discharge of his duties.

A few days ago this young veteran was removed as postmaster. I have received letters from both Republicans and Democrats stating that his services were satisfactory to all of the people except a very few Republicans who were trying to get him removed before his term under his commission expired. It seems that nothing is cared about the removal reflecting on the character of this young man, who had fought and suffered physical disabilities for his country.

The few people who wanted this place evidently secured the assistance of the State Republicans, for two postal inspectors were sent to Tallapoosa, and I have information from reliable people that Howe has been harassed by some unjust and petty charges.

I have seen the inspection report, and the charge stressed more than any other is covered by a photograph showing, posted on the wall in the post-office lobby, a small cartoon of a man with a painfully disappointed expression on his face, saying "I voted for a change and got it." Another photograph showed a list of the young men from that county who had been in the service during the World War.

I have received many telegrams and letters, as well as a petition signed by a large majority of the people who are served by the Tallapoosa office. Years ago many Federal soldiers moved to that place, and members of the Grand Army of the Republic post there have protested against the removal. Capt. Harold Hutchens, who distinguished himself in the World War, now a member of the Georgia State senate and commander of the American Legion post, has entered his protest, as well as that of the Legion post.

I have shown these protests to the Postmaster General and urged that justice be done this young man, who served his country so faithfully during the war. I have confidence in the Postmaster General and I am sure he will go to the bottom of the matter.

Mr. President, I hope I may be pardoned for stating my personal interest in this young man, though there is nothing political. He served in the Sixth Engineers in France. My brother's only child, the youngest captain in the Army when he was commissioned, served in the same regiment and was killed in the Argonne while leading an advance of his company. Just after the armistice I went over all of the battle fields in which this regiment had taken part. It was several companies of this regiment who held the Germans when they had broken the British line near Amiens. It is marvelous how any of them lived through it all when one sees the fields where they fought.

Another personal reason, Mr. President, is that Tallapoosa is in Haralson County, which, like my own county of Polk, was formerly a part of Paulding County. These splendid people are my neighbors and good friends. I went to school with many of them, and Haralson County is in the senatorial district which elected me without opposition to the State senate, although counties in this district are often carried by the Republicans in national elections. My predecessor in the State senate, Hon. Edward S. Griffith, of Buchanan, an able man and lawyer, who has distinguished himself in his profession, lives in Haralson County.

Mr. President, the people of Tallapoosa and Haralson County deeply resent what they consider unjust treatment of Mr. Howe.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD statements from the American Legion post and the adjutant of the Grand Army of the Republic post at Tallapoosa.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN LEGION,
HEADQUARTERS ALBERT C. DIAL POST, NO. 58,
Tallapoosa, Ga., April 10, 1922.

It appearing that Victor L. Howe, a member of said post, having served in the World War, and honorably discharged after a period of voluntary service covering three years, two and one-half years of which were spent overseas, and after said discharge, having been commissioned postmaster at Tallapoosa, Ga., and serving satisfactorily to its entire patronage for a period of 2 years, 14 months of which has been spent under the present Republican administration, having been "summarily discharged for the good of the service," without specific charge, and without opportunity for defense, the following resolution has been adopted, and it is directed that copies of the same be sent to Senators HARRIS and WATSON and Congressman GORDON LEE and State of Georgia headquarters and national headquarters of the American Legion:

"Be it resolved by said post, That Victor L. Howe, as postmaster, has given unparalleled satisfaction to the entire patronage of the Tallapoosa post office.

"That unanimous protest is by this resolution voiced at the removal of an ex-service man of unquestionable character, integrity, and ability for the gratification of any partisan, political whim.

"That this post charges said discharge was not in good faith, but was had on a report of fake charges, intentionally preferred by dishonest inspectors of purely political and partisanship purposes.

"That it is not the intention of this post to enter into any political controversy, but it considers the present case to come entirely within its legitimate purview, if for no other purpose than to foster a spirit of fairness and possibly prevent a recurrence of such a breach of faith on the part of the Post Office Department or any other governmental agency.

"That no censure be directed at the present temporary appointee, he being considered as having had no part in the false chicanery incident to the removal of the former postmaster."

HAROLD C. HUTCHENS, Commander.
CHAS. J. VANCE, Adjutant.

—

Post No. 4, Grand Army of the Republic, composed of Republicans who have fought the battles of the party all their lives, wish to go on record as opposing the removal of this young soldier from office until his time is out, as we believe the boys who risked their lives for their country are entitled to and are deserving of their country's gratitude, and should be honored with any trust or office that they are capable of filling.

This young postmaster, Victor L. Howe, was a volunteer soldier who spent nearly two years in the trenches in France with the American Expeditionary Forces as a private, and came home after a protracted hospital experience badly broken in health. He has never taken an active part in politics, has a leaning toward Republican principles, and had a different person been named national committeeman from Georgia he, with a score of others I know, would have voted the Republican ticket in 1920. This office was never conducted in a more satisfactory manner to the public than at present. By carefully looking after the business, especially the parcel-post packages, he has succeeded in raising the office from third to second class, and we believe this has been accomplished by his efficient service and business methods. In this connection I will say this young man has not taken advantage of the situation of employing additional help which the law allows, but, on the contrary, he, with the assistance of one other young man, a Republican and the son of an old Union soldier, is doing all the work, thus saving the Government the expense of an additional clerk, which is allowed in a second-class office.

F. A. JONES.
Past Department Commander, G. A. R.,
Adjutant Post No. 4.

SUPPLY CORPS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2390) to redistribute the number of officers in the several grades of the Supply Corps of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT JUNE.

The bill (S. 1245) for the relief of Robert June was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask for an explanation from the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who introduced the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This is a bill to compensate an employee of the Government, Robert June, for injuries sustained by him during the course of his services on the Panama Canal Zone. He was an overseer or superintendent of work and had charge of a train loaded with earth or sand at a time when there was a flood on the Chagres River which was washing away an embankment. He was trying to save the embankment, which was being destroyed by the flood in the Chagres River, to the detriment of much property of the Government. He found it necessary to pass between the cars; he could not go around the train, as it looked as though the train would slide down the embankment. A subordinate employee gave the signal to the engineer to move on while this man was between the cars, and he was, as a consequence, very seriously injured. The order should not have been obeyed, because it was not given by one in authority; but it was obeyed, the engineer thinking that the one who gave the order had authority to give it. June had not placed himself in a position of danger with reckless disregard of his life. The train was stationary when he attempted to go through, but while he was going through the signal was given to move on and he was thereby severely injured, as is shown by the statement of General Goethals, who states the nature of the accident, how it occurred, and so on.

This employee subsequently tried to return to work, and did return for a time, but he was later compelled to leave. He has suffered several operations and to-day has a disabled side, an almost complete stiff knee, and the joints of the body on his right side are practically ossified.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Would not this case come under the Federal compensation act?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has been thought not. This man tried to obtain the benefits of that act on several occasions, but it was considered to be a case requiring a special act of Congress. In the first instance, I suggested to him that he seek relief under the compensation act, but he said he could not secure relief from that source.

Mr. KING. I am unable to understand why that act is not broad enough to include the case which is now presented by the Senator. It would seem, if we pass any legislation at all, if that act is too narrow, that we should extend its provisions so as to bring this man within the law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the Senator from Utah is right about that, but this is a case of immediate necessity. There was no pressure brought to bear upon the committee, but this bill was submitted to them and they were asked to look into the facts. I have looked into them and I have submitted the facts as they have been presented to me. It was the opinion of the committee that the claim ought to be allowed. Whether he should be allowed $5,000 is a question for the Senate to determine, but there is no doubt at all that the Federal Government owes this man compensation. He is disabled on account of his service to the Government and without his fault, and it was not a case of assumed risk.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that under his statement this man should be compensated, but I do suggest for the consideration of my friend the question of the wisdom of making direct appropriations, in view of the fact that we have a commission to investigate cases of this character, which commission is authorized to make payment and grant allowances in accordance with fixed and graded standards under which this man may take his place along with the others in the Federal service who have met with similar accidents.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The fact of the matter is that even if the general compensation law were applicable to this case it would not, in my judgment, afford sufficient relief. If, however, the Senator from Utah seriously objects to the consideration of the bill, inasmuch as I am not able to state to him now just what has been done along the line he suggests, although I am sure something has been done, I am willing to consent that it shall now go over, if he will consent that the bill may come up and at least be discussed the next time the calendar is called. Meantime I will look into the matter and see if I can obtain sufficient information to answer the questions which the Senator from Utah has asked.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator's wishes in that direction, and I wish him to feel that there is no captious objection at all on my part, but merely if there is a law covering the case, I think we should not now go outside of it and pass a special act.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think any case has been brought to my attention which has enlisted my sympathy more than has this particular case. Mr. June was formerly an active young man with a bright future before him; but he is not so to-day. His present condition is entirely due to the accident which occurred while he was in the employ of the Government and, I repeat, without any contributory negligence on his part.

Mr. KING. I hope that on next Monday this matter may again be brought up.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan why this case does not fall within the general compensation act?

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I have previously answered the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I am not prepared just at this moment to answer that question. I know that certain reasons were urged against it. I shall endeavor to ascertain and submit to the Senate on the next calendar day what those reasons were.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I presume the reason this case does not come within the provisions of the compensation act is that the injury was sustained before the passage of that act. The injury is reported in the bill as having occurred in the month of June, 1908.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that is probably a full answer to the question; that the accident occurred before the law to which the Senator from Utah refers was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill itself states that the compensation is to be "for injuries sustained in the month of June, 1908."

Mr. KING. That was 14 years ago.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is when the accident occurred.

Mr. SMOOT. The only law, then, upon the statute books covering such a case was that which provided that those suffering injury should be granted one year's salary. I will ask the Senator to look into the question which has been raised—I will ask the Senator to look into that question——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. And to ascertain if the employee injured did not fall under that law; and if not, why not; although when I come to think of it, if my recollection serves me right, even that law was passed after 1908, and he did not even come under the original law authorizing the payment of one year's salary for employees injured in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am sorry that I am not informed in reference to that detail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2380) for the relief of Henry P. Collins, alias Patrick Collins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2654) for the relief of Almond S. Root was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

FRANK FERRIN.

The bill (H. R. 2004) for the relief of Frank Ferrin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I inquire if objection has been made to the present consideration of House bill 2004.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection to that bill. I have looked into that case, and shall make no objection to it.

Mr. PHIPPS. The bill has been very carefully considered by the committee and its passage recommended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Frank Ferrin shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Company H, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension, bounty, pay, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN CLETNER.

The bill (S. 2632) to correct the military record of Martin Cletner was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection to the consideration of that particular bill. It has been very thoroughly examined and considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. A printed report on the bill is in the hands of Senators. I beg to call the Senator's attention to the concluding sentence of that report, which reads:

Your committee has studied carefully the evidence submitted by the War Department and is inclined to give credence to the affidavits executed by Cletner (or Cubbler) contained therein. It is considered entirely reasonable that Cletner, who was but 19 years of age, should have been separated from his command as described in the second affidavit, that he was unable to locate his company, that he should return home in accordance with advice given him by the sergeant of a provost guard at Hagerstown, Md., and that he, a minor, should obey his father by remaining home, particularly in view of the latter's assurance that his case had been taken up with Captain White, who, according to the father, had "fixed that matter * * *" and return would not be permitted.

In view of the fact that Cletner was assured by his father that his record had been cleared and that he would not be permitted to return to his company, and his subsequent service resulting in confinement as a prisoner for nine months, followed several months thereafter by an honorable discharge, your committee urges favorable action.

This bill carries us far back into the Civil War, and it is thought to be a just thing to clear his record. I hope the Senator will permit the bill to be considered and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret very much to have to object to some of these measures, but we are having reported not only scores but hundreds of bills—not in this Congress, but during the past few years—to relieve persons from the charge of desertion. The report accompanying the bill for the passage of which the Senator is just pleading contains this statement by Gen. P. C. Harris, The Adjutant General:

Nothing has been found of record to show that this soldier was captured in 1862, as alleged by him, nor to corroborate his other statements relative to his whereabouts after the date of his desertion and his failure to return to his command.

Application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in the case of this soldier has been denied, and now stands denied for the reason that the period of his absence between his desertion from Captain Wrigley's independent company, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and his reenlistment in Company C, Third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, exceeded four months, which fact precludes favorable action under section 3 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 869), which is the only law in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion and the issue of discharge certificates to soldiers charged with desertion.

I will say to the Senator that between now and the next calendar day I shall examine the evidence very carefully; but I want to give notice now that unless there is some very strong reason why charges of desertion should be removed, I shall oppose these bills. I am willing that men who served shall be compensated; but deserters do not appeal to me very strongly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. This man was a lad 19 years of age at the time, and the committee considered all that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope also that if this bill is considered the usual provision will be put upon it, which I notice the committee failed to insert; and if it passes the way it is now, I am not quite sure but that the soldier would draw a pension and all these bounties from the day the first pension bill was passed. The usual proviso is "that no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act." That has been left off of this bill. I think, as it is now presented to the Senate, if it became law, this man would have a perfect right to draw a pension from the time the first pension bill was passed up to the present day; so whenever the bill is to be considered, I shall certainly want that proviso put upon it, anyway.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is entirely correct upon that point; but the proviso should also include pensions and state that "no pension, bounty, pay, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. SMOOT. "Other emolument" covers pensions, as I understand.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would be better to use the word "pension" in connection with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the suggestion of the Senator would be more specific.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

RICHARD PARKE.

The bill (S. 2179) for the relief of Richard Parke was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object. Let it go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes. There is no report here.

Mr. CALDER. I beg the Senator's pardon; there is a report.

Mr. KING. All right; I will withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this bill grants an honorable discharge to Richard Parke, of Company A, First Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry. It appears that this soldier enlisted for the Civil War. He served about five months with his command, and then, taking a furlough, returned home. Meeting some younger friends of his, he immediately enlisted in another regiment, and served for nearly three years. He was honorably discharged from his last service. He holds that discharge; but because of his first service he is technically barred as a deserter. Where it can be shown from the records that the soldier on the second enlistment engaged in combat and obtained an honorable discharge, it seems to me that at this time, when he is past 80 years of age, and he and his family desire to have his record cleared before he passes away, it is eminently fair to have that done.

I am perfectly willing to have a proviso added to this bill "that no pension, bounty, payment, or allowance shall accrue prior to the enactment of this measure." We have passed bills of this character over and over again where the last service of the soldier was honorable; and I may say that this bill passed the Senate at the last Congress, but failed to get through the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no information is given in the report as to when the soldier reenlisted or how long he served. Can the Senator from New York state when he reenlisted and how long he served?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the bill provides that he shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as of the 22d day of August, 1862, indicating that he must have deserted on that date. The report indicates that—

Although it appears from the facts submitted that Parke left his first command and was, therefore, technically guilty of desertion, it also appears that he very soon thereafter reenlisted in another regiment and acquitted himself with full credit during the greater part of the war, receiving a discharge from his latter assignment and service.

Mr. SMOOT. It makes a great deal of difference to me whether after the desertion he entered into the service and then served during the war. If that is the case, I should not have any objection at all to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CALDER. I know that that is true, Mr. President, from my intimate knowledge of the case and the record, and the report indicates it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether the soldier reenlisted under his correct name or under another name?

Mr. CALDER. Under the same name.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator know whether or not this transaction took place in order that a bounty might be paid?

Mr. CALDER. I do not, Mr. President. I never inquired about it. I do know that the soldier is now past 80 years of age, a very old man, in very poor health, and probably will hardly live the year out.

Mr. FLETCHER. Those things sometimes happen where there is a reenlistment in order to get a bounty.

Mr. CALDER. I know they do. I know of many cases of that kind. This young man, however, was about 18 years of age when this incident happened. I may say that he had four grandsons in the World War, and they brought this matter to my attention. They want their grandfather's record cleared before he dies.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as I understand, this man has an honorable discharge from his last enlistment?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That entitles him to a pension, does it not?

Mr. CALDER. It does not.

Mr. SMOOT. Not until the charge of desertion is removed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Richard Parke, late of Company A, First Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 22d day of August, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not think that bill could be disposed of before 2 o'clock; so I will ask that it may go over, in order not to delay the consideration of other bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 2885) to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to this bill, in the nature of committee amendments.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if this is not the bill that we considered some time ago?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; this is a supplemental bill. I said to the Senator at that time that another bill would follow, clearing up some other projects. This is not nearly as large or comprehensive a bill as the former one.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I should like an explanation of the bill from the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will do my best. First, the Senator will not object, I assume, if I offer two amendments to the bill?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And I invite his attention to them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let us have an explanation of the purposes of the bill first, before we take up its consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are committee amendments. The Senator does not mind my perfecting the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I will explain it, of course.

Mr. KING. I do not want it understood that by perfecting it we waive the right to object.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, not at all.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 2, I move to strike out lines 11 to 16, in the following words:

Fairfield Air Intermediate Depot, Fairfield, Ohio: For the acquisition of 544.28 acres, part of the lands now occupied under lease at Wilbur Wright Field, and for acquisition of site and rights of way for sewage disposal plant and electric power line in connection therewith, $165,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 3, line 8, I move to strike out the figures "$134,032" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$39,328.56," so as to read:

Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C.: For the acquisition of an addition thereto and for the site of medical museum and library, in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated for that purpose, $39,328.56.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the two amendments which I have just offered bring about a reduction in the aggregate appropriation made in this bill of $259,703.44. In explanation of those amendments, it turns out that there is no necessity for the Government to acquire permanently the land at the Fairfield Air Intermediate Depot. It would not be to the financial advantage of the Government to do so; and therefore the committee, on the suggestion of the Secretary of War, has asked that that be stricken out, and that has just been done.

In the case of the Walter Reed General Hospital item it may be well to recollect that two or three years ago in one of the appropriation bills authority was given to the War Department to acquire land adjacent to the Walter Reed Hospital in order to make possible the enlargement of that hospital. Proceedings have gone on now for two years or more in the acquisition of that land. Some of it has been acquired by agreement with the owners and some has been condemned. The condemnation proceedings have proceeded toward a conclusion, but there still remain a few parcels which have not yet been acquired. The deficiency bill signed by the President on March 20 last carried an appropriation to pay for those parcels in connection with which the condemnation proceedings have been finished. That appropriation was $94,703.44. The deficiency bill was introduced and passed through both Houses of Congress after this bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Therefore it is necessary, of course, the Congress having already appropriated for the payment of the parcels which have been settled in the condemnation proceedings, to deduct from this bill the amount carried in the deficiency bill.

Now, Mr. President, as to the bill in general——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject, can he give the Senate a little further explanation concerning the item relative to the Fairfield depot? As he knows, I have sought to keep in pretty close touch with the situation with reference to McCook Field, and I have had no information concerning the plans that were made for what seems to be here the final abandonment of Wright Field. Is it the purpose of the War Department to give up Wilbur Wright Field?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will read the letter from the Secretary of War on that question, or at least that portion of it which is applicable to that particular project. He says, under date of February 11, 1922, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee:

Among the projects on which legislation was requested were the following:

Middletown Air Intermediate Depot, Middletown, Pa.: To complete the acquisition of real estate, $165,000.

Fairfield Air Intermediate Depot, Fairfield, Ohio: For the acquisition of 544.28 acres, part of the lands now occupied under lease at Wilbur Wright Field, and for acquisition of site and rights of way for sewage-disposal plant and electric power in connection therewith, $165,000.

Since the date of my previous letter, modifications of the War Department program now make it unnecessary to acquire by purchase the land in connection with the Fairfield Air Intermediate Depot, provided the appropriation requested in S. 2885—

That is this same bill—

(H. R. 9632) for the Middletown Air Intermediate Depot is made available, and in addition, the $50,000 carried in H. R. 7158, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, for the acquisition of real estate in connection with the Ordnance Storage Depot, Middletown, Pa.

That last item is already law.

Mr. WILLIS. So far as the Senator is advised, then, this proposed legislation has nothing to do with any lease which may have been made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has not.

Mr. WILLIS. It simply goes as a matter of permanent acquisition?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Secretary of War thinks there is no necessity for the permanent acquisition by purchase of the land. When a former bill was before the Senate, which contained, as I recollect, 13 or 14 items, I explained that during the war the War Department, wisely or unwisely, built a large number of tremendous projects. In many of those projects they erected buildings of a permanent character—factory buildings, ordnance storehouses, supply bases, depots, docks, warehouses on the water front in some of our greatest cities, such as New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Charleston, New Orleans, and huge installations in the interior.

The work was done so rapidly that in many instances the Government did not have time, or did not have the funds later, to acquire the land on which these permanent buildings were erected. Congress very wisely, I think, in 1918 forbade the War Department from purchasing any more real estate until the Congress could get a bird's-eye view of the obligations of the Government in the matter of acquiring land.

The result has been that since 1918 the department has been faced with this impossible situation: Millions of dollars worth of buildings stand upon land not owned by the Government in whole. In many instances it is owned in part, but a parcel here and there under the buildings is not owned by the Government. The result is that the Government can not sell the buildings to any advantage, and it can not lease them to any advantage. Its title is not secure. Some of the leases have run for four years. Some of the rentals now turn out, in time of peace, to be excessive. In some instances the land was requisitioned from the owner, but the intervening action of Congress of 1918 has prevented the Government from ever paying the individual for the land taken from him. It has been the effort of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, as well as the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, to cooperate with the War Department in cleaning up some of these situations in order that the Government may get rid of this property, if the Congress so decides. It is within the power of the Congress alone, of course, to sell real estate. The matter would not be important, so far as dollars and cents are concerned, if it were not for the fact that these immensely valuable buildings stand upon lands the title to which does not as yet rest in the hands of the Government.

The principal item in this bill relates to the inland warehouses at Philadelphia. Of the total amount carried by the bill, which is now considerably less than a million dollars, $575,000 is for that one project. I invite the attention of Senators, if they care to examine it, to the report of the committee, which recites what has been done there. We have buildings on that property of a permanent or semipermanent character, upon which we have spent, together with the expenditure on the railroad track, $3,025,000. The land upon which it stands has been held under lease from the Girard Estate at an annual rental of $6,070. The trustees of the Girard Estate have no right, under the terms of the trust, to sell the land to the Government. The Government may only acquire the land by condemnation proceedings. I think it is fair to say that the trustees of the Girard Estate, in making this lease with the Government and permitting its renewal, have acted in a patriotic spirit.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that the value of the land is $500,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Five hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. That is the estimate made by the War Department as to what it would cost if subjected to condemnation proceedings, and my further understanding is that the trustees of the Girard Estate do not contest that.

Mr. SMOOT. We have a lease on it at $6,000 a year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; practically a nominal lease.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a nominal lease. It is a little over 1 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is practically a nominal lease. That is conceded.

Mr. SMOOT. Can we extend that lease?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is renewable hereafter, but the Girard Estate can not stand it any longer. There is a limit to the endurance even of an estate. The Senator will recollect that this estate is not a business concern. It is a great charitable and educational establishment.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the report show to what date the lease is renewable?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Up to June 30, 1922.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the end of our power of renewal?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The lease is renewable to June 30, 1922, and with renewal privileges thereafter.

No one regreats more than I that it seems necessary to expend money in this way, but if the Government is ever to get back any considerable percentage of the huge investment which it made during the war on these projects the only way to get it back is to complete the title to the land. Then the Congress can direct the Secretary of War to sell the property, and, after owning the land under the buildings, the property can be sold as a unit and can bring in something commensurate with what the Government has spent, because it then can be sold for general business purposes, or the Government, under the direction of Congress, can lease the property.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is familiar with the property, I ask him if, in his opinion, it is possible for the Government, after paying $575,000 for the land, to sell the land and the property for very much more than $575,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pause just a moment, I will state that the lease——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Government can not do that we should not put any more money into the project.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand. The report states:

Acquisition of title would be necessary in order for the Government to advantageously dispose of its heavy improvement investment in the event that it was decided to sell this project in the future.

Because of the status of the title to the property it is necessary that acquisition thereof be had by condemnation proceedings. Appraisal obtained by a representative of the Government in April, 1919, showed a fair value at that date to be from $8,000 to $8,250 per acre.

This is near the city of Philadelphia. The Government has to pay, under a lease, only $6,000 for the whole thing, which is practically nominal. The report continues:

On May 23, 1919, the general manager of the Stephen Girard trust agreed to accept a price of $8,250 per acre for the property in a friendly condemnation suit, which represents a total of $500,775, with the understanding that the Government was to assume all cost in connection with the proceedings and that said price would be net to the estate. This offer was made in letter form, and it is not known at this time whether such price would still be acceptable. It is believed that any appropriation for the acquisition of this property should be in the amount $575,000, which includes the amount of the original offer to sell plus an allowance for a normal increase in the value of the property since the date of the original offer and sufficient funds to cover the cost of the expenses contingent upon the acquisition by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems that the Government has spent as much as $300,000 in improvements on this property.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would cost $145,000 to remove all we put there and restore the property to its original condition, which we would have to do under our contract, and get what we could out of the wreckage, which would not be very much. So it is necessary to get title to the land in order that we may handle it and get something out of the improvements which we have put on it.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question that I have in mind is whether the Government is going to use the property for a number of years to come.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A portion of the property now contains some buildings which the Government is using somewhat actively. On this property, in addition to these huge warehouses, is the establishment of the Army at which is manufactured the clothing and equipage. To that extent that portion of the property is now a permanent institution. That is not the whole of it. But there has been moved from other places and centralized at this point the depot which is the largest clothing and equipage establishment the Army has. That is now in operation, of course, on nothing like a war-time scale, but merely for the manufacture of clothing and equipage for a peace-time Army. We have no other place where that activity is carried on. That is the one place now left. That portion of it, it is understood, in all probability it would be good policy for the Government to keep. But other portions of it, which the Government has and can not now dispose of, it has under lease.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to say that at 2 o'clock I shall ask unanimous consent, if no other Senator does so, that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside until we can finish the calling of the calendar under Rule VIII. We ought to finish the calling of the calendar once in a while. We shall have all day to-morrow, if necessary, to consider the unfinished business, and we ought to finish the call of the calendar by 3 or 4 o'clock. When the time comes I shall ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. That, of course, can only be done by unanimous consent.

On the pending bill I will say that I would prefer not to have the Government put a single dollar into the property, but take its loss now, if those buildings have to be demolished in a very short time; but if the buildings are to be used by the Government and are necessary for the Government, then I think perhaps it would be a wise proposition to purchase the land. If it is only a temporary makeshift, if it is a question of saving the wreckage of buildings, then I say let us not buy it. Let us take our loss now, and I think the first loss would be the best one. But if, as I say, we are compelled to use the buildings, and if the Government needs will be of a permanent nature, I have no objection to the appropriation; but unless they are, I think it would be very unwise to buy the property.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator must recollect that we can not lease this property beyond June 30 next at anything like the rates we are now paying.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The report does not so state.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present lease is not renewable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It states that there is no renewal privilege in the present lease, but in the last sentence of the report occurs this statement:

> This figure, coupled with the net salvage and restoration loss to the Government amounting to $145,000, would make a total expenditure of $595,000 necessary in the event of abandonment of the project, due to failure to acquire the title and possible inability to procure a new lease.

It does not appear from the report anywhere that negotiations have been prosecuted for leasing the property, and that there has been a refusal on the part of the owners to renew the lease. It simply says the lease contains no renewal privilege, but admits the possibility of securing a lease. It is proposed to make this expenditure of half a million dollars to acquire a lot of property we shall have to negotiate the sale of afterwards, perhaps under conditions that are not as favorable as when we acquired it, taking into account the whole statement with regard to this property, that there is only a small portion of it that will be useful to the Government; and it seems to me preposterous to make this large investment, in view of what has already been put in. If we are going to eventually have to tear down these buildings to put this real estate back in its former condition, as near as may be, and sell it and take our loss, to add a half million dollars in further investment, quite unnecessarily, it seems to me is not a good proposition for the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not agree with the Senator that if we acquire the property——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that we may go on with the call of the calendar. I do not think it will take more than an hour or two longer, and then we can spend the rest of the day on the unfinished business, and all day to-morrow, if necessary. I think the call of the calendar ought to be finished once in awhile. The tariff bill will soon be coming on, and then I do not suppose the calendar will be called for three months. I appeal to Senators to join with me in granting the request. We did not reach the calendar until 1 o'clock to-day, most of the time up to that hour having been taken in discussing a matter not before the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, as the proponent of the joint resolution which is the unfinished business, I have no objection to having it temporarily laid aside to conclude action on the bill which was under discussion when we reached the hour of 2 o'clock, if it can be brought to a conclusion within a reasonable time, but I must object to continuing the calendar beyond that. I am very anxious to have the joint resolution disposed of. I shall speak but briefly upon it, and it can be disposed of very expeditiously. We can then go back to the calendar, but I do want to discuss the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senator from Montana that it is the intention to ask that we may proceed with the call of the calendar to-morrow or, in case the pending joint resolution is disposed of to-day, to take it up then. We can proceed with the calendar until 2 o'clock to-morrow in case the joint resolution is not disposed of before that time. I agree with the Senator that the calendar ought to be called to its conclusion.

Mr. MYERS. I appreciate the information imparted by the Senator from Kansas, but——

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator from Montana that the calendar should be called to its conclusion at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, until it is finished to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest that the motion is out of order.

Mr. MYERS. Why is it out of order?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senate can not proceed by motion to take up the calendar after 2 o'clock.

Mr. MYERS. A motion can be made to take it up at any time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator can move to take up a bill that is on the calendar, but not the calendar.

Mr. MYERS. I challenge the correctness of the Senator's interpretation of the rule. I believe I may move to consider the calendar under Rule VIII at any time. I submit the point of order for the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. There can be no call of the calendar after 2 o'clock under Rule VIII. A Senator may move to take up any particular bill or the next bill on the calendar, and if the Senate so desires it will be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that he ask permission to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily until we can dispose of the particular bill which was pending when the unfinished business was laid before the Senate. I understand the Senator from New Jersey does not object to that.

Mr. EDGE. I do not object if the bill can be disposed of within a reasonable time. I presume the Senator in charge of the measure can not tell as to that. If it can be disposed of in the next few minutes, I am satisfied to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily for that purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Montana that I, too, am anxious to take up the calendar. I have spoken with several Members on this side in the last two or three days, and I have been assured that during the next day or two, or some time during the week before we take up the tariff bill, the calendar will be taken up and the Senate will go through it. I think we ought to go through it before the tariff bill is taken up. I am in hearty accord with the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. We proceed with the calendar, but it is never finished.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to take it up when we can finish it. I think we ought to go on with the unfinished business now and dispose of it and then take up the calendar, and when we reach the bill of the Senator from New York we can dispose of that. It looks now as though there would be considerable discussion of that bill, so I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The business before the Senate is the unfinished business, which has been stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator withdraw that for a moment until I make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, and the consideration of the calendar having ceased, objection was not made to the further consideration of the bill which was under discussion when 2 o'clock arrived. Am I correct in understanding that upon the resumption of the consideration of the calendar to-morrow, for example, the bill which was then pending will be the first to be considered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Senate otherwise directs, under Rule VIII the call of the calendar will commence at the beginning of the calendar; but the Senate may direct the call of the calendar to commence at any point.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, expressing my own personal view, I hope we may begin where we left off to-day and finish the calendar, and then go back to the beginning if we have time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think we ought to do that. I think when we start on the call of the calendar we ought to start at the beginning. There are usually some bills left over because the time of the Senate is so short up to 2 o'clock that we do not always get to them. I think when we start on the calendar to go through it we ought to begin at the beginning. I would not consent to-day to begin to-morrow where we left off to-day. I may consent to-morrow to begin there, but I would not consent to-day to do it.

Mr. STERLING. It was but recently, only two or three days ago, I think, that we began at the beginning of the calendar, and we have gotten this far now on the second day's consideration of the calendar. I think that those who have bills on the calendar following the bill of the Senator from New York, which was under discussion at 2 o'clock, have a right to insist that they shall be considered.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and reported from the latter committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Lodge	Sheppard
Broussard	Hale	McCormick	Simmons
Bursum	Harreld	McKinley	Smoot
Calder	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Stanley
Caraway	Heflin	Myers	Sterling
Culberson	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sutherland
Cummins	Johnson	Newberry	Swanson
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Dial	Kendrick	Oddie	Wadsworth
du Pont	Keyes	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	King	Pepper	Warren
Fernald	Ladd	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	La Follette	Pittman	Willis.
France	Lenroot	Poindexter

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 188 has been presented for the purpose of endeavoring to find a method to assist or at least to relieve the present distressed condition in industry, which I think is universally admitted to exist. I propose to speak but briefly on the terms of the provisions of the joint resolution, because it appeals to me that the necessity for congressional action, or at least for any effort we can put forth is in this direction, is so obvious that a long discussion would be unnecessary.

The joint resolution in itself simply provides for the appointment of a congressional committee consisting of three Senators and three Members of the lower House. The title of the joint resolution expresses directly its object, and I will read it: It provides for—

> Creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

The title sets forth very clearly that the object of the inquiry is to endeavor to find a method, if it can be discovered, and then through legislation to make it easier for industrial organizations to keep within the law. In other words, there is not the slightest thought or idea of taking away from the courts any power, but, on the contrary, it is an attempt to keep from courts, whose dockets are already congested, those cases which might properly be kept from them if a proper tribunal existed under the Government for the purpose of assisting industry and business and defining the rights of industry and business under existing acts.

Trade associations have been in existence for many years, but during the World War, under the impetus of governmental encouragement, such associations greatly multiplied. To-day there are, I believe, over 2,000 so-called trade associations. They number in membership from 20 or 30 individual concerns to hundreds of individual concerns, aggregating, I should say, as a safe estimate, three or four hundred thousand individual concerns, covering all the States in the Union.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator concludes, I should like him to discuss the point that I am about to suggest. At first I was somewhat in sympathy with the purpose of the Senator's resolution, as I interpreted it, but upon further consideration I am not so sure but that it is a scheme—and I do not use the word offensively—by manufacturers and other persons who are engaged in business and trade to evade the Sherman antitrust law.

The Senator from New Jersey knows that Mr. Eddy a number of years ago conceived the adroit and subtle method of effecting trade associations and trade organizations by which trade agencies and instrumentalities were so perfected that they have come within the denouncement of the statute. The Hardwood Lumber Co. case showed just what those trade agreements are. I am afraid that the business men and manufacturers of the United States, profiting by their experiences in the war, when we winked at combinations in restraint of trade and destructive of competition, want to perpetuate that condition and want the Government to modify the Sherman antitrust law so that they may organize to throttle and destroy competition and build up gigantic monopolies which will be oppressive to the American people.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am very glad to be interrupted and to answer any question along the line of my discussion or argument, but the Senator from Utah has introduced into the argument, I might say, an inquiry as to a possibility which, so far as the proponents of the resolution are concerned, is so far beyond any purpose underlying the resolution that it seems to me it has not even a place in this discussion.

Further than that, Mr. President, is it not almost a libel upon the intelligence of Congress to assume, following the report and recommendations, whatever those recommendations might be, which the committee of inquiry might present, that Congress could not in its wisdom and judgment, as is always the case, decide according to that judgment as to whether such recommendations were wise or unwise?

Let me make it thoroughly understood that the commission proposed to be created is to have absolutely no power so far as the determination of a policy for Congress is concerned. It is to be appointed simply and solely for the purpose of making inquiry and endeavoring to ascertain some method by which the present admitted conditions of depression, inactivity, inertia, and hesitation may be improved, and report its findings to Congress.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. Just one moment.

So far as any amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act is concerned, I have not heard such a suggestion made by any one of the representatives of the trade organizations with whom I have in any way consulted. Only four or five days ago the Secretary of Commerce held a conference in the department building, at which some 400 or 500 representatives of commercial and trade organizations were present. Speeches of various kinds were made. I was only there a short time, but the idea was presented that Congress should at least listen to business men and permit them to have some tribunal before which they could come in order to demonstrate their troubles and their difficulties. That suggestion does not involve the thought that the commission is going to come back to Congress with any recommendation except what they believe to be in the best interests of the business development of the country.

Now, just let me give a little idea of the scope of these trade organizations. I hold in my hand a book published by the Department of Commerce relative to organizations existing in every State in the Union, agricultural, industrial, and commercial. Such organizations are not localized in the East or the West, but they are scattered all over the country. Reading here I find that they have headquarters in Knoxville, Tenn.; Kansas City, Mo.; Billings, Mont.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Milwaukee, Wis.; El Paso, Tex.; Milwaukee again; Chicago; Philadelphia; Syracuse; Indianapolis; Boston; Richmond; Columbus, Ohio; Seattle, Wash.; New York; Rochester; Portland, Oreg.; Indianapolis; Youngstown, Ohio; Beaver Falls, Pa.; El Paso, Tex., again; Huntington, W. Va.; Milwaukee, Wis.; San Francisco, Calif.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Los Angeles, Calif.; San Francisco, Calif.; Seattle, Wash.; Toms River, N. J.; Rochester, N. Y.; Gardner, Mass.; Grand Rapids, Mich.; Greensburg, Pa.; High Point, N. C.; Charlottesville, Va.; Hartford, Conn.; Houston, Tex.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Bridgeton, N. J.; Wheeling, W. Va.; St. Louis, Mo.; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Kansas City, Mo.; Denver, Colo.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Charlotte, N. C.; Argos, Ind.; Atlanta, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.; Kansas City, Mo.; Woodbourne, Pa.; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Abilene, Kans.; Natick, Mass.; Neenah, Wis.; Providence, R. I.; and so on, demonstrating that the organizations of the various local industries are more or less scattered throughout the different sections of the country.

After the joint resolution was introduced, without having consulted in any way or discussed it with representatives of trade organizations in Washington, I received dozens and dozens of letters from business organizations throughout the country. As indicating the character of the letters I wish to read for the RECORD a few excerpts from them. I quote first from a letter from the secretary of the National Federation of Construction Industries:

It was extremely fortunate that we were just holding the annual meeting of the National Federation of Construction Industries at the time you introduced in the Senate a resolution asking for the appointment of a joint committee to consider and advise as to legislation affecting business cooperation.

I have been directed by the membership of the federation to send you the following resolution adopted by them in session on April 6 at the Drake Hotel, Chicago:

"Whereas a joint resolution has been introduced in the Congress of the United States asking for the appointment of a joint committee to consider and advise as to legislation affecting business cooperation; and

"Whereas this federation is aware of the need of such legislation for the fullest development of the commercial fabric of the Nation: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the National Federation of Construction Industries, in convention assembled, heartily indorses the efforts of Senator EDGE, of New Jersey, and Representative MCARTHUR, of Oregon, to bring this need to the attention of Congress; and, be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the introducers."

The following is from a letter from Warren, Pa.:

Please accept our commendation for your efforts in endeavoring to clarify the situation regarding trade associations. We believe that the resolution introduced in Congress by you is a practical and common sense way of accomplishing something that is vitally necessary to the welfare of not only business men but the country at large. You have our best wishes for the success of this measure, and we shall do whatever we are able to assist you.

From a letter of the Barnes Manufacturing Co., of Mansfield, Ohio, I quote the following:

I am very much interested in the bill with reference to trade associations, and if possible would like very much to have a copy. There is certainly need of clear legislation with reference to trade associations—that is to say, as to what they can do and what they can not do. I do not think there is any question but what 95 per cent—

I direct the attention of the Senate particularly to this statement—or more of the manufacturers are honest and want to stay within the law, but it has been impossible to know what could be done with safety.

I am in hopes your bill will clear up this situation and that it will go through.

From a letter from the National Association of Chair Manufacturers I quote the following:

The views which you expressed are indicative that the much-needed legislation giving positive definition to trade association activities has taken concrete form, and I sincerely trust that while your initial attempt to secure passage of your joint resolution was not possible, that you will devise means so that the joint resolution is passed at an early date, and that the committee will commence its investigation.

We have as trade association executives two distinct types, one being the lawyer who builds a clientele of trade associations and the other type a practical executive versed in the detailed problems of the industry and therefore able to speak for the industry from an actual acquaintance with its needs rather than from a theoretical standpoint.

From the Talking Machine Association I quote the following statements in a letter received from them:

We have noted with a great deal of interest the introduction of your joint resolution for a congressional committee to investigate the causes of business depression. As the talking machine and allied industries are especially subject to the varying winds of trade, thousands of our readers throughout the country will undoubtedly be interested in the undertaking you have in hand.

Here is an excerpt from a letter from the American Trade Association Executives, which is an organization embracing, as I understand, the executives of various trade organizations:

I was much interested in your address at the trade association conference in Washington on Wednesday last.

It was the consensus of opinion of the executive officers of the associations represented at that conference that the resolution offered by you should have early and favorable action by the committees before which it now is.

The question of the activities of trade associations is one entirely and properly subject to differences of opinion, and therein lies the difficulty. There is no question in the world that some of the trade associations have trespassed on the law and assumed such form as perhaps to constitute monopolies in restraint of trade. Various cases were taken to the Supreme Court. One well-known case, the Hardwood Lumber Co. case, has been referred to. That case was decided by a divided court, three judges dissenting from the majority opinion. The decision in effect was that the hardwood association had, through its practices, tended to restrain competition in trade in contravention of the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Other cases have been cited—I am not entirely familiar with them all—setting forth other instances where activities along certain lines have been in violation of that act.

Mr. President, it is exactly that situation which we desire to clear up; it is from that situation from which 2,000 trade organizations, representing an individual membership of perhaps half a million firms and individuals, desire to be relieved. In my judgment, they have a right to come to Congress and ask Congress if it is possible to do so, to define through proper legislation—not through a repeal of or an amendment to the Sherman Act, but through proper legislation—what they may and what they may not do. I do not think a Member of this body will question for one moment the correctness of the statement made in one of the letters from which I have quoted that 95 per cent of the manufacturers and business men of the country are honest; and when they ask us to give them some idea of the manner in which they may legitimately act, rather than to be haled into court, rather than to be indicted on account of some practice or action which may be questionable, and as to which even the Supreme Court is divided in its decisions, they have a perfect right to expect at least that much consideration at the hands of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he can name any statute of the United States which has been defined so many times by the courts of the United States as the antitrust laws, which were inaugurated 32 years ago?

Mr. EDGE. No, Mr. President; I am afraid I can not discuss from a legal standpoint with my learned legal friend from Nebraska just what the Supreme Court has decided in these various cases. I know only three or four generally-referred-to cases. Perhaps there have been more; but, in that connection, it will perhaps help answer the Senator's question——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator name an act of Congress that has been more carefully and repeatedly defined in detail by the courts of the United States than the antitrust laws?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator is asking rather an unfair question. Of course I can not. I am not sufficiently familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court to attempt to go into a discussion of that kind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator point to any provision in the antitrust laws which has not been passed on by the courts of the United States and defined by them?

Mr. EDGE. I can name a number of them. I will in just a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the Senator do so. Is it not a fact that there are three or four volumes filled with the decisions of the courts of the United States exactly defining the meaning of the antitrust laws in practically every line?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the mere fact that these decisions have been handed down by the Supreme Court—if I wanted to take the time I should really like to read the Hardwood decision and others into the RECORD—and that the judges have generally gone over, in preparing the decisions, the possibility—follow this, now; I am putting it in as good legal language as I am capable of putting it—of some of these practices of State associations indirectly violating the Sherman law is again the very reason why a clear definition by legislation must be given these associations, or they are practically helpless.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the difficulty the Senator is talking about. I think, however, it comes from a different cause than perhapse the Senator does. The Supreme Court has very often passed on cases—and, as the Senator says, very often by a divided court—involving the question whether the acts complained of are or are not violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act. There have been, as anybody who is at all familiar with the record will admit, various cases where it must necessarily be difficult to say whether or not they are a violation of the law, because the Supreme Court itself divides. It has gotten to be a fashionable thing to have a five-to-four decision; but I want to submit to the Senator that the reason why that comes about is because various corporations and organizations and combinations of corporations are seeing how far they can go and still escape the penalties of the law in the way of forming monopolies.

Mr. EDGE. There is not any question as to that, Mr. President. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Nebraska. There is a natural tendency on the part of business corporations or organizations or associations to go just as far as they feel they can go. That is human nature; and yet, with it all, I think the Senator will agree with me that 95 per cent—again I repeat the number—of the representatives of these trades and industries want to keep absolutely within the law.

Mr. NORRIS. I think most of them do, at least. I do not know what the percentage is, but I always believe that the majority of people and the majority of organizations are honest and want to do what is right; but if the Senator could define this matter by law any clearer than the court has defined it, he would still be up against the proposition that people who wanted to take advantage of the law would see how far they could go to get around that definition. We never will escape from it.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I am going to reach a possible solution of this problem; but I am not presenting it excepting as one possible solution that such a committee of inquiry as I am proposing could investigate and, I think, meet the situation of which the Senator has just spoken.

Going back to the question of the senior Senator from Nebraska, the difficulty with these many-times-defined provisions of the Sherman Act, as the Senator puts it, and the difficulty on the part of business in being just positive as to what that act does prohibit or does not prohibit, is, as I understand, primarily because these decisions are rendered in general terms. I hope the Senator is following me. I am trying to answer his question. These decisions—the Hardwood decision particularly—are rendered in very general terms. The Hardwood decision does not say, "You shall not put out joint advertising," for instance, or "You shall not standardize a production of some character." It says, in general terms, that the general activity of the association has, in the judgment of a majority of the court, trespassed upon the act. That is the reason why I come back here and say that all these other 1,999 associations, reading the decision in the Hardwood case, will say, "Well, where are we at? If we do this particular thing, has that been under direct question by the Supreme Court?"

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. So I suppose if it is practical and possible—and certainly it does deserve consideration—that we study the question of having the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, or the Department of Commerce, or some other governmental tribunal, clothed with such authority that when associations want to start along certain lines of activity they can apply to the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Commerce or whatever Federal body is delegated with the authority, and be given, just as the Interstate Commerce Commission gives to-day, orders and certain powers and privileges which would at least give them an opportunity to renew activity.

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina. I think he rose first.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has not the Senator a bill now pending before the Judiciary Committee carrying out his ideas?

Mr. EDGE. As I answered the Senator from North Carolina a similar question a few days ago, I introduced with this joint resolution a bill which provides a method similar to that of which I have just spoken.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was wondering——

Mr. EDGE. Just a moment, please; the Senator has asked me a question, and I am trying to answer it. At the same time I stated publicly on the floor of the Senate that my only object in presenting the bill was in order that the committee, if authorized, would have the bill as one of the methods or suggested methods before them in order to study it, and have an inquiry that perhaps to some extent would be made on that bill; that is all.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was wondering what was the need of a great investigation, costing hundreds and thousands of dollars.

Mr. EDGE. What was the need of an investigation of the agricultural interests of the country, that has cost this country some fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars, which I think was well spent? What was the need of other investigations we have had recently but to get facts and figures and evidence so that we can intelligently pass upon the facts brought out in them?

Mr. OVERMAN. We have had investigation after investigation on this subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from New Jersey, at the time he was interrupted by the Senator from North Carolina, had reached a very interesting phase of the discussion of this question, and it was about that that I rose to interrogate him. As I understand, while perhaps this joint resolution does not in terms bring that about, the Senator wants a condition by which there will be some official organization, some governmental body like the Federal Trade Commission, to which these corporations or individuals can apply, and set forth what they propose to do, and get an opinion from them as to whether the proposed action is legal or illegal. Is that right?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, that is quite correct; and let me supplement that, because there is a very interesting possibility connected with it. I am not entirely prepared to discuss the legal side of this matter, but only to this extent: I realize that such a tribunal could not and should not give immunity from the law to anybody who inquired. I have no such idea as that; but I do believe that the first responsibility we should have is to try to keep people out of court if we can.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. EDGE. And if they can go to such a body and get some general line of information, it would certainly be helpful.

Mr. NORRIS. We ought to keep people out of court as much as we can, and the law ought to be made as plain as possible with a view to doing that; but I think it must be apparent to the Senator, as I think it would be to any person who would study it—and I think the matter has been discussed a great many times by great legal minds, and studied by lawyers of a great deal of ability—that just the moment you provide for such a governmental body, the effect will be, no matter what you may mean, at least within the scope of the jurisdiction of that governmental body that can give an opinion in advance, that it means immunity to the very limit of the opinion that is given by that body. In fact, it ought to. If the Senator and I were sitting as judges to pass on the legality of an act of some corporation, and a law had been passed that permitted the Federal Trade Commission to give an opinion in advance as to what they could do, and they came up before us, and there was any doubt whatever, and they said, "Here is the opinion of the Federal Trade Commission, in which they say that they think it is all right for us to do this," I think we would hesitate a good while before we would condemn it. It would be immunity in practice; but while it may not always look so to the lay mind, the history of civilization and jurisprudence from the beginning of civilization shows that courts ought not, where it can be avoided, to give an opinion in the way of a moot court; that there ought to be no moot decision. In other words, anybody, whatever you might call it, that had that power would in effect be a court; and if a court were given the power to pass on things in advance, in the end——

Mr. EDGE. What does the Senator consider the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with their orders, decisions, and so forth?

Mr. NORRIS. They do not have such power.

Mr. EDGE. They have power to-day to pass on rates and to interpret law to the extent that, as I understand, it is practically almost a judicial power.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in lots of cases; but, as I understand, they have no such power, and no other organization that I am familiar with has such power as the Senator has outlined and proposes to give.

Mr. EDGE. I have not outlined any power, Mr. President. I am not proposing any positive or finally definite remedy. I am simply suggesting that if a committee of inquiry, after exhausting all possible investigation and having representatives of business and representatives of the governmental departments and others give information before them, can devise a means by which we can minimize litigation or encourage business to go along certain lines we will have accomplished something; and it does seem to me that Congress is wholly unjustified in refusing to give the business interests of the country at least an opportunity to come before a committee of Congress to tell of their troubles and their present difficulties primarily because of these decisions like the Hardwood decision.

Now, let me give you—I have started several times and have been diverted from it——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has twice mentioned the Hardwood case as though that left matters in any doubt. The Senator has read the decision in that case, and he can not possibly escape the conclusion as to exactly what the court found, because it can be boiled down into one short paragraph of that decision, the final paragraph of the judge who rendered the decision. He said:

The evidence is clear that the purpose and effect of the activities of the open competition plan here under discussion were to restrict competition and thereby restrain interstate commerce in the manufacture and sale of hardwood lumber by concerted action in curtailing production and in increasing prices. We agree with the district courts that it constituted a combination and conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce within the meaning of the antitrust act.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; they say what they can not do, practically, in effect; but they do not say what they can do, and that is what I am trying to find some method of discovering for the business of this country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator is giving the impression that these hundreds of decisions of the courts carefully defining the original antitrust act and its amendments have left the business world in real doubt as to what the intention of Congress was.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, with all the language at my command I reiterate that statement. They are in real, positive doubt as to what they can do. That decision plainly states that, so far as the organization of the Hardwood Association was concerned, their practices were illegal. That is settled. The Supreme Court has so decreed, even though it was by a divided court. But they do not state in that decision how far trade associations can go, and that is the question to-day that makes for the hesitation. I want to read this statement, which I think will to some extent give the Senate a little idea of the activities of these trade associations and the reason why they would like to have a little clearer definition as to whether some of these other activities will be in contravention of the provisions of the Sherman Act.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the courts, in passing upon the antitrust law, have gone always to the very heart of the proposition, namely, what was the purpose of the people who engaged in the combination? What was the effect of what they did? Every one of these court decisions which has denounced such combinations has either found that they resulted in destroying or impairing competition, in restraining trade, or in increasing prices unreasonably. In this particular case, which the Senator criticizes, it was proven that the result of this combination within its very first year was not only to restrict the production of hardwood but to increase the price of oak from 33 to 296 per cent, to increase the price of gumwood from 60 per cent up to 343 per cent, and of ash lumber from 55 per cent to 181 per cent. How can the Senator say there is any doubt about a decision that such combination was not only in restraint of trade but was destructive of competition and resulted in an outrageous increase of prices at the expense of the consumers, the very thing the antitrust laws were designed to prevent?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am not defending in any way the hardwood trade; quite the contrary. I think I have made my position quite clear. We do not question the final decisions of the courts of this country. In that case the court was undoubtedly justified, or the decision would not have been made. It was a violation of the Sherman Act. But that is water over the dam. At the same time, I do not think the Senator from Nebraska will contend that there is not a useful purpose to be served by these trade associations, and in view of that type of rather sweeping decision and recognizing the millions and millions of dollars involved in the development of business through proper organizations, legal cooperation, legal organizations, these trade associations are trying to find what they can do. We would not decide on any policy by the adoption of this resolution. Surely the business men of this country have a right to have an investigation made to decide what it is possible for them to do. Perhaps legal entanglements will make it impossible to give them relief, but no one is in any way, shape, form, or manner attempting by this inquiry to amend the Sherman Act. That suggestion is anticipating a thought that is certainly not in the mind of the proponent of the resolution.

These trade associations are active along the following lines: They concern themselves with the collection of domestic credit information, with the handling of insurance in different forms for their members, with standardization of quality and grades of their commodities and products, so that the public may have reliable grades, and some have supported inspection to see that these qualities are maintained.

They have concerned themselves with simplification of trade terms, elimination of unnecessary varieties in dimensions of different articles, with conduct of arbitrations, with joint advertising of products of the industry, with securing prevention of infringement in trade-marks and designs, the promotion of welfare work in the organization of employees, with employment insurance, with the problems of apprenticeship and trade education, and the prevention of accidents.

They have policed in many cases their own membership, in order to keep them within the jurisdiction, as far as it is possible to define it, of the antitrust acts.

They have concerned themselves with representing the views of the trades in legislation on tariff, taxes, transportation, and so forth. They have concerned themselves with freight rates, overseas transportation charges, uniform bills of lading, with statistics as to production and stocks of goods, with scientific accounting.

All of which frequently make for lower costs to the consumer in the market.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I am endeavoring, as far as I can, to follow the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. It is rather difficult with the interruptions, I agree.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not mean to intimate that the Senator from New Jersey is not making himself perfectly clear, but if I gather the gist of his complaint it is this, that there are a vast number of enterprises and organizations in charge of those enterprises which are fearful that certain policies, certain plans and activities, if carried out, may be within the inhibition of the Sherman Act, althought they feel they are not, and although they believe that these things are in themselves legitimate and designed to encourage or to stabilize business. Is that the Senator's idea?

Mr. EDGE. To an appreciable extent; yes.

Mr. STANLEY. If that be the case, and the Senator's purpose is to see if it is not possible to organize a commission which shall apprise these associations or individuals, upon request, whether or not a proposed plan of operation having to do with price, or output, or the cost of transportation or of production, or any other thing, is a legal or an illegal plan, whether it be an arrangement of insurance rates, or a pooling of freight rates, or the regulation of an output, or the fixing of price, or any other of a thousand things that business enterprises often prefer to do in common rather than to do individually on their own initiative. Is not that the idea that the commission is to so advise?

Mr. EDGE. That is one idea, I might say to the Senator from Kentucky, if it can be found legally possible to have, for instance, the Federal Trade Commission delegated with what might be termed interpretative administration power, if that is good in law.

Mr. STANLEY. That is a very apt expression, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. However, I do not consider that that is the only object of such a commission as I have proposed under this resolution.

Mr. STANLEY. That is one of the objects?

Mr. EDGE. That is one of the objects, if it can be successfully brought about. If not, Congress is here to hear the report of the commission. I quoted with great pleasure and entire approval the resolution presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], providing for an agricultural inquiry a year or so ago, which resolution was adopted unanimously. They have just brought their report in quite recently. I have looked over two volumes of it myself. They have recommended certain legislation, some of which has been presented, I believe, and it has great merit. Their inquiry has done much, and I think will do more, to help stabilize agricultural conditions, and everybody knows they deserve our consideration. It is not entirely fair for Congress to assume that this commission is suggested with some ulterior object of repealing or amending some antitrust act. Under this resolution the Congress would give away no power at all. If after three or four months of hearing the difficulties of industry, which, after all is said and done, represents the employment or nonemployment of millions and millions of men and women, the committee comes back to Congress with a few constructive suggestions which can be put on the statute books in the way of legislation, they will be performing a good service. That is all this resolution provides for. I can not see any reason for an objection to the inquiry. Perhaps there will be great reason for difference of opinion as to some of the legislation which may be proposed, but that, of course, we can not discuss now. We do not know what it will be.

Mr. STANLEY. I can not say that I am inclined to agree with the Senator, but I can see the pertinency of his suggestion. We are regulating to death, ad nauseam, ad infinitum, about 95 per cent of the business of this country, and perhaps there is no great reason why we should not regulate everybody and everything. For one, I am in favor of curtailing this regulation rather than enlarging it, and I do not hold that it necessarily follows that because the Government has made a vast number of blunders it should institute a universal policy of blundering. Because it has stuck its nose into a hundred places where its nose had no business is no reason why a governmental nose should be everywhere.

Mr. EDGE. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand it, the Senator says that he proposes to advise business enterprises and business associations as to the propriety of the proposed policy for the conduct of business, and in order to advise them he would have a committee appointed which should investigate the propriety of creating a commission to advise these people as to whether or not they were within the provisions of the antitrust act before embarking upon a line of business, rather than have the courts penalize them for their conduct after they had embarked upon a policy.

Mr. EDGE. If that is legally possible, that would be a wonderful help to the industrial world. Whether it is or not, I am sure I am entirely incapable of deciding.

Mr. STANLEY. God might do it if he had time. I do not think he will. Outside of the Almighty—and I say it reverently—I am not willing to intrust that kind of a power to any tribunal clothed with the power to grant plenary indulgences for violations of law.

But may I ask the Senator from New Jersey——

Mr. EDGE. Apropos of the Senator's remark just made, I have never proposed delegating plenary power to any commission at any time, and I do not want that thought of for one moment. I have tried to qualify every reference to that possible help to industry. I thought the Senator clearly understood me.

Mr. STANLEY. That may have been the conclusion of the pleader, but I gathered from what the Senator said that he desires to create a commission which shall have the power to advise——

Mr. EDGE. To advise Congress.

Mr. STANLEY. To advise Congress or anybody else, and ultimately to advise business as to the legality of its course. Would the Senator put on that commission lawyers of a certain number of years' training and experience, or would he make it a hodgepodge?

Mr. EDGE. Is the Senator from Kentucky discussing the complexion of the congressional committee?

Mr. STANLEY. The personnel of any body vested with power to advise the business of the country as to the legality of its proposed conduct.

Mr. EDGE. Inasmuch as the Senator from New Jersey has not suggested that, it does not seem he should be expected to answer such questions. So far as the complexion of the commission or committee of Congress, it is provided in the joint resolution very clearly that three Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, shall constitute a committee to consider the subject, to call before them such witnesses as they may desire, and to do all such things that such commissions are naturally expected to do in the investigation of the subject. So far as all the other possibilities are concerned, they are entirely foreign to anything the proponent of the joint resolution had in mind.

Mr. STANLEY. Has not the Senator a bill now pending before Congress providing for such a commission?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; the Senator from New Jersey has introduced a bill, which was referred to in the statement I have just made, to be considered by the commission if the commission so desire.

Mr. STANLEY. And the joint resolution provides simply for a body of Congress to study the propriety of the creation of such a method as is set forth in the bill?

Mr. EDGE. That is one of the possibilities.

Mr. STANLEY. Then let us stick to that until we get through——

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I can not yield the floor for an argument. I am not through.

Mr. STANLEY. I am not endeavoring to make a speech, if the Senator please, but I want to get the Senator's idea.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will propound his question, I will endeavor to answer it.

Mr. STANLEY. That is exactly what I propose to do. Would the personnel of the Senator's commission be composed of lawyers of a certain number of years' training, or would he put anybody and everybody on it?

Mr. EDGE. If such a commission were authorized by Congress, and powers of interpretative and administrative capacity were delegated to such a commission and I had the appointing power, with all due regard to the profession which the Senator from Kentucky represents, I would try to find four hard-headed business men and perhaps one lawyer. But not having reached that position at all in the consideration of the legislation, I think it is entirely apart from the object of the joint resolution we are considering.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would have to go outside of the Senate to make up his committee, would he not?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from Nebraska misunderstood me. I was not talking about a congressional committee. I was answering the Senator from Kentucky as to the type of tribunal which would be appointed if Congress passed the bill to which he referred.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator was referring to the committee. Of course, the Senator could not get that kind of a committee in the Senate. He could get neither business men nor lawyers.

Mr. EDGE. I will not argue that with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. STANLEY. A tribunal having no knowledge of the law would be much better suited to interpret the law than one that had; but conceding that, if the Senator had his commission and it was composed of hard-headed business men and the hard-headed business men would come before two hard-headed business men, neither one of whom knew anything about the law, to find out whether they were violating the law or not, what would be the difference between such a unique organization and the Supreme Court of the United States delivering a declaratory judgment upon the same subject?

Mr. EDGE. It does not make any difference, and I do not desire to consume any further time in discussion along that line. In my judgment, many of the business men of the United States, a large majority of whom it is conceded are honest, would like, if possible, by consultation and advice, to find methods by which they can keep out of the Supreme Court of the United States and all other courts of the United States.

In conclusion, and I am only going to speak a moment longer, I would like to point out the fact that the trade associations as organized to-day are certainly in the large majority of cases not the type of combination that seems to be indirectly criticized in remarks which have been made in the propounding of questions. As a matter of fact, if we will go over the report of the Department of Commerce, though I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it now, it will be found that in a large majority of the trade associations the membership is made up almost exclusively of small concerns throughout the country. The large concerns are not members of trade associations, generally speaking. It is not necessary for them to be members of trade associations. They have great big organizations; they secure all the statistics they need to work out all their different activities. They do not want, perhaps, to give all of their knowledge and secrets of trade, or whatever you may term them, to all their competitors throughout the country.

The fact remains to-day that in all the associations about 60 or 70 per cent of the membership, representing active firms in the various industries, are the small members scattered throughout the country, all over the United States, who, because of that membership, are given a certain service that they can not otherwise get because of their smallness. They meet together; they get bulletins and information about standardization, about insurance, about rates, export trade possibilities, and the general development of business. The large concerns do not need that. Their organizations are complete without it.

Again, I think I referred briefly to the fact that the organizations are known to have done splendid work in policing the activities of their individual members. In other words, when some member trespasses in some way upon the law or the policy of the association in the matter of fair dealing or fair trademarking, and so forth, that member has been suspended. I have a book giving numerous cases where suspensions have been made by the association simply because of such facts. I do not think there can be any question raised as to the real service of the trade associations.

The legislation, therefore, boiling it all down to the joint resolution, goes no further than to permit representatives of those associations, as several of them have written to me—and I have read their communications into the RECORD—to come before a commission of their kind, to tell their troubles to the commission, to discuss their situation, just as the representatives of agriculture very properly discuss their problems, and to find, if it is possible, some remedy. Then Congress gets the report of that commission. Congress is in no way committed to any particular policy or a departure from existing statute or policy. We are simply permitting the business of America, representing hundreds of thousands of industrial toilers throughout the United States, as well as the millions of unemployed to-day, to have a public body representing them, so they can come to that body and see if it is possible to work out remedial legislation to help in the development of their trade and of the industrial activities in which they are interested. Shall we deny them that right?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I ask——

Mr. McNARY. I believe the Senator from New Jersey yielded to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I merely wish to ask the Senator if he desires to discuss the matter to which the Senator from New Jersey has directed himself?

Mr. McNARY. I desire to propound a question to the Senator from New Jersey concerning the cooperative organizations mentioned in section 2. It appears that the committee is to define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade. The Senator from New Jersey will recall that Congress a few weeks ago passed a bill which was signed by the President defining the rights of cooperative organizations, particularly those engaged in agricultural activities. Is it the intention under the joint resolution that the committee to be appointed shall report to Congress the limitations prescribed in the joint resolution, as compared with illicit combinations, when the act defining those cooperative organizations plainly sets forth the scope of their authority?

Mr. EDGE. No; and I do not read the paragraph in that light at all. It is not so intended. The Senator should start at the beginning of the section—

That it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry—

The Senator should read the section in its entirety—

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States and the markets of foreign countries, in so far as the same directly affect industry and commerce of the United States, including questions as to production, distribution, labor, and business methods, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation, if any, as it may deem best upon these subjects, with a special reference to the most effective ways and means to revive industry and to stimulate foreign and domestic trade, to stabilize business conditions as to the future, to minimize the danger and distress of recurring periods of business depression with their resultant cycles of general unemployment, and to define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

If I get the point of the Senator from Oregon, he asks whether the committee itself will define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations. The committee under that authority, as I understand it, and so believed when the joint resolution was prepared, will suggest, if they decide that it is wise so to do, legislation that will do the very thing we have been discussing here for an hour—whether it is possible to suggest legislation that will define the difference between what the Sherman Act prohibits and what it does not prohibit. That is all. They can not give a legal interpretation of an act. The joint resolution does not provide that. It is simply the one great big question. The purpose of the commission is to see if it is possible to define the differences. If the commission can find a way, they are instructed to report it to Congress.

Mr. McNARY. The commission may suggest legislation in their report, if they think it is advisable, defining the rights of cooperative organizations?

Mr. EDGE. That is right.

Mr. McNARY. There are no rights to define. The authority vested in cooperative organizations to transact business is clearly and accurately defined in the act which we passed during the present session of Congress.

Mr. EDGE. Does not that refer only to a certain type of cooperative organizations? I thought it referred only to agricultural organizations.

Mr. McNARY. Of course.

Mr. EDGE. It does not refer to trade and industrial associations.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I wanted to know. Would not the Senator be willing to clarify that by saying in the joint resolution that the commission are to define the rights and limitations of business associations? Is not that in fact what he intends?

Mr. EDGE. Certainly; there is no thought of anything else.

Mr. McNARY. Then I would suggest to the Senator that the words "cooperative associations" ought to be changed to read "business associations." Then we would not be doing again by the joint commission the work which has already been done and which has already been provided for in legislation which has passed Congress.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator well knows that I have no desire to amend, by implication or otherwise, the acts which have already been passed to help exactly the same situation as to the agricultural interests. If there can be any legal misinterpretation of the words "cooperative organizations," and if the Senator feels it would in any way cover this measure under the other act, I am entirely willing to change the wording to "business and trade organizations."

Mr. McNARY. Then I suggest to the Senator, while perhaps an amendment is not proper at this time, in the first paragraph, where it reads "define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade," that he strike out the words "cooperative organizations" and insert in lieu thereof the words "business associations."

Mr. EDGE. Business and trade associations.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; business and trade associations. Let that term be inserted in both places in lieu of "cooperative organizations."

Mr. EDGE. There is absolutely no objection to the suggested amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question.

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The purpose of the investigation proposed by the joint resolution, as I understand, is to call out an expression touching the legality of the operations of trade associations, and defining, if possible, what they may do and what they may not do; that is to say, what would constitute a violation of the Sherman antitrust law and what would not constitute a violation of it. I understand the Senator from New Jersey, contemporaneously with the introduction of this joint resolution, introduced a bill upon the same subject, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That was quite appropriate, because the original bill which became the Sherman Act originated with the Committee on the Judiciary, and all bills since which have touched on or affected that law, including the Clayton Act, for instance, have been referred to and considered by the Judiciary Committee. Now, I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Jersey why the trade associations to which he desires to give an opportunity to be heard before the commission proposed to be created by this joint resolution could not exactly as well be heard before the Committee on the Judiciary in connection with the bill introduced by the Senator from New Jersey? They would there have an opportunity either to indorse the bill of the Senator from New Jersey and ask that it be passed or to propose some substitute for it or propose some entirely different remedy.

Mr. EDGE. I endeavored in my general discussion of the pending measure to give the obvious answer to that question. I consider this subject entirely too important to be considered in that way. Covering, as the Senator has indicated in propounding his question, such a wide range of possible legislative assistance and cooperation, from the experience which we have all had with the work of regular standing committees, I suggest that it would be very doubtful if a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, in the ordinary course, unless particularly interested in this matter—and, of course, the committees are necessarily interested in all subjects relating to the welfare of the country—would go into what I consider the necessary investigation of this great, big subject.

Again, I felt that it was important that we should have a joint committee of the two Houses, for certainly some relief must be found; and if such relief must be found through the medium of legislation, any proposed legislation must go through both Houses of Congress.

The course proposed by the joint resolution is not unusual, but follows the policy which Congress has pursued for many years. It is not at all an innovation. We are proposing under the terms of the joint resolution to select Members of each House for a specific duty, which will be carefully to consider this very important subject in all its wide ramifications. That is the reason for the manner in which the joint resolution is framed, and I think it is a very concrete and definite reason.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from New Jersey has offered a very good reason for taking the subject out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary and reposing the jurisdiction somewhere else, if what he desires is what is recited in the joint resolution, namely, a general inquiry into the cause of business depression, the standardizing of methods and the development of morale in business, and so forth. Of course, those are not subjects that legitimately fall within the jurisdiction or the domain of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I would scarcely suggest that course; but we are led to believe from the argument of the Senator from New Jersey and from the fact that, contemporaneously with the introduction of the joint resolution, he introduced a bill which went to the Judiciary Committee, that what he really wants is what he says, namely, some definition for the guidance of trade associations as to when they will be under the condemnation of the Sherman Act and when they will not be. If that is what the Senator wants—and that is apparently what he says—the trade associations will have no difficulty whatever in securing hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary. So far as that part of the subject is concerned, it might just as well go to the Committee on the Judiciary, because if in its report the commission to which the Senator refers should recommend a bill, that bill, if it touches this subject, will go to the Committee on the Judiciary and that committee will conduct the hearings over again.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I think I have several times answered similar suggestions which have come from other Senators. That particular thought is a very important one, but the activities of the commission, if one be authorized, would not in any way be confined to the narrow scope suggested by the Senator. There are other questions, to some of which I have referred generally, which the proposed commission should undoubtedly investigate and in relation to which they should report back to Congress.

In conclusion, I desire to say that the main thought in my mind when introducing the resolution was that Congress should at least recognize the problems confronting the business world, and should, in an orderly manner at least, prepare to deal with those problems; that a committee representing both branches of Congress should invite representatives of business and industry before it, and that, as a result, some method, perhaps, of helping to solve this big problem might be devised.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me a little while, I desire to say that I find I was in error in the statement that the bill introduced by the Senator contemporaneously with the introduction of the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I now observe that the bill, like the joint resolution, went to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDGE. I think I can explain that, but that is merely a matter of detail that has no effect on the proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me for just one moment, I wish to call attention first to what seems to be the meat of the bill. It is found in section 6, which reads as follows:

That any trade association may request from the commission—

The creation of which is provided for by the bill—

a specific ruling with respect of the legality of its plan of organization as expressed in its constitution or articles of association, and by-laws and any agreements or contracts between the association and its member, which constitute the working basis of the association.

That is the point of the matter. A commission is to be created which is to advise the particular association whether it falls under the condemnation of the Sherman Act or does not fall under the condemnation of the Sherman Act. It seems rather strange to me that a bill for the creation of a commission of that character should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDGE. I attempted to explain to the Senator from Montana, who desired to continue his observations, that when the bill and joint resolution were simultaneously introduced I made no request whatever as to what committee they should be referred; I had not the slightest care about it, so far as that is concerned; but I presume because the measures related to commercial matters the Chair asked if it would be satisfactory to refer the measures to the Committee on Commerce. I said, "Entirely so." Later in the discussion with the chairman of the committee outside the Chamber we both agreed it would be better for the bill to go to the Committee on the Judiciary; so that, so far as the bill is concerned, it really makes absolutely no difference, and I have no interest in it whatever. I have no intention of pressing the bill. I introduced it practically by request. I am not in entire sympathy with all of its provisions. I very much question whether, if passed, it would offer a real solution of the problem. So the bill should not really enter into the discussion. When the proposed joint committee is authorized, if it shall be, and has an opportunity of investigating this entire situation, then, when it makes a recommendation, of course there will be something more definite for Congress to discuss.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In view of the statement now made by the Senator from New Jersey, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be relieved from the further consideration of Senate bill 3385, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDGE. That is entirely agreeable to me. I would have made the same suggestion if it had occurred to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator, of course, is referring to the bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that request is granted, then I shall move that Senate Joint Resolution 188 be referred to the Judiciary Committee for consideration in connection with Senate bill 3385.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, that motion, of course——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the first question be disposed of.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 3385 and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. EDGE. Of course, the Senator from Montana realizes that the Senator from New Jersey has the floor at the present moment, so that the motion would not be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought the Senator from New Jersey had surrendered the floor.

Mr. EDGE. I have not surrendered the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not desire to take the Senator from New Jersey off his feet. I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand just what the Senator from Montana requested, if anything, in addition to the discharge of the Committee on Commerce from the consideration of the bill introduced by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Montana also requested that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not desire that question to be disposed of, if it is in order, at this time. It is quite true that the antitrust law was considered by the Committee on the Judiciary finally, but when the antitrust law was first introduced it was referred to the Committee on Finance, and a very elaborate report was made by the Committee on Finance upon that bill. After being debated on the floor of the Senate for some time, it then was referred for redrafting to the Committee on the Judiciary. In 1914, when the Clayton Act was considered, it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary solely because it was a modification, in some degree, of the Sherman antitrust law.

The real jurisdiction of Congress, Mr. President, for the consideration of any such measure as this, is based on the authority given in the Constitution to Congress to regulate commerce among the States. Bills relating to the exercise of that power should, therefore, primarily be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and not to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Commerce, or any other committee. I do not intend to raise the question at this time, because, as I gather it, the question is not now whether or not the bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not know that I would care to oppose such a motion, but I want some time to reflect upon it. Sooner or later we will be compelled to define a little more clearly the jurisdiction of these two committees, and I want to reserve the right, anyhow, to insist upon the proper jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I should like, before I take my seat, to ask a question of the Senator from New Jersey with respect to the resolution which he has been discussing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that the Chair understands that there is objection on the part of the Senator from Iowa to his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I understand that the bill introduced by the Senator from New Jersey is now before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it is now before the Committee on Commerce. I have asked that the Committee on Commerce be relieved from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was ignorant as to that. I merely want the question as to which committee shall have the consideration of that bill reserved for some future time.

Mr. EDGE. I gladly defer on that question to the Senator from Iowa, for I realize very thoroughly his better knowledge of the technique and details of such subject matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. The truth is that heretofore questions affecting the regulation of commerce and interstate and foreign commerce have been divided—excluding the Judiciary Committee, which ought not to consider such questions at all—between the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Interstate Commerce, respectively, the latter committee taking those bills which had peculiar reference to our shipping, to our ocean commerce, and the Committee on Interstate Commerce taking those bills which had reference particularly to inland transportation.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I think the reference was entirely correct, however, especially as it refers to the joint resolution going to the Committee on Commerce, so that there can be no real question raised—of course it can be raised, but I do not think there is a justification for raising it—so far as the joint resolution is concerned. The joint resolution distinctly provides, following the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, that it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States and the markets of foreign countries.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. EDGE. So I think the reference in the first place was entirely a correct one, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it was, Mr. President; but I do not care to take up that question at this time. I want to ask the Senator from New Jersey one or two questions about his joint resolution.

If I have understood the Senator correctly since I came into the Chamber, he has taken out of his purpose, if not out of the language of the joint resolution, about the only thing that seemed to me to commend it at all. Experience has shown that it is impossible further or more accurately to define what shall constitute a restraint of trade or what shall constitute a monopoly. I think the experience of every lawyer, and his observation as well, is that it can not be done. The infinite variety of our commercial and industrial institutions precludes any more accurate definition of the words "restraint of trade" or "monopoly" than we now have, and the matter cited by the Senator from Nebraska shows that. The efforts of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as of the inferior courts, to apply these words to this great variety of business and organization which arises prove conclusively that what constitutes restraint of trade or monopoly can not be defined any further or more perfectly than they have defined it; but the instance cited by the Senator from Nebraska proves just the reverse of the conclusion which he draws from the number of these decisions. They show, if anything could show, that the law is not settled and that it can not be settled.

Every case that comes to the Supreme Court is a different case and presents different conditions; and I think the multitude of these decisions shows that the field is uncertain and that the business world does not know and can not know what is legal and what is illegal until after a particular case is begun and reaches the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator right there? Of course, I can not discuss legal interpretations, although I am rather interested to see the Senator's conclusions diametrically different from those of the Senator from Nebraska in discussing the same possibility; but is it not correct that an interpretive administration—that is, before a case goes to the court——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am coming to that.

Mr. EDGE. I should like to read just about one paragraph.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to inquire about that.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator will undoubtedly discuss it, and I will give him all the information I have about it in advance:

> "Interpretive administration" means the exercise of discretion by an administrative agency in the determination of facts upon which the agency rules and acts in accordance with principles laid down by the Congress for the accomplishment of the legislative object. The consequences of such ruling and action are those which the Congress has declared shall follow such ruling and action.
>
> Such rulings are customarily subject to what is known as a "limited" review by the courts. This judicial review is narrowed to an inquiry whether there are facts to support the conclusion and whether the law was properly interpreted.
>
> This character of procedure has been sustained by the United States Supreme Court in many instances. It will not supersede the courts, but will afford a method for the adjustment out of court of many causes which otherwise would have to pass through them unnecessarily.

Is not that a result to be desired, if possible?

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from New Jersey, half a dozen times at least in my hearing, has disclaimed any such purpose on the part of his bill or in this investigation.

Mr. EDGE. Oh, no, Mr. President; I have not—at least, I mean to say if I have I am sorry, and I did not want the Senator to draw that conclusion. I have stated several times that if this could be done, or attempted to be done, and cases could be kept from the courts by the advice of a Federal tribunal, it certainly would be in the interest of good citizenship to keep them from the courts, and I think that has generally been agreed upon; but I have followed that by stating that as a layman I certainly could not discuss whether it would be legally done or not, and for that reason I wanted a committee appointed to ascertain that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose the Senate, or the Judiciary Committee, is quite as competent to decide its legality as any other committee that might be created.

Mr. EDGE. That is only one of many, many questions that arise.

Mr. CUMMINS. But this is the point: I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the history of the matter, because to a degree I am in entire sympathy with him.

We tried to do this in the Federal Trade Commission act. That is, an amendment was considered by the Senate which had for its purpose the very thing that is now suggested by the Senator from New Jersey in the memorandum from which he has just read. I am rather familiar with it, because I was responsible for the effort. That amendment provided that any association or corporation could present to the Federal Trade Commission its articles of incorporation and its plan of doing business, the things which it proposed to do, and after a hearing the commission was given authority to declare whether the proposals of the association or the corporation, as the case might be, were in contravention of the antitrust law, and, if carried out honestly and fairly and kept within the limits of the proposal, whether the business of the association or corporation would be a violation of the antitrust law. The amendment further provided that if the Federal Trade Commission found that the plan or the proposal, if faithfully and honestly carried out, would not be a violation of the antitrust law, then the Government should not institute any proceedings against that association or corporation—that is, so far as its plan was concerned; not its practices, but so far as its plan was concerned it should be adjudicated to be beyond any prosecution under the antitrust law.

Under the antitrust law there is no prosecution except by the Government. An individual can not prosecute a corporation or an association because it is in violation of the antitrust law. An individual may sue for damages that may have been brought about by a monopoly or a restraint of trade, but a suit in equity for an injunction against the further conduct of the corporation or the individual of whom it is alleged that it is restraining trade or creating a monopoly or attempting to create a monopoly must be brought by the Government; and the decision which the Federal Trade Commission would make is not a moot decision, as was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from Nebraska. It binds the Government, and so long as that corporation pursues the plan and pursues it fairly and honestly it can not be prosecuted.

In my opinion, that is the only way in which the subject can be made certain. Whether it is wise to intrust a power of that kind to the Federal Trade Commission or to any other body is a matter upon which there may be fair difference of opinion; but just a few days ago we reposed even a greater power in the Secretary of Agriculture, and I have always been in favor of giving that power to some tribunal of the Government, because the antitrust law never can be made certain by any definitions that we may see fit to employ.

For the life of me, however, I can not see any reason for creating a committee to investigate the subject. Every fact which we will ever be called upon to consider in determining whether or not the course I have suggested is wise is accessible through hundreds of investigations which have been made. I can not imagine a single phase of the subject that has not been developed; and Congress can apply these facts that have been developed through many, many investigations to the particular thing that is sought to be done just as perfectly without an investigation as with it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am very much interested in what the Senator from Iowa has stated. If I interpret his view correctly, he has taken a position diametrically opposite to that expressed by other Senators as to the possible power which can be delegated to an administrative tribunal as compared to the power of the courts. In other words, he takes the position that Congress can delegate to the Federal Trade Commission—the Senator will correct me if I am misstating his position—power to define what they can or can not do under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as the Government alone can prosecute one who is alleged to be guilty of the antitrust law, I have no doubt that we can confer upon the Federal Trade Commission, or any other tribunal we may create for that purpose, the power to decide whether a given plan is in violation of the antitrust law, and that their decision will bind the United States. I am not now speaking about the wisdom of doing it.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if he stated that the Federal Trade Commission now has that power?

Mr. CUMMINS. It has not.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that question because I was satisfied the Senator did not want to leave that impression. I think he did leave that impression by some of his observations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope not. I did my best to have that power conferred upon the Federal Trade Commission, but failed.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was not successful.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I was not.

Mr. EDGE. Was not the original object of the legislation, which was generally discussed, to confer a similar power?

Mr. CUMMINS. It was very generally discussed upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have taken very much more time than I intended to take. It seems to me, however, in conclusion, that the statement of the Senator from Iowa, and its issue with some of the statements of other Senators as to congressional power, and as to delegating power to other commissions, even with all the information the Committee on the Judiciary may have collected in investigations of similar subjects, shows that it is desirable to have a committee of this kind authorized, and such an investigation brought down to date, in view of these recent decisions, the Hardwood decision and others. I have tried to impress on the Senate, in many statements, that while it is of great importance for Congress to give further consideration to the possible delegation of this power, yet there are many other ways, I think, in which Congress can to-day help industry in this country.

Any information the Judiciary Committee has on this subject, of course, any committee of the Congress would be able to secure. I can not imagine such a committee as this starting new legal investigations along this line. The decisions of the courts, the opinions of eminent lawyers already on file with the Judiciary Committee, and any other information that is needed, of course, can be and would be obtained, but it is the general phase of the subject that I am trying to impress on my colleagues of the Senate, the responsibility and the duty we have to-day at least to give the business men of this country an opportunity to officially tell us their troubles. A committee, therefore, might represent both houses for that specific service.

Most of the argument to-day has centered upon what might happen if something were recommended by the committee proposed to be appointed. Let us give the committee a chance, without any preinstructions, to investigate the present business and industrial depression, and then we will be prepared, as Senators and Members of the lower House, to consider and discuss any recommendations they have to make.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I can not myself see why this committee should be appointed as set out in this joint resolution, why there is any necessity of it, or any necessity of the investigation proposed.

There may be uncertainties as to just how far these organizations can go and still remain within the law. Secretary Hoover has been agitating this for some time, suggesting that they all report to him and tell what they are going to do. In an argument I made a few days ago, wherein I cited the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Hardwood Lumber case, I pointed out, as I thought, where that decision conflicted absolutely with the propositions which Secretary Hoover set forth that he wanted to take up, and which I think he is probably going to take up anyway, no matter what we pass. There probably would not be any way of stopping him short of an injunction from a United States judge.

The proposition of the Senator from New Jersey now is to have a joint committee, three members appointed by the Vice President and three by the Speaker of the House, to have a lot of hearings, to take evidence, and try to ascertain just what these associations can do.

Mr. President, the reason why there is a twilight zone in many, many cases, at least, is because these associations are professing to organize for one purpose, when they are doing business for another purpose. That is not always the case. It is not perhaps the case as to all those who are members in many instances, but that often occurs, as the Supreme Court decision in the Hardwood Lumber case shows.

If men or corporations were organized for the purpose of seeing how they could obey the law rather than to see how far they can go and still escape prosecution under the law, there would not be so much difficulty or so much said about the twilight zone.

I could bring about a twilight zone in any case. If I wanted to make an assault on the Senator from South Dakota, and wanted to avoid the law which punishes for assault and battery, and I started out deliberately and made an investigation and tried to shape things around so that I could make an assault and line it up under the law of self-defense, or something of that kind, I could get a condition of circumstances, probably, that would throw a lot of doubt in the minds of the jury, and I would escape punishment. There is a twilight zone about any crime. There have been hundreds of thousands of prosecutions for assault and battery where the defendant, at least if you believe his story, was acting within the law, and with perfectly good intentions.

If men were anxious to avoid a violation of the antitrust law, there would not be so many violations of it. It has been my experience, and I think the experience of others who have had anything to do with the consideration of criminal cases, that very few defendants have ever been prosecuted who, if you believe their stories, were not perfectly innocent. If the stories of the defendants are always true, then the prisons are filled with innocent people who are suffering now; and the Hardwood Lumber case shows how men of big business got together, ostensibly for a good social time, perhaps, ostensibly to do something which on the face of it looked to be perfectly legitimate, but the court found that underneath it all was an intention to violate the law, and they held that the organization was in violation of law.

If we establish a commission, as the Senator from New Jersey proposes, or as the Senator from Iowa wants, which shall say in effect what will be a violation of any plan which may be applied to them and what will not be, we will always have a twilight zone just the same. You can not put language into such form that good lawyers will not find a reason for putting a different construction on it from what you intended, and you will always have men who claim they are obeying the law, when their real intention is to violate it.

The Sherman antitrust law, covering the kind of business it is intended to cover and with the scope it is intended to cover, necessarily includes organizations which are violating the law, and at the same time trying to make everybody else believe that they are not violating it. That might happen with regard to any law. Personally, I do not understand how you can enact a law which will make it certain that that will not happen. Men who want to violate it and yet avoid punishment are going to devise all kinds of means of bringing that about.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will remember that we had quite a time here a short while ago trying to find out whether certain acts were violative of the law against corrupt practices in reference to the election of a United States Senator, it being stoutly contended on the one side that the acts were not in violation of the law and on the other side that they were. That law seems perfectly plain.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and when you submitted it to a tribunal to pass on it you found a very great difference of opinion by men who, on the face of things at least, were equally qualified and who had equal opportunities to get the facts. The Supreme Court are composed of men who are human, as shown by the fact that they very seldom agree. If there were not anything else to show they were great lawyers, that would demonstrate it. Most of the decisions, when there is a big contest, are by a divided court. It is not unnatural that it should be so in these cases. When a certain state of facts is alleged before them a majority of them say: "This demonstrates that this is an illegal organization; that while on the face of it they were organized for a perfectly legitimate purpose, the real intention has been to create a monopoly and to restrain trade, and therefore they are guilty."

Another set of men might be equally intelligent, if we could get such another set of men together, and might reach a different conclusion, without imputing any dishonesty or lack of ability to either set of men. The Supreme Court of the United States, by a decision of 5 to 4, I think, said that the Standard Oil Co. was not a trust; was it not the Standard Oil?

Mr. CUMMINS. It said it was a trust.

Mr. NORRIS. I mean the Steel Corporation. They said the Standard Oil Co. was a trust, but they said the Steel Corporation was not a trust and was not in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. That was by a divided court, but nearly everybody in the United States, except members of the Supreme Court, knew that the price of steel was fixed everywhere in the United States, if not in the world, by the Steel Trust, and is yet, was at the time, and has been for years. It is no secret that what few independents there are follow along, as they naturally would, on the heels of this great corporation. I suppose it is possible even for human beings who happen to be judges of the highest court in the land to be mistaken. They have the last guess. It is not much more, sometimes, in these cases, I think, as important as they may be, and when they do make their guess we all acquiesce in it, as we ought to do, because it is better to have it settled, even though we do not agree with the settlement, than not to have it settled at all.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I doubt whether the Supreme Court has said that the Steel Corporation was not a trust. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] called attention to that the other day, stating that in effect they decided it was a trust, but it was not wise to say so.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I put a question to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may put a question, and I will yield to anyone who is able to answer it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I put it out of my own experience. Suppose that in a town there are six grocery stores. One of them is a very large one, occupying about the relation to the trade that the Steel Corporation now occupies to the steel trade. The other five are small concerns, doing about one-half of the business of the town. The five come to the conclusion that they had better consolidate, and in that way be better prepared to meet the competition of the large concern. Would that be a violation of the antitrust law?

Mr. NORRIS. If I were trying that case and it came before me and I had the power to decide it, I would ask a great many questions before I would be ready to pass on it. I would hear the evidence, I would see the witnesses, and I think when I got through I would have reached a conclusion at least satisfactory to myself. But I do not profess to know how to decide it under the Senator's statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. The situation I had in mind when I was making inquiry of the Senator from New Jersey suggested the presence of just that situation. Would that organization in and of itself be a violation of the antitrust law? I am not speaking now of any unfair practices, any unfair methods or efforts to take advantage of misrepresentations, or anything of that kind. I am speaking of the mere organization or consolidation of five small grocery stores in order to meet the competition of one large grocery store.

Mr. NORRIS. As the Senator modifies it and now puts it, I would not think it was a violation of the law.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Supreme Court of the United States in some of its decisions—they are not at all harmonious—as the Senator knows, have decided that it is a violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, the Senator puts into his proposition something that probably the Supreme Court would exclude when they held that it was not a violation.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Supreme Court would now.

Mr. NORRIS. I know the Senator gave his organization a good character at the very beginning of his proposition when he put the question to me first. I say I can not answer it from the question. If I were trying the case, I would form an opinion, or I think I would, as to what its real objects were. I would be able to know when I got through, at least in my own conscience, whether it violated the law or not. But when the Senator puts the question to me the second time, he gives his organization a good bill of health to start with.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am giving both a good bill of health. I am not assuming any improper motive on the part of either of the business concerns. I am assuming that all of them want to make some profits. They are organized for that purpose and that alone.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think that is legitimate.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the twilight zone to which the Senator referred relates a great deal more to organizations which have been attempted with a perfectly upright design and motive than it does to corporations which have been organized, and there have been very many of them, with the very vicious design and improper purpose of monopolizing trade and of making an undue and unreasonable profit.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be right. I think he is wrong, but he may be right that the kind of organization of which he speaks constitute a large majority of the institutions or corporations that are doing business within the twilight zone. My own idea is that while there are occasionally in some specific instances some difficulties, there is very little difficulty in keeping out of the clutches of the law if you want to do the square thing, if you are not trying to see how far you can go, and, in fact, violate the law without getting caught at it. I believe those who are operating within the twilight zone as a rule—there may be many exceptions and the Senator may be right and I am wrong; all of them may be honest——

Mr. CUMMINS. That is simply my observation.

Mr. NORRIS. I believe that those who are operating within the twilight zone are there because they want to be there; are there because they want to get an advantage that the law does not give to honest men, and to escape the penalties of the law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I proposed a short while ago a motion to refer the pending joint resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary, supposing at the time that the bill to which reference was made, as introduced by the Senator from New Jersey, had gone there. In my judgment the joint resolution should go to the same committee as that which considers the bill proposed by the Senator reposing in the Federal Trade Commission the power to determine whether a corporation or association will fall within the condemnation of the Sherman antitrust law or not. I hope the Senator from Iowa will be able to reach a definite conclusion.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I said was more as a warning or suggestion as to the course that I intend to pursue in the future than as applicable to the particular measure.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe thoroughly that questions which relate to the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, based upon our constitutional authority in that regard, ought to be referred either to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but I do not intend to insist upon that distinction just now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I fully agree with the Senator, and if this were a matter of first consideration I would not urge a reference of it to the Committee on the Judiciary. But this important matter of antitrust legislation has had the consideration of that committee ever since its organization, and in all efforts to modify or repeal the act that committee has given consideration to the subject. It was in view of that situation that I asked unanimous consent, and I now renew the request for unanimous consent, that the Committee on Commerce be relieved from further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be relieved from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3385) to regulate trade associations, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now renew my motion that the pending joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, that motion, of course, I oppose. The joint resolution has been debated to some extent to-day, and certainly any further debate to be had on it should follow in the orderly, regular way if Senators desire to debate it. The joint resolution was considered by the Committee on Commerce and reported unanimously, I think 11 or 12 Senators signing the report.

As the Senator from Iowa, to whose judgment I defer, has stated, the question of whether a joint resolution referring to such matters shall go to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Interstate Commerce depends to a great extent upon whether the subject matter includes or excludes foreign commerce. The pending joint resolution takes into consideration the possibilities of foreign commerce, so that I contend that the reference to the Committee on Commerce, so far as the joint resolution is concerned, was in no way unusual. It might have been equally proper to have referred it to the Committee on Interstate Commerce or the Committee on the Judiciary, but it went to the Committee on Commerce in the ordinary way and was reported in the ordinary way and has been debated in the ordinary way, and for it to be recommitted to some other committee it seems to me is in no way justified.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator said that 11 Senators signed the report. Does he mean by that that the committee was polled?

Mr. EDGE. Yes. I mean the usual method was employed in the reporting of the joint resolution, as usually happens with all bills, the Senator's included, that I think is employed in reporting 90 per cent of the bills in the Senate, because of the fact that committees are not in frequent session.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wanted to know whether it was considered by the committee, or whether the committee was just polled. It seems that it was polled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will defer that, I wish to say just a word or two.

Mr. EDGE. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The question as to just exactly what ought to be done in any case to clarify the situation, which is deemed in some quarters to be obscure, obviously has reference to some change in the law so as to effect the violation of the Sherman antitrust law. As has heretofore been stated, that matter has had the consideration of the Judiciary Committee now for a period of over 30 years. Efforts have been made from time to time to bring about just such a result as the Senator from New Jersey contemplates. So far as my information goes, those measures have always been referred to the Judiciary Committee, inasmuch as they contemplate some amendment of the Sherman antitrust law.

The difficulty about the problem, which seems to some people so very simple, has been pointed out in discussions here this afternoon. I do not suppose there is a criminal law or statute concerning which more or less difficulty may not arise in connection with its application to a particular state of facts. Whether under a certain state of facts a man is guilty or is not guilty of murder is often a very close and debatable legal proposition as well as question of fact. Whether under particular circumstances a man has or has not committed larceny is often a matter of very grave doubt from the standpoint of the law.

As also indicated, the difficulty arises by reason of the fact, and the difficulty of legislation about the matter arises by reason of the fact, that plans for the organization of those corporations may be entirely harmless and altogether praiseworthy indeed, but when it comes to carrying out the plans they are departed from, from time to time, for the purpose of accomplishing illegal ends, if it were not contemplated originally that ends condemned by the statute were not to be attained. That was the case in the famous hardwood lumber association organization. If the organization had confined itself to the purpose which it had in mind and had followed with scrupulousness the plan which was originally outlined, it is doubtful whether it would have been condemned by the Supreme Court. As it was outlined originally, this was what was to be accomplished:

> The purpose of the plan is to disseminate among members accurate knowledge of production and market conditions so that each member may gauge the market intelligently instead of guessing at it; to make competition open and above board instead of secret and concealed; to substitute, in estimating market conditions, frank and full statements of our competitors for the frequently misleading and colored statements of the buyer.

Accordingly the central officer of the association was to receive reports from all members of the association concerning all sales made by them and the prices at which the sales were to be made, which information was to be conveyed to all members of the association, and that was all there was to it. That in all probability would not be condemned by the court as at all illegal. But instead of doing that, here is what actually was done, as disclosed by excerpts from the opinion in the case. The court said:

> In the first quarter of the year the problem was to maintain the war prices then prevailing rather than to advance them, and although the minutes of the various meetings were kept in barest outline, we find that beginning within a month of the consideration of the two associations the members of the "Plan" began actively to cooperate through the meetings to suppress competition by restricting production. This is very clearly shown by the excerpts following from the minutes of meetings and from the market letters and sales reports distributed at them.

I do not read that testimony, but it doubtless supports the conclusion at which the court arrived. The court then went on to say:

> Much more of like purport appears in the minutes of the meetings throughout the year, but this is sufficient to convincingly show that one of the prime purposes of the meetings, held in every part of the lumber district and of the various reports, was to induce members to cooperate in restricting production, thereby keeping the supply low and the prices high, and that whenever there was any suggestion of running the mills to an extent which would bring up the supply to a point which might affect prices the advice against operations which might lead to such result was put in the strongest possible terms. The cooperation is palpable and avowed, its purpose is clear, and we shall see that it was completely realized.
>
> Next, the record shows clearly that the members of the combination were not satisfied to secure, each for himself, the price which might be obtainable even as the result of cooperative restriction of production, but that throughout the year they assiduously cultivated—through the letters of Gadd, speaking for them all, and through the discussions at the meetings—the general conviction that higher and higher prices were obtainable, and a disposition on the part of all to demand them. The intention to create such a common purpose is too clear to be doubted, evidenced as it is by the following excerpts from much of like character in the testimony.

I forbear reading the testimony from which the court reached that conclusion. Then the court continues:

> To this we must add that constantly throughout the minutes of the various meetings there is shown discussion of the stock and production reports in which the shortage of supply was continually emphasized, with the implication, not disguised, that higher prices must result. Men in general are so easily persuaded to do that which will obviously prove profitable that this reiterated opinion from the analyst of their association, with all obtainable data before him, that higher prices were justified and could easily be obtained, must inevitably have resulted, as it did result, in concert of action in demanding them.
>
> But not only does the record thus show a persistent purpose to encourage members to unite in pressing for higher and higher prices, without regard to cost, but there are many admissions by members, not only that this was the purpose of the "plan," but that it was fully realized.

Then the court says:

> These quotations are sufficient to show beyond discussion that the purpose of the organization and especially of the frequent meetings was to bring about a concerted effort to raise prices regardless of cost or merit, and so was unlawful, and that the members were soon entirely satisfied that the plan was "carrying out the purpose for which it was intended."

So the court finds, as a matter of fact, that the plan was organized for the purpose of enabling them to restrict production and to raise the prices, and that that result was actually accomplished. Mr. President, when that situation of affairs exists it is not difficult to say that a company falls under the condemnation of the law.

Now, to show that there is not so much difficulty about this matter as may be imagined by some people who like to travel close to the line which divides what is legal from what is illegal, I call attention to the case of the United States against the American Linseed Oil Co. and others, which is reported in Two hundred and seventy-fifth Federal Reporter, at page 939. That is a decision by the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. The case was pending while the Hardwood Lumber Association case was before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision was rendered earlier, if my recollection now serves me, than was the decision of the Supreme Court.

The decision of the Linseed Oil case was on November 3, 1919, and the decision of the Supreme Court on the Hardwood Lumber Association case was on December 19, 1921. So that this case was decided before the district court had the aid of the Hardwood Lumber Association case. The court found that this particular trade association—that is, the Association of Linseed Oil Manufacturers—was not prohibited by the Sherman Act. Now, let me read from the decision and show Senators just what kind of an association that was. I read from the opinion, as follows:

> The purpose of the council and bureau was to collect and furnish to the various members current quotations on linseed oil, the record of sales of oil, including prices, statistics as to stocks on hand, crop conditions at home and abroad, and other information of interest or value to the manufacturers of linseed oil. The Armstrong bureau entered into contracts with certain of the defendants and agreed to furnish them the foregoing information for a consideration.
>
> Pursuant to these contracts, the various subscribers daily reported their price lists to the bureau and promptly sent word of any change. Other information was also furnished from time to time. The statements received and collected by the bureau were immediately sent out to all the members of the association.
>
> The record discloses that the information collected and distributed by the bureau to its several members was of the kind which a sagacious business man secures, or endeavors to secure, in the operation of his enterprise. The information was true. The price lists furnished were made in the regular course of business and offered in good faith to customers or prospective customers. There was no proof that the members of the association ever, at the bureau meetings or at any other place, discussed prices or made agreements with respect to prices, and there was no evidence that the prices asked by any of the subscribers were not in accordance with the market price of flaxseed, upon which the price of linseed oil was based.
>
> Production was not limited during the period the bureau was in operation. There was no proof of division of territory. There was no proof that the prices asked by the individual defendants were not fixed by them upon their own judgment, considering all factors affecting supply and demand. There was no proof showing that any member was under the slightest obligation or constraint to ask higher prices or maintain prices.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Each individual crusher entering into a contract with the Armstrong bureau specifically and expressly agreed that all information reported to the bureau or distributed by it should at all times be purely statistical and pertain only to past operations, and that the bureau should not be used to enable the constituent members to fix prices for the sale of linseed oil, cake, or meal; to limit the sale, production, or manufacture thereof; or to divide the territory in which it was to be sold.

In the trial of the case the Government sought to establish—as they sought to establish and did establish in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case—that the purpose of this organization was not exclusively such as was outlined in the circular defining its plans, but that it really was an agreement between these people—covertly, of course—so that they might get together to fix prices and limit production, and so on; but the Government failed to make the proof, and the court held that upon the plan as outlined, and so far as the court was advised, at least, the plan was carried out honestly and consistently, and it was not in violation of the law. So we do not find it very difficult now to determine, with a reasonable degree of accuracy, whether an organization is within the law or is without the law.

When this case goes to the Supreme Court, if it should go there, that court may find upon the evidence adduced that there really existed the illegal purpose which they found to exist in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case, drawing the conclusion from facts outside of the plan proposed by the circular and other documents of the company, by extraneous evidence, showing that the plan was something other or different from what it appeared upon the face of the instrument.

I can not understand, Mr. President, how, with reference to these questions, a commission of any kind of business men can afford a basis upon which very sensible action may be taken. They are not supposed to know the intricacies of the statutes which have had so much consideration from the courts. They might, perhaps, propose something which long ago was determined to be impossible of operation or which would be entirely destructive of the purpose for which the antitrust act was originated.

In the first place, I do not believe, Mr. President, that the depression of industry in this country, which unfortunately exists, can be attributed in any marked or in any appreciable degree to the inability of trade associations to know whether they are operating within or without the law. If we were able to define—and I submit that that is an impossibility—when an association operates within the law or when it is beyond the law, I do not believe the result would be particularly manifest in the increase in business activities throughout the country.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator, perhaps, is not aware that in the city of Washington last Thursday or Friday there was a meeting at which were present some 400 or 500 representatives of different trade associations, coming here from all over the United States, including many distant points. At that meeting many speeches were made and reports submitted. I was present during a portion of the session, and I can state that practically every one of the statements made by the representatives of the trade associations was to the effect that trade associations had practically ceased functioning; that they were inactive simply because of the uncertainty surrounding the decisions of the courts.

I know the Senator from Montana always desires to be absolutely accurate, but when he suggests that only one or two or three or four trade associations might be affected because of the decision to which he has referred, I am sure, upon investigation, he will find that the trade associations of this country have practically ceased doing business. Further, when he states that he does not believe that the finding of a joint committee, such as is proposed in the joint resolution, will have any great influence upon present depression, I am sure he is incorrect, because the trade associations through their standardization processes, through their joint advertising processes, and their other activities help to create markets, which is the very thing that helps develop industry.

Whether the solution proposed is a proper one or not is an open question; but I am sorry that I have not impressed the Senator from Montana and other Senators with the actual importance of having trade associations reinaugurate their activities, because, in my judgment, the fundamental difficulty to-day, to which is due largely the present trade depression, is the failure of the trade associations to carry on their work.

We have just as much money in the country as we ever had; we have just as many people, less the toll of war; the main trouble is the lack of those activities which make markets. The trade associations, representing hundreds of thousands of individual producers, furnish the activities tending to make markets. If any other method can be suggested better than the one proposed, designed to encourage trade associations to become active, then it seems to me it is the duty of Congress to try to help discover that method. The only purpose of the joint resolution is through the medium of the commission proposed to be created to discover, if possible, a way, to some extent, of restoring confidence.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to remind the Senator that we had very, very prosperous times in this country before trade associations were ever known, and I dare say we shall again; but, if the Senator will pardon me, I want to make a suggestion in connection with this matter that it seems to me is the true solution of this problem. I suggest to him that the trade association and the Senator from New Jersey are a little impatient about this matter. If they will only bring before the Supreme Court of the United States one of these associations which has adhered strictly to the plan which it has advertised—namely, of being merely an association for the purpose of carrying to the members thereof such information as can be assembled concerning the facts of the trade in which they are engaged—and the Supreme Court will say that such an association as that is unlawful, then there will be appropriate occasion for some action by Congress; but, Mr. President, the trouble about it is this: Take the Linseed Oil case, for instance. If the decision in the case of the United States against the Linseed Oil Co. is affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, then a perfect guide will be had. Then these associations will be enabled to do and entitled to do just exactly what the Armstrong Bureau professed to do.

The plan was a very simple one. People engaged in the manufacture of linseed oil became members of this bureau, run by this man Armstrong in the city of Chicago. Each member agreed that he would report to Armstrong every day just exactly what sales he made and at what prices he made them. He also agreed that if he intended at any time to change the prices he would send word to Armstrong of the change that he was going to make. Armstrong also agreed to gather statistical information, secured from Government sources and otherwise, concerning the state of the industry, and to disseminate that information among members of the association; and the district court held that confining itself to that line of industry the Armstrong Bureau was not under the condemnation of the law.

Bear in mind, I have told you that the Government endeavored to establish—whether they did or not I do not venture to say, though the court held that they did not—that they had a further purpose, and that was to restrict production and to increase prices. As I say, the court held that that was not established.

If that case should go to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States should hold, as the lower court did, that there was no purpose of that character, and that the only purpose of the organization was to give to members the information which would enable them the better to transact their business—in other words, if these trade associations will only confine themselves to the purposes for which they profess to be organized—I do not think the Supreme Court will hold them unlawful, although I may be mistaken about that; but why legislate in advance of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States? The Hardwood Lumber Co. case does not help us at all, because there they held that outside of their plan they clearly had an illegal purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. It strikes me in reference to this matter, first of all, that these smart and educated and intelligent business men ought in their inner consciousness to be able to determine for themselves whether they violate the ethics or the principles of the Sherman law. Furthermore, it seems to me that it is about as difficult to define how near they can sail to the wind in reference to the Sherman law and in what cases as it is to define cases of usury and fraud. It is the experience of the courts, and has been, as the Senator from Montana very well knows, that the courts decline to lay down any hard-and-fast rule as to what constitutes actual fraud, and the same thing is true in reference to usury. There are so many ways of getting around that. It seems to me that it is extremely difficult to define in detail in these cases to what extent these associations may go to avoid the consequences of the antitrust law.

Of course, I know that in the moral world there are some people who want instructions as to how near they can sail to the Ten Commandments without violating the Ten Commandments, and I can conceive the same thing in reference to the business world. When we come to define what these associations may do or may not do to avoid the evils attempted to be repressed by the antitrust law, it seems to me we strike as difficult a problem as we do in the case of defining fraud and in the case of defining what constitutes usury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the position of the Senator is eminently sound; but I merely desire to submit, in conclusion, that in my humble judgment these people are going at the thing in the wrong way. Instead of coming in now and asking Congress to legislate with reference to a proposition that is not yet settled, if they have not got a case in which the matter will be presented to the Supreme Court disassociated from extraneous facts disclosing that they are not carrying out the plan as they propose it, if they will present a case in which the association devises and religiously adheres to a plan merely of disseminating information, and then the Supreme Court holds that that plan is contrary to the law, it will be time enough to ask for a modification of the law.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a further interruption? The Senator is aware of the fact that it has been the complaint of business interests, not only now but for many years past, that they did not know how to operate under the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. That has been a standing complaint almost since the days of the enactment of the law. They found great difficulty in that respect; so that this is no new discovery that business men have reached to-day. There always has been the complaint that they never knew how close to the wind they could sail under the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The effort is an old one.

Mr. EDGE. Then the Senator does not agree with the Senator from Iowa that if it could be defined, if a Federal bureau could tell them how close to the wind they could sail, it might save the courts some of their present congestion and still serve business in a perfectly proper way?

Mr. NELSON. Would the Senator want me to tell him how near he could travel to the usury law and still avoid its penalties? In my boyhood days I knew a man in Wisconsin, a rich old farmer, who made his living by usury. He had this favorite way of doing if a man wanted to borrow money: He would shake his head and say, "Money is scarce; I do not know whether I can get you any or not." Then he would take the man out in the yard and show him a cow or a steer—a cow that was worth $20 in those days—and he would say to him, "If you will buy this cow and pay me $40 for it, maybe I can loan you a hundred dollars." That was one way of committing usury. I might cite similar instances in the case of actual fraud. They are plentiful. The trouble is that away back of it the consciences of these big business enterprises have become calloused, and they need religious instruction rather than legislation to guide them in the path of honor and rectitude.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, this discussion is very interesting; but allow me to direct the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that these trade associations do not represent big business. That is the remarkable part of it. They represent a combination of the smaller business interests of the country. The big interests are so independent and so powerful and have such other organizations of their own that they refuse to join these associations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume that what has just been said by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will furnish a reason for the motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. He wants to bring these associations under the spiritual influence of the Senator from Minnesota, who is the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; they would go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can assure them that they will always receive justice, if not spiritual consolation, at the hands of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. However, I rose to say one word in answer to the Senator from Montana.

It seems to be assumed by a great many people that nearly every commercial transaction is tainted with some kind of unworthy motive. I do not share that opinion. I think most business is pretty fair, honest business, and I do not think those who seek advice with regard to the construction of the antitrust law are criminals, or want to disobey the law, or want to evade it. Some of them do, but most of them do not.

To my mind, the difficulty in regard to the construction of the antitrust law does not arise in such a case as has been cited by the Senator from Montana. Here is the difficulty: The prohibition against agreements or combination or contracts in restraint of trade as originally construed by the Supreme Court meant that competition must not be diminished; that whatever interfere with free, unrestricted competition constituted a restraint of trade. A little later the Supreme Court modified its view in that respect, and introduced the word "unreasonable" in connection with restraint of trade, so now we must assume that the prohibition is against the unreasonable restriction or suppression of competition. The Senator from Nebraska was right; the real soul and heart of the antitrust law is that the good of the country requires in its commercial affairs fair, reasonable competition, and anything that tends to destroy that is contrary to the law.

I put again this instance, and there are hundreds and thousands of similar ones in the country which I think comprise the real difficulty in the antitrust law.

If there are 20 competitors in a given field, and if the twentieth man buys up the first man, so that there are but 19 competitors, is that such a restriction of competition as brings the transaction within the antitrust law? No one can tell; no one would dare venture an opinion, I think, at least in the old days, as to whether or not that constituted a violation of the antitrust law.

We pass on; and if the twentieth man buys up the first 5 men, and there are only 15 competitors left, does that constitute a restraint of trade? I mean, the very act itself; not what might follow in unfair practices or methods of competition, but just the fact that the number of competitors has been reduced. Is that within the antitrust law? There is not a lawyer in this Chamber or an assembly of lawyers anywhere who can answer that question until finally a court passes upon it.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am not advised of any decision by the Supreme Court holding that the out and out purchase by one competitor of the property of another, without any understanding as to the future operation of the two concerns, is illegal.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there has never been a decision of that kind. I do not think there would be. I can answer that question, probably, but when the competitor gets along to the absorption of 5 or 6 or 7 or 8 or 9 or 10, then you enter the twilight zone, and nobody can tell whether an arrangement of that kind will be held to be a violation of the antitrust law or not.

Mr. STANLEY. In my opinion much of the confusion touching this question has arisen from a failure to distinguish between monopoly and restraint of trade. The old Elizabethan monopoly, whether created by law or whether the result of the activities of the individual, enable one man or one concern to control too great a portion of an industry, like the one that was attempted to be prevented in the old laws, a monopoly in the purchasing of grain. That has never been accepted by modern legislators, and was not in the mind of Edmunds or any of the other authors of the antitrust law. Our laws, as I see it, simply deal, not with monopolies, but with the acts of interference in the untrammeled currents of commerce, and it is not so much the effect upon the currents as the act of interfering. That line of decisions was perfectly plain until, unfortunately, I think it was Chief Justice White who incorporated the idea of reasonable restraint of trade—the rule of reason.

As legislators our only trouble now is in determining to what extent men can interfere with the untrammeled course of trade without materially impairing the movement of commerce, the reasonable or unreasonable restraint of trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I agree entirely with the observations just made by the Senator from Kentucky, although the antitrust law itself separates the attempt to create a monopoly from a restraint of trade. I do not believe that a monopoly which grows out of superior efficiency and the ability to market a product, or a series of products, at a less price than a competitor can market them for, is contrary to the spirit, or possibly not to the letter, of the antitrust law. We must allow these opportunities.

But we have a law that is capable of very many constructions and interpretations as applied in particular cases, and if we could assume that every man who was in doubt with regard to the validity of a particular transaction in which he was about to engage was a corrupt man, a vicious and criminal man, there would be no desire, I am sure, upon the part of anybody to clarify this statute or provide any means for clarification; but while there are some, of course, who desire, as the Senator from Minnesota said, to sail close to the wind, I am sure that is not true of the great majority of instances in which it has been uncertain whether a proposed transaction could be legally entered into or not.

Every lawyer who has had considerable experience knows that when these questions have been propounded to him in the past there have been many of the transactions which were from the moral standpoint entirely free from even the suspicion of moral turpitude, in which the lawyer could not honestly advise his client respecting the validity or the legality of the thing about to be done. That has happened in so many cases within my own knowledge that I have always been in sympathy with the effort to erect some tribunal which could and would make a ruling so far as the organization itself, its plan, its scope, its purpose, as declared in its articles of incorporation, as declared in the contract about to be entered into, were concerned.

As time goes on, I understand perfectly that the most innocent articles of incorporation, the most innocent articles of association, can be made the instrument of great wrong, and that the conduct or the practices of the association may be condemned by the antitrust law or by any tribunal before which the litigation may come; but that does not change my own conviction that there is a great field in which such a tribunal can operate to the great benefit of the people of the country.

ST. LAWRENCE CANAL PROJECT.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I give notice that during the discussion of the unfinished business to-morrow I shall address the Senate on the St. Lawrence canal project.

CONDITIONS IN HAITI.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss the resolution now before the Senate, but briefly to call attention to some resolutions adopted on the 31st of March by the Union Patriotique Haitienne Comité Central, an organization of Haitians, the members of which are residents of Haiti. I am not fully advised as to the nature and objects of the organization, but am informed that it is composed of some of the very best citizens of Haiti, who are opposed to the occupation of their country by the military and naval forces of the United States and who desire that our Government relinquish political authority and all other control over Haiti and her people.

As Senators know, our Government sent war vessels to Haitian waters several years ago and landed marines upon the island. Later the constitution under which the people of that nation lived and by which they were governed was set aside and a new constitution adopted. It is claimed by the Haitians that the action of the United States was wrong; that by military force it took possession of their Government, suspended their constitution, and in contravention of international law and that comity which should exist among nations, now rules their land.

It is charged by Haitians that we are now attempting to force a loan upon the Haitian people and that the President of Haiti and other officials are controlled, if not coerced, by the military forces of the United States, which occupy strategic points upon the island.

The resolutions to which I have referred relate to the occupation of Haiti and are in the nature of a protest against the policy of this Government in its dealings with the Haitian people and their Government.

The resolutions are in French, but I have a translation, which reads as follows:

Whereas the Government of the Republic of Haiti as it has been constituted since its origin by the founders of the Republic is essentially democratic and representative; and

Whereas this character has been formally consecrated in every Haitian constitution; and

Whereas it admits neither the illusory control of the executive power by functionaries whom he nominates and revokes at his will, nor the election of the President of the Republic by these same functionaries, instead and in the place of representatives of the people, regularly elected according to legal conditions;

We protest in the name of the Government and in the name of the people that it represents against all usurpation of the functions of the national assembly by the so-called council of state which M. Sudre Dartiguenave has nominated and which remains revokable at his will;

We protest especially against the right which this illicit body lays claim to exercise to elect the President of the Republic and to ratify international treaties;

We confide to the delegated administrator, M. Georges Sylvain, the duty to transmit to the Senate of the United States this present resolution passed in the plenary assembly of the members of the Central Committee of the Union Patriotique, 31st of March, 1922.

On behalf of the committee.

GEORGES SYLVAIN.

I shall leave the copy—indeed, it seems to be the original—with the Secretary, but the translation just read will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, a committee of the Senate is making an investigation of the questions involved in our occupation of Haiti, and I hope that a report will soon be submitted by it.

I do not offer these resolutions for the purpose of entering upon a discussion of this matter, but I felt constrained to present them because of the numerous complaints emanating from Haitians, and I believed that when their views were presented in this concrete form they should be placed before the Senate.

When the committee has submitted its report, then there will be full opportunity to discuss the entire question.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 18, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 17, 1922.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

J. H. Fulmer, of Nevada, to be United States marshal, district of Nevada, vice Thomas Pickett, resigned.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Dudley S. Valentine, of California, to be register of the land office at Los Angeles, Calif., vice Benjamin F. Groves, whose term expires May 13, 1922.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Brainerd B. Smith, of California, to be receiver of public moneys at Los Angeles, Calif., vice Alexander Mitchell, whose term will expire June 24, 1922.

APPOINTMENT IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Elliott Burgess Roberts, of Massachusetts, to be aid, with relative rank of ensign in the Navy, in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, vice H. W. Hemple, promoted.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Josephine M. Costar to be postmaster at Greenville, Calif. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Margaret R. Faber to be postmaster at McKittrick, Calif., in place of Warren Rodgers, removed.

John R. Chace to be postmaster at San Jose, Calif., in place of Byron Millard. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Bernard G. Larrecou to be postmaster at Menlo Park, Calif., in place of E. J. Crane. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

COLORADO.

Harrison E. Thompson to be postmaster at Hot Sulphur Springs, Colo. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

CONNECTICUT.

William M. Logan to be postmaster at West Cheshire, Conn., in place of W. M. Logan. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1921.

FLORIDA.

Dexter R. Milton to be postmaster at Watertown, Fla. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

GEORGIA.

Martha C. Vinson to be postmaster at Byron, Ga. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Frank Summerour to be postmaster at Duluth, Ga. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Sallie M. McDaniel to be postmaster at Norwood, Ga. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Jacob L. Roberts to be postmaster at Pinehurst, Ga. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Ezekiel E. Sago to be postmaster at Rebecca, Ga. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

ILLINOIS.

Herman W. Behrens to be postmaster at Kampsville, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Walter A. Foster to be postmaster at Steward, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

John J. Barton to be postmaster at Sublette, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Joseph L. Hosick to be postmaster at Elizabethtown, Ill., in place of L. T. Rash, resigned.

May S. Williams to be postmaster at Hanover, Ill., in place of W. J. Sullivan. Incumbent's commission expired January 17, 1920.

Paul P. Shutt to be postmaster at Paris, Ill., in place of Thomas Moyer, removed.

INDIANA.

William S. Matthews to be postmaster at North Vernon, Ind., in place of J. N. Culp, resigned.

KANSAS.

William S. Smith to be postmaster at Rozel, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

KENTUCKY.

James L. Blair to be postmaster at West Liberty, Ky. Office became presidential October 1, 1919.

MARYLAND.

Susie S. Thompson to be postmaster at Hillsboro, Md. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

MICHIGAN.

Wynne C. Garvin to be postmaster at Millington, Mich., in place of H. A. Bishop. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

George A. Cook to be postmaster at Ypsilanti, Mich., in place of J. F. McCann. Incumbent's commission expired June 27, 1920.

MINNESOTA.

Sarah E. Schumacher to be postmaster at Zimmerman, Minn. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Olans E. Burtness to be postmaster at Caledonia, Minn., in place of W. W. Belden. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

MISSOURI.

Anna A. Brown to be postmaster at Bunker, Mo. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Frank R. Evans to be postmaster at Armstrong, Mo., in place of A. M. Green. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

NEBRASKA.

Henry J. Steinhausen to be postmaster at Creighton, Nebr., in place of P. H. Green, removed.

Ray H. Surber to be postmaster at Davenport, Nebr., in place of D. A. Berkey. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Earl R. Lewis to be postmaster at Humphrey, Nebr., in place of J. R. Ryan, resigned.

James E. Scott to be postmaster at Osmond, Nebr., in place of J. E. Scott. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1922.

James D. Finley to be postmaster at Sargent, Nebr., in place of W. T. Cropper. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

NEW JERSEY.

Eva H. Ketcham to be postmaster at Belvidere, N. J., in place of E. H. Ketcham. Incumbent's commission expired April 30, 1922.

John Boyd to be postmaster at Greystone Park, N. J., in place of John Boyd. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

NEW YORK.

Arthur H. Wyatt to be postmaster at Huletts Landing, N. Y. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Raymond C. Green to be postmaster at Sanquoit, N. Y. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

May M. Ferry to be postmaster at Edwards, N. Y., in place of M. L. Bancroft, resigned.

Louise E. Wells to be postmaster at Stony Brook, N. Y., in place of N. E. Lempfort. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Otis Banner to be postmaster at Newland, N. C. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Alfred A. McDonald to be postmaster at Parkton, N. C. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Richard S. White, sr., to be postmaster at Elizabethtown, N. C., in place of E. F. McCulloch, jr., resigned.

NORTH DAKOTA.

John V. Kuhn to be postmaster at Richardton, N. Dak., in place of A. J. Berger, removed.

OHIO.

Arthur R. Hurd to be postmaster at Lawndale, Ohio. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

William M. Freeman to be postmaster at Otway, Ohio. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Ray V. Chase to be postmaster at Archfold, Ohio, in place of David Snyder, deceased.

Addie F. Hosler to be postmaster at Kingston, Ohio, in place of F. B. Mowery, removed.

Helen E. Sawyer to be postmaster at New Paris, Ohio, in place of W. H. Wisman. Incumbent's commission expired February 19, 1922.

OKLAHOMA.

Guy E. Reece to be postmaster at Braggs, Okla. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

George Rainey to be postmaster at Enid, Okla., in place of S. C. Campbell, resigned.

John M. Dorchester to be postmaster at Pauls Valley, Okla., in place of W. M. Erwin, resigned.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Elwood M. Stover to be postmaster at Kulpsville, Pa. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Mabel M. Myer to be postmaster at Ronks, Pa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Elwood S. Rothermel to be postmaster at Fleetwood, Pa., in place of O. M. Koller. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Lottie G. Myers to be postmaster at Pamplico, S. C. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Arthur H. Siem to be postmaster at Clark, S. Dak., in place of H. B. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1922.

Thomas J. Dolin to be postmaster at Camp Crook, S. Dak. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

TENNESSEE.

John V. Allmon to be postmaster at Gleason, Tenn., in place of G. P. Brummitt. Incumbent's commission expired July 25, 1921.

TEXAS.

Alfred R. Vernon to be postmaster at Hermleigh, Tex. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Robert M. Hazelwood to be postmaster at Leander, Tex. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

John C. Wood to be postmaster at Big Sandy, Tex., in place of J. C. Wood. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Florence M. Geyser to be postmaster at College Station, Tex., in place of W. C. Boyett. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

William F. Viereck to be postmaster at Sealy, Tex., in place of Lon Davis. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Don A. Parkhurst to be postmaster at Tahoka, Tex., in place of J. B. Walker, resigned.

VIRGINIA.

Robert Irby to be postmaster at Appomattox, Va., in place of L. F. Ferguson. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Le Roy Jester to be postmaster at Chincoteague Island, Va., in place of I. H. Savage. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WASHINGTON.

Martha M. Juvenal to be postmaster at Kahlotus, Wash. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Richard A. McKellar to be postmaster at Cashmere, Wash., in place of Archie Manson. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Paul W. Thiele to be postmaster at Grandview, Wash., in place of A. E. Sykes. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Frederick J. Fleischer to be postmaster at Prescott, Wash., in place of R. B. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WISCONSIN.

Paul W. Schuette to be postmaster at Ableman, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Reginald E. Caves to be postmaster at Dalton, Wis. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Henry A. Elmer to be postmaster at Maribel, Wis. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Charles Brown to be postmaster at Montello, Wis., in place of D. W. McNamara. Incumbent's commission expired June 29, 1920.

WYOMING.

W. Leroy Call to be postmaster at Afton, Wyo., in place of J. A. Mecham. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1922.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 17, 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

GEORGIA.

Jacob S. Eberhardt, Carlton.
Robert T. Broome, Danielsville.
Marcus G. Keown, Mount Berry.
Mattie M. Pope, Omaha.
William V. Cobb, Smyrna.
Annie P. Harper, Stillmore.

KANSAS.

Charles Friskel, Frontenac.

MISSOURI.

C. P. Dorsey, Cameron.
Florence Gilkeson, Garden City.

NEW MEXICO.

Cassius G. Mason, Hagerman.

OHIO.

Charles L. Oberlin, Mineral City.
John H. Siegle, Urbana.

OKLAHOMA.

Robert C. Mayfield, Glencoe.
Cora B. Scott, Milburn.
Roy A. Hoffman, Seminole.
James S. Biggs, Stuart.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Charles E. Ehrhart, Dallastown.
Ed D. House, Pleasantville.
Ralph W. Marshall, Polk.
Wilbur C. Taylor, Port Royal.
George F. Klinefelter, Shrewsbury.
Mame E. Hughes, Ward.

VIRGINIA.

Charles R. Coakley, Arrington.
Philip B. Nourse, East Falls Church.
James F. Walker, Fort Defiance.
Winer Owens, Haymarket.
Homo D. Gleason, Lovingston.
Ann E. Copps, Schuyler.
Emeline P. Lacy, Scottsburg.
Bernard W. McGinnis, Shipman.
Eva C. Hudson, Tye River.
Benjamin A. Dratt, Woodford.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Sewell J. Champe, Montgomery.
Justus E. McCaskey, Paden City.
Wendell Evans, Winona.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 17, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us! Thou art the supreme certainty of our faith and the supreme comfort of our souls. How we bless Thee that life is ever lord of death! Through summer's day and winter's night we believe that the Judge of all the earth will do right. Let us take loyal hold of life and work and thus we shall be trained to be idle with safety. For Thy mercy's sake forgive our faults and failings. As destinies have been intrusted to us, O lead us on that we fail not. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 15, 1922, was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9103, a bill providing for the appointment of judges, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9103) entitled "An act for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, and to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, permit me to ask the gentleman if he has conferred with minority members of the Judiciary Committee about this matter before making his request?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have talked with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], whom I expect to put on the conference, with the consent of the Speaker, and it is entirely agreeable to him, so far as I know. I understood that he was not very well a day or two ago. I expect he will be here and ready to participate, however.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman, Does he state definitely to the House that he has spoken to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], who is going on the conference with him, concerning bringing up this bill at this time?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Not at this time. I had a conversation with him in reference to it and told him I expected to ask the Speaker to put him on the conference.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, this report, as I understand it, has been on the Speaker's table for probably a week, and all that I know about it is that the matter was informally discussed at a meeting of the Judiciary Committee a few mornings ago—on one morning of last week. As I understand it, there have been some very radical changes made in the House bill and that it is practically a different bill. Therefore I believe before this matter goes to conference it ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. And as there has been no arrangement as to referring it to the conference at this time, I shall be forced to object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 854. An act to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, had insisted upon its amendments, had requested a conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. COLT, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. KING as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10864. An act to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer Rebellion and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau; and

H. R. 10429. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credits to and relieve certain disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments in the settlement of certain accounts.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 854. An act to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Claims.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day is set apart for consideration of bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

LANDS IN FORT FETTERMAN MILITARY RESERVATION, WYO.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10002) to extend the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in the State of Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10002) to extend the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in the State of Wyoming.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, extended to the lands within the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in the State of Wyoming, which were restored to entry under the homestead laws only by the provisions of the act of July 10, 1890 (26 Stat. L. p. 227), and the act of December 22, 1892 (27 Stat. L. p. 408): Provided, That sales of land in said abandoned military reservation heretofore made in good faith under assumed authority of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes be, and are hereby, confirmed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LAKE GEORGE, YAZOO COUNTY, MISS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1162) declaring Lake George, Yazoo County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and take its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESCALERO RESERVATION INDIANS, NEW MEXICO.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6294) promoting civilization and self-support among the Indians of the Mescalero Reservation, in New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SALE OF PITTSBURGH STORAGE SUPPLY DEPOT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10925) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell real property known as the Pittsburgh storage supply depot, at Pittsburgh, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10925) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell real property known as the Pittsburgh storage supply depot, at Pittsburgh, Pa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell at either public or private sale, upon terms and conditions deemed advisable by him, the land and improvements thereon erected, situated in the city of Pittsburgh, State of Pennsylvania, lying between Thirty-ninth Street, Fortieth Street, Butler Street, and the Allegheny River in said city, comprising an area of approximately 19⅔ acres, and also a certain parcel of land in said city of Pittsburgh located at the northwest corner of Geneva Street and Forty-fourth Street, comprising approximately one-half acre, together with easements and rights of way leading thereto, all of which said property is generally known as the Pittsburgh storage and supply depot, and to sell the same as a whole or in parcels, as the Secretary of War may determine, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all deeds or other instruments necessary to effect such sale.

SEC. 2. That all moneys received as the proceeds of such sale, after deducting the necessary expenses connected therewith, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill H. R. 10772.

Mr STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as to the bill that was just passed, I do not know what the printed copy in possession of the Clerk shows, but I notice on page 2, line 6, a typographical error. The word "many" should be changed to "may." I do not know what the bill in possession of the Clerk shows.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings are vacated, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is agreed to.

The amendment on page 2, line 6, to change the word "many" to "may" was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MAINTENANCE OF INCOMPETENT INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10772) providing that relief extended to any incompetent or restricted Indian in furnishing food, clothing, fuel, or medical care, or necessary assistance to him or to his family, shall be a charge against the said Indian or his estate.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill, but I notice in the report the committee adopts the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, but fails to include it in the printed bill. I would like to inquire of some member of the Committee on Indian Affairs if that was merely an oversight?

Mr. MANN. That was just an error in handing in the copy.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in extending relief to any incompetent or restricted Indian, as provided by law, either in furnishing food, clothing, fuel, medical or hospital care, or other necessary assistance, or to the members of the family of any such Indian, to charge the actual cost of the relief so extended to such Indian.

SEC. 2. That any amount expended and charged against any Indian as herein provided may be reimbursable and paid from any funds that may accrue to the credit of such Indian, and, in case of death, any part of the amount so charged remaining unpaid may be paid from the proceeds of the sale of any property or from any funds belonging to the estate of such Indian.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 1, line 9, after the word "Indian," strike out the period and insert "in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. BURTNESS. Is that the committee amendment included in this report?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STATUE OF EDMUND BURKE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 165) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of Edmund Burke.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Ohio knows where it is intended to erect this statue?

Mr. FESS. I have no definite information as to where it would be located. I presume the Fine Arts Commission would be consulted as to the best place.

Mr. MANN. Usually I think it has been the practice in recent years to know in advance where they propose to locate a statue. I am not going to object to this resolution, but there have been times when, having acquired authority like this, they have put up statues in places where they had no business to be, and it has been customary, I think, for quite a number of years to receive that information before we actually pass a bill of this kind.

Mr. FESS. I think perhaps the information was given to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who is not present.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has just come in.

Mr. FESS. The question has been asked as to the location of this proposed statue.

Mr. LUCE. I do not think that matter has been considered.

Mr. MANN. I was just saying to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that in recent years it has been the practice, I think, of the Committee on the Library to ascertain where it was proposed to locate a statue before a resolution was passed. I am not going to object to the consideration of this resolution, but we have had difficulty at times in the past.

Mr. LUCE. The question has not arisen since I have been a member of the committee, and I was not aware that there was any occasion for it.

Mr. MANN. I am aware of the fact that since the gentleman from Massachusetts became a member of the committee the only resolutions passed were for statues already constructed. It is a good thing, however, to know in advance.

Mr. LUCE. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman, and I am very glad to have this called to my attention.

Mr. WALSH. Does not my colleague from Massachusetts think it would be well for Congress to have some idea as to where this statue is to be placed before the resolution is passed? Would it not be best to postpone consideration of this resolution until some information is obtained as to where they will place this statue?

Mr. LUCE. I have no objection to that. The restriction here is that the statue shall be placed somewhere other than in the grounds of the Capitol, of the Library of Congress, of Potomac Park, and of the White House. I had not expected that we should be asked to go that far.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. We can get that information, I think. The Library Committee has the call on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. You would not have any trouble, probably, in passing it by unanimous consent. No indication is given as to where they want the statue erected. The people who want to erect statues always want the very best place in the District of Columbia. Perhaps they ought not to have it, and it is a little difficult at times to resist the pressure.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understand the general rule is not to name the location in the act authorizing the erection of the monument. That was true in the case of the Grant Memorial and also in the case of the Meade Monument.

Mr. MANN. That was true in the case of the Grant Memorial, and where a great majority of this House earnestly protested against the location.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think that is true, and I hope this monument will not be erected in the Botanic Garden.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to interject a statement?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Grant Monument was located by a commission—at least, they suggested it—and the head of that commission was Elihu Root, of New York.

Mr. Howard, a distinguished Democratic Member from Georgia, brought in an adverse report opposing a resolution to change the location and supporting the suggestion of Senator Root and the rest of the commission, and it went through this House by a large majority.

Mr. MANN. This House voted by a large majority to change the location of the Grant Monument after it had been started. That is the fact.

Mr. REED of New York. What is the rule with reference to these locations? Does the Fine Arts Commission now have the entire say with reference to that?

Mr. MANN. They are consulted.

Mr. REED of New York. And then is the matter submitted to the House?

Mr. MANN. The Chief of Engineers, which at the present time means, I suppose, Colonel Sherrill, as good a superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, perhaps, as we ever had, makes the selection.

Mr. REED of New York. After he makes the selection, is the matter submitted to the House at all?

Mr. MANN. It is not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The proviso with which the gentleman is acquainted leaves the selection of the site subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, with the advice of the Fine Arts Commission, so the Joint Committee on the Library has the final say before the permanent site is finally selected.

Mr. LUCE. I had the understanding that in any case it was within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I will not object, I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission to the Sulgrave Institution for the erection, as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, Potomac Park, and the White House, of a monument to the memory of Edmund Burke, champion of American liberty: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Joint Library Committee of Congress, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, and it shall be erected under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said monument.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SECTIONS 5549 AND 5550 REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EDUCATIONAL LEAVE TO EMPLOYEES OF THE INDIAN SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9814) amending the proviso of the act approved August 24, 1912, with reference to educational leave to employees of the Indian Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I rise to inquire of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS], who reported the bill, as to whether these teachers in the employ of the Indian Service are annual employees or are they merely seasonal employees during the period of instruction?

Mr. BURTNESS: They are annual employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. So whether they are granted this additional 30 days' leave or not in addition to the 30 days that all Government employees have, they will receive their salaries, regardless of whether they are at home, at the school, or whether they are at some institute receiving special educational training?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is not exactly the situation. They receive the regular annual leave of 30 days that all employees receive. Then, in case they desire to attend some teachers' institute or take a course of instruction, they may now have 15 days' additional leave, but only in the event that they take a course of that sort. The purpose of this bill is to increase that educational leave from 15 days to 30 days.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are these Indian teachers paid on a 12 months' basis or paid for the period that they are actually instructing?

Mr. BURTNESS. They are paid on a 12 months' basis, the same as any other permanent employees of the Government are paid. They receive now one month's vacation, the same as any other Government employee does, with the additional provision that if they desire to take a course of instruction at some institute they get 15 days' additional educational leave, for which they are paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. But even now if they do not take that 15 days' educational leave, they would not be employed at the schools, but would be more or less resting?

Mr. BURTNESS. They would have to be at the schools.

Mr. STAFFORD. The traveling expenses connected with their going to these educational summer schools are borne by the teachers themselves?

Mr. BURTNESS. By the teachers themselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso of the act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 519), allowing educational leave to employees of he Indian Service, is hereby amended by striking out the word "fifteen" in the sixth line of the sixth paragraph of said act, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," so that the proviso shall read: "Provided, That hereafter employees of the Indian schools may be allowed, in addition to annual leave, educational leave not to exceed 30 days per calendar year for attendance at educational gatherings, conventions, institutions, or training schools, if the interest of the service require, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and no additional salary or expense on account of this leave of absence shall be incurred."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTNESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER NEAR HAILEYS FERRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10240) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress, approved March 4, 1921, to be built by J. J. Smith and J. E. McGee, both of Starr, S. C., across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOMINICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RATES OF POSTAGE ON CERTAIN KINDS OF PRINTED MATTER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6954) fixing rates of postage on certain kinds of printed matter.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], chairman of the Post Office Committee, is present. When I first read this bill I thought the purpose of it was to permit publishers of newspapers to print large numbers of additional sheets and send them in bulk through the mail at second-class rates to be distributed by private establishments that had inserted the advertisements reprinted on the additional sheets. On reading the report it shows that that is not the purpose of the bill, but it is a question in my mind whether the phraseology would not permit the sending of large numbers of single sheets through the mails at the second-class rate instead of the higher third-class rate. The language of the bill is—

That single sheets or portions thereof from any publication entered as second-class matter sent by a publisher to an advertiser or the latter's agent on account of and in proof of the insertion of an advertisement, shall, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General, be received and transmitted through the mails at the zone rates of postage applicable under the law to the advertising portions of such second-class matter.

Would not that language "single sheets" in the plural permit the publisher to send not only one sheet but many sheets through the mail at second-class rates? I have had a little experience in campaigns where it was very serviceable to have full-page advertisements reprinted in the same type for distribution among the voters.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think this bill authorizes that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It seems to me the phraseology is broad enough to bear that construction. Would not the purpose of the bill be obtained by amending so as to provide in the singular that a single sheet or portion thereof from any publication entered as second-class matter might be sent at second-class rates?

Mr. STEENERSON. The author of the bill [Mr. SUMMERS of Washington] is here, and perhaps he can answer the gentleman better than I can.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the purpose of the bill as reflected in the report. The objection I had in mind was the phraseology, which I fear will bear the construction permitting the publisher of the newspaper to send at second-class rates large numbers of advertising sheets that might be demanded, whereas now they go at third-class rates. The phraseology is—that sheets or portions thereof from any publication entered as second-class matter sent by a publisher to an advertiser or the latter's agent on account of and in proof of the insertion of an advertisement.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That latter part makes the purpose certain.

Mr. STAFFORD. It might be qualified and limited to one. Would not the publisher have the idea that many might be sent? I admit that it is a strained construction, but I think it can bear that construction.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The job printer sends printing through the mail at third-class rates. The gentleman thinks it might be possible for the job printer who owned a newspaper to print advertisements in the newspaper and send the advertisements at second-class rates.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; in large numbers.

Mr. MANN. Well, we all know if it is possible to do it it will be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question about that.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not this another attempt to lower the rates of postage on second-class matter?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; its purpose is to send one single advertising sheet in an envelope rather than the paper or magazine which contains the individual or the firm's advertisement.

Mr. WALSH. It goes at a lower rate of postage.

Mr. STAFFORD. You do not have to send the whole paper.

Mr. MANN. It permits the sending of a part of a paper instead of sending the whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the existing rules and regulations any publisher may send out a sample copy of a publication and has a right to send one or several copies at second-class rates to the persons or firms who order the insertion of the advertisement.

Mr. MANN. This bill provides that this shall be done under rules and regulations of the department. Does the gentleman think there is any danger at all of the department allowing large quantities of job printing to be sent through the mail at second-class rates?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not large quantities, but the way publishers make up and ship the second-class matter it is impossible for the department to keep a very close surveillance over the publications inclosed in the sack. The publisher could without detection by the postmaster ship large quantities, because they are dispatched to the terminals, especially in the cities, in sacks, and there could be many advertisements go at second-class rates. I thought that might be obviated by authorizing it in the singular; that a single sheet or portion thereof from any publication entered as second-class matter, and so forth.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will permit me, instead of littering up the mails with something that is of no profit to the Government, they would be sending single sheets at the end of the week or the end of the month. If we adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, it would make it necessary to send them every day. If there is any other amendment which the gentleman thinks would make it more certain, I would be willing to adopt it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we adopt the singular instead of the plural, wherein would it necessitate the publication being sent every day instead of at the end of the week? The single sheet from any publication of second-class matter could be sent at the end of the week or the end of the month.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If it could be so construed, there would be no objection.

Mr. MANN. But if the law provides that the singular shall be construed as the plural and the plural as the singular in all statutes, I do not think it would make any difference.

Mr. STAFFORD. I simply desire to obviate any abuse that might arise by shipping large numbers of advertising sheets——

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is not the purpose of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know; I so stated at the beginning.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It applies only to second-class matter, and it must be passed on by the Post Office Department, and under rules and regulations issued by them. This is a double check.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that it will not be subject to abuse, but it is left to the Postmaster General to prevent any abuse that might arise, and I will withdraw my reservation of an objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That single sheets or portions thereof from any publication entered as second-class matter shall, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General, be received and transmitted through the mails by the publisher to his advertisers or their agents at the zone rates of postage applicable under the law to the advertising portions of such second-class matter.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "matter," insert "sent by a publisher to an advertiser or the latter's agent on account of and in proof of the insertion of an advertisement."

And, in lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "by the publisher to his advertisers or their agents."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAPATO IRRIGATION PROJECT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9951) to amend section 28 of an act approved February 14, 1920, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is an amendment to a section of the existing law. The existing law provides, page 2 of the bill, that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to collect on or before December 31 of each calendar year hereafter, including 1920, from landowners a certain amount per acre. The bill under consideration seeks to change that so as to read 1922, and it supersedes entirely the present law. What are you going to do about the dues for 1920 and 1921, which have not been collected?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is fully provided for in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is not. It is fully provided in the law that you collect for each calendar year, including 1920, but when you amend that law so as to read 1922, that leaves no authority to collect for 1920 and 1921.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does not the language in line 19 cover that? It there provides that as to any unpaid amount due for the years 1920 and 1921 the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. MANN. Is authorized to grant an extension of time, but he is not authorized to collect the amount due.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. An amendment offered by the gentleman to cover that point will be satisfactory, if it is not thoroughly covered.

Mr. MANN. I wondered if it ought not to be left, so far as time is concerned, as it is in the existing section. Undoubtedly whoever drafted the bill thought that providing for 1922 would be sufficient, because the amendatory law would not be passed until 1922. There is another suggestion I desire to make. The section of the appropriation act had three paragraphs which are not in this bill at all, and if this bill is passed those three paragraphs will be entirely eliminated from the law. I am quite confident that is not the desire of the gentleman.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Those paragraphs provide for an appropriation which was expended two years ago.

Mr. MANN. I think they provided for a good deal more than that, if my recollection serves me correctly. I looked it up. I do not remember what the paragraphs are, but I know that my impression was when I read the language that it was not the intent to repeal them. Of course I might be mistaken about that. I think the gentleman had better look that up.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I did look it up at the suggestion of the gentleman some time ago, and I was of the opinion that that covered only an appropriation which has already been expended.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has looked it up, I am perfectly satisfied. I had forgotten that I spoke to the gentleman about it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It amends only following the words:

And provided further, etc.

Mr. MANN. But this amends the section to read "as follows," and anything that is not in this bill which is in the existing section is left out when this bill becomes a law.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does it not amend simply that portion which is in the section following the words "and provided further"?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the three paragraphs I speak of are following those words.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for reducing the amount paid to $2.50 an acre per annum from $5?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This amount was fixed at $5 a few years ago, rather arbitrarily, and at a time when the farmers were very prosperous. They were producing good crops and receiving good, high prices. Before the first payment fell due, however, the bottom dropped out of the prices of agricultural products, and the men who had gone onto this project had invested everything and found it difficult—in fact, almost impossible in some cases—to continue operations. Then, under the irrigation law the repayments are supposed to be distributed over a period of 20 years. This brings it down to not to exceed 12 years, which would still be 8 years less than the other projects, and this project, of course, should not be discriminated against in that manner.

Mr. WALSH. If they have three or four prosperous years in 1925, 1926, and 1927, are they coming back here with a bill to raise the rate again?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If this bill becomes a law, they are not coming back to make any changes or reductions. I trust the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the total construction charge of this project per acre?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Something over $30.

Mr. MONDELL. It is from one-half to one-third of the total construction charge of the irrigation projects generally, and this is perhaps the best alfalfa section in the Northwest.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is a very good project. There is no question about that, and they are repaying. This is one project that is repaying. They are making desperate efforts to do so.

Mr. MONDELL. How much have they repaid on this perfectly splendid project?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The project is not completed yet, but we passed a law——

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the man who is on his land and has it under irrigation and is getting his water does not care much whether there is some storage still to be constructed at public expense somewhere up in the mountains, which is the case in respect to this particular project. So far as he is concerned, his part of the project is constructed, and he is getting the benefit.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. From the time we called on them for repayment two years ago the majority have been making repayments. This bill came out a little earlier to-day than I expected, and I have not those figures before me. They were gone into by the committee. The bill once passed the Senate, but was dropped in conference in order that it should be considered and come from the Indian Committee. They have considered it and have held hearings on it, and the chairman, who is not especially disposed to the consideration of the matter, has made a very favorable report upon the bill.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. In response to the question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I think it might be well to emphasize the fact that since the original bill was passed the prices of farm products have decreased 50 per cent, so that——

Mr. WALSH. That is an argument against the bill.

Mr. BURTNESS. So at that time it was very much less than it is now. As a matter of fact, in providing for the amount suggested in this bill as recommended, the entire project will be paid off in less than 20 years.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the entire argument the gentlemen are raising in behalf of this bill, I am going to object.

Mr. BURTNESS. It is one of the reasons that appealed to the committee to allow a smaller amount, because the rental value of the land is less than it was during war times.

Mr. WALSH. What has the rental value got to do with it?

Mr. BURTNESS. The rental value, generally speaking, on any project, whether it is operated by the man who farms it himself or it is leased out to some one, surely determines how much you can pay from the proceeds of the land, whether it be a case of farm land, or a residence, or something else.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will you permit me to say at this time that the farmers on this project are mortgaging their this year's crops in order to get the water turned on for this present season? Now, that is actually taking place at this time. Otherwise presumably the land would have to lie idle. Repayment charges can not be met, with it lying idle. They have to have the water. The season is on. I know this from correspondence.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How many other projects will be affected if this legislation is enacted?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do not know of any other. I do not know of any other that was placed on the same basis as this one. The amount was fixed arbitrarily, as I say, at a time just before the agricultural conditions changed, and it is a fact that many of these people are having to mortgage their this year's crop in order to get water so as to grow a crop this year. Now, this does not sacrifice anything. They pay interest on their charges that are carried over. They have to pay the full amount that has been assessed, of $5 per annum on the past two years, if they have not already paid it. Most of them have. And they have to pay the charge fixed annually straight through, and they finish paying, instead of in 20 years, in a period of not to exceed 12 years.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, if they have another crop failure this year, it will not make any difference whether it is $2.50 an acre or $5.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I beg the gentleman's pardon. They have not had a crop failure, but the price they received for their alfalfa was below the actual cost of production during two years. That is what put them in this condition. These are good citizens, who are working hard and trying to comply with the law, but alfalfa at low prices has to be shipped long distances, with high freight rates, and they were able to realize only $4 or $5 a ton, whereas they usually get about $10 or $12 on the ranch. Such conditions undoubtedly are not going to prevail in the future.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman tell me if the words in lines 16, 17, and 18, reading "shall be available for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for continuing construction work on the said system" are part of the present laws?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. As I understand it; yes.

Mr. WALSH. That is not new phraseology?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I think this matter ought to be passed without prejudice. But if the gentleman feels confident that the three paragraphs which the gentleman from Illinois has directed his attention to, which have been omitted from this amended proviso, are not material to the operations of the law, I will not object, but this is establishing a precedent that I think we will be called upon to follow here a little later on by bills being introduced covering these other projects. Every time they have a high wind or a cloud of grasshoppers Uncle Sam will have to come in and lower the rates.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think I can assure the gentleman that will not be the case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, then I understand the gentleman deems it advisable to follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it will be necessary to change the amending phraseology so as to read in line 3, page 1, in the last proviso of section 22——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. The last proviso.

Mr. MANN. No. This only provides for an amendment of that part of the section following the words "And provided further."

Mr. STAFFORD. That part following the paragraph, as the gentleman pointed out, contains three other distinct matters.

Mr. MANN. I understand. That may be repealed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Maybe that money is desirable for further work and it is not intended to be repealed.

Mr. MANN. I spoke to the gentleman from Washington about it some time ago, and he says he looked it up.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. So far as that appropriation is concerned, it has been expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, by just merely changing a word in line 3, page 1, as to the last proviso of section 22, the gentleman does not take any risk at all.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is agreeable.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not want to interpose my view if the gentleman says that the money has been expended.

Mr. MANN. The money has been expended, but likely there are bills that have not been paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the money may have been obligated and not paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In 1920.

Mr. STAFFORD. And, if so, the money can be expended two years after the fiscal year 1921. I would suggest that in line 3 the gentleman insert "the last proviso of section 22 of an act," because it is the proviso that is being amended, and then there would be no doubt whatsoever of the following three appropriating sections remaining in the bill.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman please repeat his suggestion?

Mr. STAFFORD. Page 1, line 3, after the word "That," insert "the last proviso of."

Mr. HOCH. If that were done, you ought to change the words further on.

Mr. MANN. Yes. That would require another amendment on page 2.

Mr. HOCH. Would it not be well to place after the word "that" the words "section of"?

Mr. STAFFORD. And then strike out in line 3, page 2, as suggested, the following: "Following the words, 'And provided further.'" It is the last proviso of section 22. Now, we are amending the last proviso.

Mr. HOCH. That would be agreeable.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that the way to really amend it as desired by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] without doing violence to the other three sections that are not intended to be amended——

Mr. HOCH. I think if the gentleman will read further he will find there is another proviso to that section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. There is another proviso, but it does not contain the words "Provided further." There is a proviso in the paragraph following.

Mr. MANN. Then that would not be the last proviso in the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would be the last proviso in the section.

Mr. MANN. Not if there is another proviso there.

Mr. HOCH. Why would not my suggestion meet the situation? There is only one place where it was not provided for. Insert in line 3, after the word "That," the words "portion of," so that it will read "That portion of section 22."

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a good suggestion.

Mr. MANN. All the rest of the section follows those words.

Mr. HOCH. Then there is nothing further there to be amended.

Mr. MANN. If there is nothing further it requires no amendment.

Mr. WALSH. If there is any question about it, it ought to be passed over without prejudice, so as to give time to consult the existing law.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not object. I do not think it omits anything that refers to an appropriation. I trust the gentleman will not interfere.

Mr. BURTNESS. It is one of the up-to-date communities.

Mr. WALSH. You would reduce the rate and save money.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not this suggestion overcome all the difficulties, "That the last proviso of the eighth paragraph of section 22 of an act," and so forth? It is the eighth paragraph. There is no question about that. We have the statute before us. It is the eighth paragraph. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw his objection?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, he withdraws his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 28 of "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, pertaining to the collection of charges from landowners on the Wapato project of the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash. (41 Stat. L. 431), following the words "And provided further," be amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to collect on or before December 31 of each calendar year hereafter, including 1922, from landowners other than Indians under the said system the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre of land to which water for irrigation purposes can be delivered from the said system, which sum shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land in behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against said land when the amount of such total charge can be determined, and the total amount so collected, including any money collected from Indian allottees, shall be available for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for continuing the construction work on the said system.

"That upon the failure of any landowner to pay annually the construction charge as herein provided within the year within which it is chargeable, and as to any unpaid amounts due for the years 1920 and 1921, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to grant an extension of time within which such payments may be made for such time and upon such terms, including interest charges, as he may determine, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That no extension for the payment of any amount due for the years 1920 and 1921 shall in any event be extended beyond January 1, 1925."

With committee amendments as follows:

Amend page 1, line 3, after the word "Section," by striking out the figures "28" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "22."

Amend page 2, line 19, after the word "That," by striking out the words "upon the failure of any landowner to pay annually the construction charge as herein provided within the year within which it is chargeable, and."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 22 of an act approved February 14, 1920, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes,' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, I will say to the gentleman, that you ought to change "1922," in line 7 of page 2, to "1920," and not strike out the language in lines 19 and 20 and 21. You have got to establish that there is a construction charge for those two years of 1920 and 1921. That has to be a statutory construction. If you follow the existing law as to that, you establish that construction charge. Then, in lines 19, 20, and 21, you provide that on the failure to pay the amount of that construction charge for the years 1920 and 1921 the Secretary shall extend the time. You accomplish your purpose, but leave the liability for the payment of this construction charge. I know that no one wants to avoid that liability.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They are given an extension of time in which to pay it.

Mr. MANN. The construction charge is changed by this bill for those years. It would be changed to $2.50. You do not want to do that.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will say that it was not the intention of the bill to change any charges that accrued prior to this time. If that should be changed to 1920——

Mr. MANN. If it were to be changed to 1920, of course, it would make a construction charge for those two years, $2.50. If it is left out, I am inclined to think there will be no construction charge payable at all for these two years, because there is no authority for doing it.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the better way be to add the proviso to the proposed amendment to cover the years 1920 and 1921?

Mr. MANN. I expect it would be. Now, what is the construction charge against the Indian?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. There is no definite charge. They simply collect as rapidly as they can from the Indians. That is the policy. But it is a definite charge against the whites.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. We are amending a statute which now provides for charges at the rate of $5 per annum, and amending it so that the charges for each year after 1922 shall be $2.50 instead of $5. It does not seem to me that that affects in any way the responsibility to pay the charges that have accrued.

Mr. MANN. Where is the authority of law for collecting it?

Mr. MONDELL. The authority is in the statute.

Mr. MANN. No. We wipe that out of the statute when we amend it. Suppose we should repeal that law. Would there be any authority to collect it?

Mr. MONDELL. There would be authority to collect it so far as sums became due while the law was in effect.

Mr. MANN. After we repealed it?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is a good lawyer and I am not a lawyer at all, but——

Mr. MANN. I am not a good lawyer, but I am quite satisfied that if we authorize the collection of a sum and then repeal the authority, you can not collect it. A man would not want to pay it. I would not want to pay it if it was not due.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that should be amended to read "1920"? Do you see any other way than that?

Mr. MONDELL. If that is done, then there should not be the extension that there is in the last proviso, to the year 1925.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. No.

Mr. MONDELL. Because after having relieved these people from their payment for two years it is hardly fair to give them a further extension to 1925, an extension which we have not given in the case of any other reclamation project.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. We have passed the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. We wish the bill was back at the objection stage. I think all of us wish that now.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. A bill similar to this was introduced in the Senate and was placed on the House bill as an amendment. It went off that bill in conference, as it should, because it was not germane to the bill which it amended. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] is, of course, embarrassed by the fact that a bill of this kind was introduced in the Senate. I suppose the people in that section are under the impression that that practically meant that they were to secure the relief under the bill.

There is no finer irrigation project in the world than the Yakima. There is no portion of the Yakima which is better than the Indian section of it. There is no reclamation project in America that has been built at public expense that has been so liberally treated as this particular Indian project. There was a decision under which the Indians were granted a certain amount of the water of the river without regard to the need of other lands. An agreement was entered into under which a certain amount of water was to be diverted for the use of these lands. Later it developed that the amount of water was not sufficient. Then they secured legislation under which the general Public Treasury pays for a large portion of the storage for this project. This is the only reclamation project I know of where there is not a charge against the landowner for the entire cost of the project. So large a part of the project is charged against the Treasury that the total cost per acre to the settler is, I think, below $30, as compared with anywhere from $50 to $100 under the reclamation law projects. That difference is largely due to the fact that the Treasury bears the burden of a large portion of the expense of storing the water for the project. It is true these people paid large prices for their lands. They paid more than they would have paid otherwise because the reclamation charge was low. The value of the lands was assumed to be a certain amount.

The Federal Government was to get only so much, and then the Indian owner received the balance of the estimated value of the land. If the charge had been higher the Treasury would have been reimbursed fully, the Indian owner would have gotten less money, while the settler would have paid no more. But while the settler pays no interest on the money expended by the Federal Government, he does pay a high rate of interest on the land purchase price. The difficulty with these settlers is not the reclamation charge. It is the heavy obligation they are under to the people from whom they purchased, to whom they paid high prices, and to whom they are paying high interest charges. The legislation is very liberal. I do hope that these people will have sufficient public spirit now to meet their obligations. We hope the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] will return here continuously for years. He says he will not introduce another bill to reduce these charges. It is well for him to make that promise. I want to say to him that the bankers who hold the obligations of these settlers, the storekeepers to whom they owe bills, will be on his back just as heavily in the future for further reductions as they are now. The probability is that those are the gentlemen who are now pressing this matter much more than the settlers themselves. The banker in the locality who does not want to see a dollar go out of the community to help pay even a portion of the cost of these projects, the storekeeper who wants to be sure that his bill is paid, whether the Government ever gets a dollar or not, are the men who will be wanting further legislation of this kind.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I should like to say that this legislation has been asked for by the settlers, who are mortgaging their this year's crop in order to make a crop. The gentleman's statement as a general proposition may be entirely correct, but I assure him that that is not the case on the Wapato project. This legislation comes from the demand of men who have invested their all and who are trying to struggle through and make their payments and who will not come back here and ask for further reductions.

Mr. MONDELL. It is because of our very great sympathy for these men who have been having a hard time that we agree to the passage of this bill. But their hard time has not been altogether owing to low prices. They have been having a hard time because they have been held up in the prices that they paid for their lands, because they have been paying a heavy interest charge on the sums still due, and I imagine a great many of them still owe heavily on their lands.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They do.

Mr. MONDELL. Those are the sources of their difficulties quite as much as low prices. I have said what I have for the protection of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS]. I think his constituents ought to know that these reductions and extensions are allowed because the Congress does not want to do an injustice to the settler; and yet in a case like this it is done with a very considerable reservation as to whether or not this relief will in the long run be really helpful to the settlers themselves, and whether it would not be better for them to make the effort necessary to meet these obligations within the near future.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 3, after the word "that," insert "the eighth paragraph of."

Mr. MANN. What about the part of the eighth paragraph preceding the proviso?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not intend to modify the language found on page 2—

Following the words "and provided further" be amended to read as follows.

Mr. MANN. All right; I see.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: At the end of line 19, page 2, insert "that nothing herein shall be construed to modify or release any charge that may have accrued prior to the year 1922 and"—

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think that takes care of the objections raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want some information out of curiosity. I would like to know what the difference is between this provision and the existing law. The existing law provides that the white landowners shall pay so much. In this you leave out the word "white" and say that the landowners other than Indians shall pay so much. What other kind of owners are there?

Mr. STAFFORD. They have Japanese on the Pacific coast.

Mr. MANN. I assume that when a man moves to change the law he has some reason for it. It may be that he has not.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Suppose an Indian had come in from some other part of the United States and had purchased land there.

Mr. MANN. He would not be a white landowner.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This applies to landowners who are not Indians.

Mr. MANN. The existing law fixes a charge against white landowners. In this you fix a charge against owners other than Indians. What others are there?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Well, there might be a colored man; I do not know that there is. This is supposed to exclude Indians.

Mr. MANN. At whose suggestion was it put in?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think it came out of the department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO ISSUE TRUST AND FINAL PATENTS ON LANDS WITHDRAWN OR CLASSIFIED AS POWER OR RESERVOIR SITES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10611) to amend section 13, chapter 431, of an act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. p. 855), so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue trust and final patents on lands withdrawn or classified as power or reservoir sites, with a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees to enter upon and use any part of such land for reservoir or power-site purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the author of the bill I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF UNITED STATES BOTANIC GARDEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Joint Resolution 298, authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library of certain reservations in the District of Columbia for use in connection with the Botanic Garden.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any other Government land south of the tract to be reserved in this bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think there are a few tracts not covered by this resolution.

Mr. RAKER. This is the land on the east side of James Creek Canal?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; it includes all that the government of the District of Columbia can at the present time conveniently turn over to the Botanic Garden.

Mr. RAKER. Does this includes the tract that runs to the Potomac River—Anacostia branch?

Mr. LANGLEY. To the War College.

Mr. RAKER. There is a strip of land on the east side of the War College that runs clear to the Potomac. Does this include the land that runs to the Potomac?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I do not think it covers the entire tract.

Mr. RAKER. Why did you not include all the land to the end of the point?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is the intention to include it all.

Mr. RAKER. There is nothing there but a few old shacks.

Mr. LANGLEY. This takes in all of that land to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. RAKER. Let me put my question this way: Where they unload the garbage there is a strip of land on the east side of the river that runs down and makes a point, and I want to know if it includes that entire point?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think it does.

Mr. RAKER. Clear to the Potomac?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not recall the exact point to which this line goes, but I will say that Senator FERNALD, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; Senator BROUSSARD, of the Library Committee; myself as chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]; Col. C. O. Sherrill, in charge of public buildings and grounds; Colonel Keller, District Commissioner; General Beach, Chief of the Engineer Corps; and Director George W. Hess, of the Botanic Garden, all together went over that entire piece of property, and all reached a unanimous agreement as set forth in this resolution.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has been over the entire piece of property, and the end of this point is about due east from the War College.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What I want to know is whether or not it is the intention to include that point?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is. It oozes out to a very narrow point as it runs down along the land of the War College. The first contemplation was to end at the end of the dump, but this new resolution includes that on the other side of the dump, clear down to the river.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state the acreage in this tract?

Mr. RAKER. There must be 15 acres, about.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, more than that.

Mr. LANGLEY. I should say 30 acres or more, now available.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is of an irregular shape.

Mr. RAKER. There is a street on the east side that has two large rows of trees.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This land lies on the west side of the street where the trees are?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. From the dump down to the end—that would be the south point?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What I am interested in is whether it takes that point in?

Mr. MANN. The point is in the War College grounds.

Mr. RAKER. No; it is not.

Mr. MANN. I was there this morning.

Mr. RAKER. I was there yesterday and went all over it. On the south side is where the dump is, at the end of that canal.

Mr. LANGLEY. There are several dumps there, and that is what we want to get rid of.

Mr. RAKER. At the north end of the present canal there is a place where they unload garbage on boats.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This tract of land runs south on the east side of the canal and comes to a point in the Potomac River, and what I want to know is whether or not this tract from the dump on the south takes in all of the land on to where it ends in the river?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Does it join the War College grounds?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is on the left side of the War College grounds looking east.

Mr. RAKER. There is a canal there between the War College and this land.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. All of this land is on the east side of the canal?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and it is the intention to include all of what was originally a part of the James Creek Canal bed.

Mr. MANN. There are some sand operating provisions down there. Where is it from them? They are right close to the War College, where the sand boats come up.

Mr. RAKER. It is about 300 yards on farther east, onto another tract of land.

Mr. MANN. Where the sand barges come up is some distance east of the War College grounds.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will state to the gentleman that the engineers have made a blue print of it showing the metes and bounds.

Mr. MANN. Then it is a wonder they do not keep it where somebody can see it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope to have it here in a minute.

Mr. RAKER. What I am trying to get at is this: This point properly taken care of outside of the War College and the Speedway is one of the most beautiful places in Washington, if it is properly put in shape and used with the rest of the grounds.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and it is about as unsightly now as you could possibly have it.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is a disgrace to the city in its present condition.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. It is a perfect slump hole of everything.

Mr. MANN. But people do not have to go there. This is land awaiting development. It is on the river front.

Mr. LANGLEY. Awaiting cleaning up.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If this project is carried out, it will mean the improvement of all that tract of ground which used to be a part of the James River Canal, from immediately back of the Botanic Garden clear down to the War College and beyond to the river.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean that it goes down to the river?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Whatever you call it, it is some sort of a creek down there.

Mr. MANN. How far is it away from the navy-yard grounds?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is clear to the right of the navy-yard grounds.

Mr. MANN. It is between the navy-yard grounds and the War College?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How far is it from either one? Does anyone know?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. It joins directly to the War College.

Mr. MANN. It does not join directly to the War College down at the water's edge or come anywhere near it, I should judge.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not know exactly, by feet or yards, how far it is from the War College to the navy yard.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, has anyone made objection to this bill as yet?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman can bring in a chart so as to show the Members of the House what is contemplated in the improvement of this unimproved land, I shall make objection, because there is another day coming for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have sent for the chart and it will be here in a moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will be only two weeks from to-day.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think there could be any objection to it if the gentleman understood the matter.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman withhold the objection until I ask a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold it temporarily.

Mr. FESS. If there is any portion omitted in transferring to the Joint Committee on the Library, the Government does not forfeit any rights from what is omitted, but the question with me is that the Director of the Botanic Garden is ordered to take such portion of the fence down as he sees fit in order to have this proper dedication of the monument on the 27th.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is a part of the understanding.

Mr. FESS. He has declined to do it, because he still has the authority to do so, until there is a place located to transfer these shrubs. If we wait two weeks, what is going to happen?

Mr. LANGLEY. The fence is being removed to-day, pursuant to this understanding. Mr. Hess wants to do what is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are not many shrubs that will be impaired down there by the delay of two weeks.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Just a moment. It is a matter of good faith. I have understood, and was led to understand, that there was not any opposition to this, and the Director of the Botanic Garden is taking the fence down, and these shrubs must be removed. There is no question about their being valuable. You could not replace them with a king's ransom.

Mr. MANN. They are not worth 10 cents.

Mr. FESS. They are worth inexhaustible riches to those who appreciate botany, because representatives——

Mr. MANN. I know every shrub down there. They are worthless, so far as that is concerned. They are not worth moving, and most of them will never be moved.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUSTED in the chair). The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the resolution remain on the calendar at the foot of the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TABLET TO THE OFFICERS OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Joint Resolution 304, to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 190, identical with the resolution which has just been reported, and that it be considered instead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution No. 190, it being identical with the House resolution, and asks unanimous consent that the Senate joint resolution be considered in lieu of the House joint resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Let the resolution be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to present a tablet in the name of the Government of the United States to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution as a token of appreciation for making available Continental Memorial Hall for the sessions of the Conference on Limitation of Armament, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $350 for the expenses of producing a suitable tablet in conformity with this resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I beg to call the attention of the House to the fact that the two resolutions are not entirely identical, as the Senate resolution makes an appropriation of $350, whereas the House resolution authorizes an appropriation of $350. I did not recall that when I said they were identical. But I assume, however, there would be no objection to making a direct appropriation of that small sum.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman why the tablet is presented to the officers of the society rather than to the society itself? It would look, under the phraseology, under a hasty reading of it, as though this was presenting a tablet to the officers of this society as a personal recognition of some action of those officers rather than recognition of some action taken by the society. Why should not the tablet be presented to the organization itself?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I agree with the gentleman that that would seem to be an entirely appropriate procedure, and I assume that the presentation of the tablet is to the officers who allowed the use of the building. Of course, they were not able to secure the acquiescence of all the members of the society in that, but did it on their own responsibility. And I assume that the presentation to the officers is, of course, a presentation to the society. The resolution in the form in which it is presented is as drafted by those instrumental in securing the use of the building.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the President of the United States in his communication does not suggest either that it be presented to the officers or that it be presented to the "National Society," because I believe there is no such institution, but does suggest that the Government has promised in the name of the Government to present a tablet to the Daughters of the American Revolution, which, I believe, is the name of a corporation incorporated by act of Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is generally so accurate in his information that I would not question the accuracy of the explanation he has just made. But the society is known as, and I believe carries on its stationery the title, "National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution."

Mr. MANN. Very well, if they want to take it that way. We incorporated it. I am under the impression that I never heard it referred to—and I have frequently heard it referred to—as the "National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution," but I have always heard it referred to as the "D. A. R."

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has been away for a day or two, and he has missed some of the discussion with regard to experts. We are accepting the language and the phraseology of the experts.

Mr. MANN. I thought the President was an expert, and that is not his language. He controlled the House's action the other day. Maybe the gentleman did not agree with him then, and does not agree with him now.

Mr. WALSH. Experts had rather rough sledding, I am told, last week.

Mr. STAFFORD. The experts rough sledded over the House Members.

Mr. WALSH. Is that it?

Would the gentleman have any objection to having the phraseology modified in accordance with the request of the President, in order that this may be plain and clear?

Mr. MONDELL. In order that this may all be thoroughly understood, I will say that with the President's letter came the resolution in the form in which it is now before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee shakes his head and indicates that I should not make that announcement. The gentleman from Massachusetts wants to follow, as I desire to, the view of the President, so that the resolution is now before us in exactly the form in which it came with the President's letter. I think it an entirely proper form.

Mr. MANN. The House resolution or the Senate resolution?

Mr. MONDELL. They are both indentical.

Mr. MANN. They are not.

Mr. MONDELL. Except that I wrote in the House resolution the words "authorized to be appropriated" instead of the words "are hereby appropriated."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the President's letter, he desired the Congress to authorize an appropriation for the erection of a tablet in Continental Memorial Hall in commemoration of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. The bill as submitted is not in commemoration of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, but is to mark the appreciation of Congress for the use of that building for holding the conference—an entirely different purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear on this side just what the differences are between the leaders and the President. May we have order? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. There are no differences whatever, happily.

Mr. STAFFORD. There were some differences last week, but I do not know whether there are any differences to-day or not.

Mr. MONDELL. The measure is in the approved form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUSTED). Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming, who is interested in this matter, if he thinks it would in any way invalidate the object and purpose of this resolution if we make the presentation directly to the Daughters of the American Revolution, rather than to the officers thereof?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, this request is made on behalf of those who had the most to do with the conference, and it is made in the language suggested by them, and personally I would rather prefer to use the language they have suggested.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand there is to be a change of officers of the organization. There is not any danger that the present officers would carry the tablet away?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not know anything about that. It depends on what the tablet says.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman believe that the House approves the idea of the President providing for a tablet to be erected in Memorial Hall in commemoration of the conference, as suggested in his letter, rather than a tablet expressing the appreciation of Congress for allowing the conference to be held there?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wisconsin lacks imagination.

Mr. STAFFORD. In this particular there is no question about that.

Mr. MONDELL. The tablet will be a tablet commemorating the holding of the conference. That is what the tablet will commemorate and set forth. It is proposed to present it to the society through their officers out of appreciation, or as a token of appreciation, of the fact that they allowed the conference to be held in their hall. But the tablet will set forth in appropriate language the fact that in the Continental Hall of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution on a given date the Conference on the Limitation of Armament was held.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad the gentleman from Wyoming is reading into the bill something that is not present at all. Reading it as closely as a Philadelphia lawyer would read it, you could not find anything to carry out that intendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; I think you can.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. Let me read you what it says:

That the President is hereby authorized to present a tablet in the name of the Government of the United States to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution as a token of appreciation for making available Continental Memorial Hall for the sessions of the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

For "making available Continental Memorial Hall"; for making it available.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the resolution states the reason for presenting the tablet. It will be presented out of appreciation for the use of the building. But the tablet itself will set forth in appropriate terms the fact that in that hall at a given time was held the Conference on the Limitation of Armament.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman reads that into the bill, but there is nothing in the bill to warrant that assumption.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the fact.

Mr. WALSH. How much rent did the conference pay for that hall?

Mr. MONDELL. That is a question that ought not to be either asked or answered at this time. I do not know that they paid anything.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Wyoming has the floor, will he yield for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have the floor, I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If it is a fact, as stated by a distinguished authority one day last week, that the treaties which resulted from the conference held have apparently now been reduced to the condition of scraps of paper, whether he thinks it desirable to press the presentation of this tablet at this time? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. It will be of some historical consequence at least.

Mr. MONDELL. The treaties have not as yet been treated as scraps of paper. I hope they will not be.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Is not the very language presenting a tablet to the officers of the society absurd? You do not present the tablet to the officers of the society. You present the tablet to the society.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman hear what was said——

Mr. LONDON. A part of it.

Mr. MONDELL. In regard to the genesis of this question? I think, when we are performing an act such as is proposed, it is proper to do it in the form in which those most directly interested in the great event referred to think appropriate. I do not want to be critical. They seemed to think that it was appropriate to make the presentation to the officers. In fact, it is to the society.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In other words, the persons who will be physically present will be the officers?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to present a tablet in the name of the Government of the United States to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution as a token of appreciation for making available Continental Memorial Hall for the sessions of the Conference on Limitation of Armament, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $350 for the expenses of producing a suitable tablet in conformity with this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, House Joint Resolution 304 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the two bills introduced by me which were passed here to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the two bills indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, when governmental expenses mount into billions of dollars annually and we seek innumerable ways of reducing the taxpayers' burdens I am pleased to bring to your attention this bill, to ask your favorable consideration, and to urge its passage.

If fully cooperated in, it will save the taxpayers from a quarter to a half million dollars annually.

This bill does not shift the tax burden from one shoulder to the other. It makes an actual saving by providing a way to stop a great economic waste.

The bill reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6954) fixing rates of postage on certain kinds of printed matter.

Be it enacted, etc., That single sheets or portions thereof from any publication entered as second-class matter, sent by a publisher to an advertiser or the latter's agent on account of and in proof of the insertion of an advertisement, shall, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General, be received and transmitted through the mails at the zone rates of postage applicable under the law to the advertising portions of such second-class matter.

Under existing law newspapers and periodicals may be sent by the publishers thereof to advertisers or advertising agents for the purpose of having the advertisement checked at second-class rates. But to go at this rate an entire copy of the paper must be sent. If only a page or a portion of the newspaper is sent, it goes at third-class rate with postage stamp attached.

The purpose of this bill is to enable newspaper publishers to send single sheets, or portions of the newspaper, to advertisers or advertising agencies at the second-class rate.

The objects to be gained by the passage of this bill are two-fold:

1. If the system of furnishing to advertisers or advertising agencies only that portion of the magazine or newspaper containing the advertisement were generally adopted, there would unquestionably be a great saving of print paper. It is believed that the passage of this bill would encourage this practice very greatly and that it would soon become practically a universal custom, and that the saving in paper would run into thousands of tons.

2. It is generally agreed that second-class matter is handled by the Post Office Department at a considerable loss to the Government, so any reduction in weight of second-class matter carried through the mails is a distinct gain. Considering the fact that over 25,000 publications send out a few advertisers' copies every issue, it can be seen that this system might result in a substantial reduction in the volume of this unprofitable class of mail. Most of these advertisers' copies of newspapers go to the large cities, like New York and Chicago, where the large advertising agencies are located and where the post-office facilities are sadly overburdened.

Newspapers would no doubt adopt a system of inclosing the single sheet in unsealed envelopes properly labeled, and these would unquestionably be easier handled in the post offices and much easier carried by the carriers than the bulky newspapers.

This legislation is recommended by newspaper men, advertising agencies, and by those who understand the working of the Post Office Department. The bill specifically states that the privilege shall run "under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General."

The system authorized by this bill being voluntary, there can be no objection on the part of anybody to it, and there are many who strongly recommend its passage.

This very complete and lucid committee report was written by Representative HARDY of Colorado, a lifetime publisher, and but recently president of the Editorial Association of America.

After I had prepared and introduced this bill two years ago, it was submitted to publishers and advertising agencies throughout the United States. The replies, which were received in large numbers, indicate that 90 per cent or more of the big publishers will avail themselves of the provisions of the bill, and will forward single sheets at the end of each month. To appreciate the probable saving to the Government, it must be borne in mind that second-class mail is carried at an average loss to the Government of approximately 5 cents per pound. This amounts to from $50,000,000 to $70,000,000 annually. However, except for low postal charges, the subscription rates on all publications would have to be increased.

From information furnished me by the Congressional Library it seems altogether probable that if this bill is enacted into law and fully cooperated in by publishers and advertisers that it will mean—

An annual saving to daily, weekly, and monthly publications of 60,000,000 copies;

An annual saving of 8,000,000 pounds of print paper;

It would mean to each individual publisher a very considerable saving in print paper and in dollars and cents;

At 10 cents per pound for print paper, it would mean a saving of $800,000 to the publishers of the United States; and

An annual saving to the Federal Government of approximately $400,000, and this is the prime object of this legislation.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was granted the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD on the bonus bill and on the hospital bill for five days. I was called out of the city on urgent business, and since my return have been ill. I ask unanimous consent that I be granted five additional days in which to extend my remarks on these same bills. It will be only a brief extension of my actual remarks on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for five days on the bills indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand the remaining bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent have not been there a sufficient number of days to allow them to be considered to-day under the rule.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the last bill on the calendar is a bridge bill which was presented by our colleague from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Would the gentleman from Wyoming be willing that that bill be considered?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman would be entirely within his rights in requesting unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10407) authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to state that he has been quite scrupulous in trying to observe what he thinks is the spirit of the rule in not recognizing Members to make requests for unanimous consent on any day, or on this day, except for bills properly on the calendar, but has made an exception for bridge bills, thinking them to be a perfunctory class of bills which nobody could possibly object to. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee, who requests immediate consideration of the last bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, althought it has not been on the calendar for three days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Savannah, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, April 18, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8800) granting an increase of pension to Lucy S. Faser, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. REECE introduced a bill (H. R. 11338) to empower the Bureau of Efficiency, subject to the approval of the President, to establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments and independent establishments, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment, with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact, which was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KINCHELOE: A bill (H. R. 11339) granting an increase of pension to Johanna Slaton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11340) to advance Maj. Ralph S. Keyser on the lineal list of officers of the United States Marine Corps, so that he will take rank next after Maj. John R. Henley; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 11341) granting a pension to Mike Grubb; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11342) granting a pension to William H. Stanberry; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAW: A bill (H. R. 11343) granting an increase of pension to Nannie E. Scott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5149. By Mr. ELLIS: Petition of the Central Labor Union assembled in Kansas City, Mo., favoring modification of the Volstead law so as to permit the manufacture and sale of beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5150. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Illinois Automotive Trade Association, protesting against any further special taxation on the automobile industry; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5151. Also, petition of the Carolina Bagging Co., favoring protection for the jute-bagging industry by the imposition of an adequate tariff duty; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5152. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of La Salle, Ill., favoring adequate provision for the Army and Navy, and opposing reduction of the enlisted personnel below the recommendation of the President and the Secretary of the Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5153. Also, resolutions of the Illinois Manufactures' Association, favoring bills for Federal aid to the merchant marine, and the maintenance of the Navy as provided in the treaty at the 5-5-3 ratio; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5154. Also, petition of the National Association of Casualty and Surety Agents, opposing the Fitzgerald bill (H. R. 10034) relating to workmen's compensation in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5155. Also, petition of the Union League Club, of Chicago, and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, opposing proposed reduction of the personnel of the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5156. Also, petition of Mrs. Raymond Morgan, legislative representative of the American Association of University Women, favoring the naval appropriation bill as reported, for reduction of the personnel of the Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5157. Also, memorial of the city council of the city of Rockford, Ill., protesting against the proposed establishment of a Federal reformatory at Camp Grant, on the outskirts of said city of Rockford; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5158. By Mr. LINEBERGER: Petition from 28 citizens of the city of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the Towner-Sterling bill; to the Committee on Education.

5159. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of F. W. Stedman and 45 others, of Berg, N. Dak., urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation and a stabilized price on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 18, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, the Author of all our good, constantly dispensing Thy blessings and assuring us of Thy care for us and asking from us the fullness of desire on our part in the expression of devotion and consecration to the highest interests of the world as well as of our loved country, be pleased to reveal Thyself to us to-day, and may the hours be freighted with the consciousness that we live and move and have our being in Thee. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ALTERNATIVE ESTIMATE, ARMY QUARTERMASTER CORPS, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 186).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an alternative estimate for the War Department, fiscal year 1923, not involving any increase in the total amount heretofore estimated for, but simply a rearrangement of amounts for certain items under the Quartermaster Corps, in total amount $73,000,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INTERMENT OF SOLDIER DEAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Quartermaster General of the Army, transmitting lists of American soldier dead returned from overseas who are to be reinterred in the Arlington National Cemetery, Thursday, April 20, 1922, at 2.30 p. m., which was ordered to lie on the table for the information of Senators.

MR. BORIS BAKHMETEFF, AMBASSADOR OF RUSSIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State relative to the subpœna served upon Mr. Boris Bakhmeteff, ambassador of Russia, by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, which the Chair will request the Secretary to read.

The communication was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 17, 1922.

SIR: A representative of Mr. Boris Bakhmeteff has brought to the attention of the department the following telegram said to have been sent to him by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate:

"You are requested to appear before the Committee on Education and Labor of the United States Senate on Monday, April 17, 1922, at 11 o'clock and to testify relative to matters under consideration by said committee. Your necessary expenses will be reimbursed. Will you accept this notice as service of subpœna and appear at the time named. Answer paid here.

"(Signed) DAVID S. BARRY,
"Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate."

Mr. Bakhmeteff presented his letter of credence to the President of the United States and was officially received by the President as the ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of Russia on July 5, 1917, and since that time this Government has recognized him in that capacity and has recognized no other Russian ambassador.

Since Mr. Bakhmeteff, in accordance with the general diplomatic practice in such cases, has brought the telegram to my attention, I deem it to be incumbent on me to point out that an ambassador is not required to respond to process. The provisions of sections 4062 to 4064 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are declaratory of the law of nations with respect to the immunity of diplomatic officers.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the Senate otherwise orders, the communication will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following Senate joint resolutions:

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of Edmund Burke; and

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. SIEGEL, Mr. VAILE, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. RAKER, managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6954. An act fixing rates of postage on certain kinds of printed matter;

H. R. 9814. An act amending the proviso of the act approved August 24, 1912, with reference to educational leave to employees of the Indian Service;

H. R. 9951. An act to amend section 28 of an act approved February 14, 1920, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921;

H. R. 10002. An act to extend the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation, in the State of Wyoming;

H. R. 10240. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.;

H. R. 10407. An act authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.;

H. R. 10772. An act providing that relief extended to any incompetent or restricted Indian in furnishing food, clothing, fuel, or medical care, or necessary assistance to him or to his family shall be a charge against the said Indian or his estate; and

H. R. 10925. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell real property known as the Pittsburgh Storage Supply Depot, at Pittsburgh, Pa.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 10429. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credits to and relieve certain disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments in the settlement of certain accounts; and

H. R. 10864. An act to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion, and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

PETITIONS.

Mr. ELKINS presented resolutions adopted by the River City Club, of Parsons, W. Va., favoring annual payments by the Federal Government to districts and counties in which lands have been purchased to be used as part of national forest reserves for water conservation, equivalent to the revenue which would accrue to such districts or counties if the lands were assessed and taxed by the local authorities, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of an adequate protective tariff law based on American valuations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the First Presbytery of Ohio, at the United Presbyterian Church, of Morning Sun, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the First Presbytery of Ohio, at the United Presbyterian Church, of Morning Sun, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by Corporal Thomas R. Iverson Post, No. 404, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring the passage of House bill 9578, providing for the exemption of war tax on admissions to entertainments, bazaars, etc., given by posts and ladies' auxiliaries of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Morgan F. Knadler Camp, No. 19, United Spanish War Veterans, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the passage of Senate bill 3263, to extend the provisions of section 127–A of the national defense act, as amended, so as to grant retired pay and allowances of warrant officers on the retired list to retired enlisted men who served as commissioned officers in the United States Army during the World War, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2140. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for a certain described tract of land (Rept. No. 609); and

S. 2460. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (Rept. No. 608).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3472) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 3473) to amend section 2 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 3474) to establish a Government Indian School at Elko, Nev.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3475) for the relief of Fannie E. Turner; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3476) to amend an act to grant to citizens of Modoc County, Calif., the right to cut timber in the State of Nevada for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Modoc County, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3477) granting a pension to Amelia D. Crocker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3478) for the relief of George W. Trowbridge; to the Committee on Claims.

TARIFF DUTY ON CYANIDES.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, on Friday last I offered an amendment to the pending tariff bill to restore the language of the bill as passed by the House relating to cyanide. I desire now to present a substitute for that amendment.

My reason for asking this substitution is that since the presentation of the first amendment I have learned that the Tariff Commission, in a volume containing a summary of tariff information, which has just appeared, prepared for the use of the Finance Committee, has suggested that all cyanides be classified under one paragraph. Acting upon this suggestion, the Finance Committee adopted the language which is found in paragraph 33a of the pending bill, and which is carried in the substitute amendment I now offer.

The suggestions of the Tariff Commission are found at page 1435 of the Summary of Tariff Information, 1921, and are as follows:

> It has been represented to the Tariff Commission that it would be advisable to classify all cyanides under one paragraph. This suggestion has also been made by a domestic manufacturer before the Senate Finance Committee. (See pp. 1109–1118, hearings before Committee on Finance, Tariff Schedule 1, H. R. 7456.) The various cyanides are used for practically the same purposes. It is their cyanogen (CN) content, and not their metal content which is of importance to the consumer. Therefore this classification is logical. If the committee desires to adopt this suggestion, the following paragraph will accomplish the purpose:
>
> "Cyanides: Potassium cyanide, sodium cyanide, all other cyanide salts, and all combinations and mixtures of cyanides, — per cent ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN ATTORNEYS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago the Alien Property Custodian submitted a report pursuant to a resolution theretofore adopted by the Senate. In that report it is shown that a large number of attorneys were employed and received compensation.

I am in receipt of a telegram from a distinguished lawyer, in which he refers to the fact that there were a great number of attorneys and men of standing who during the war volunteered their services and served for a considerable period, some of them during the war, not only in the Alien Property Custodian's office but in other branches of the Government.

He seemed to think, and perhaps justly, that the inference was properly to be drawn from the report that every attorney who served in the Alien Property Custodian's office was compensated. He thought the public ought to know—and in that view I share his opinion—that there were lawyers of ability and standing who gave their services and rendered very splendid service in that office as well as in other branches of the Government during the war.

Mr. MOSES. For a dollar a year, was it not? They all had to be compensated.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Hampshire may take such comfort as he pleases from his observation.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by title, and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 6954. An act fixing rates of postage on certain kinds of printed matter; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 10002. An act to extend the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 10925. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell real property known as the Pittsburgh Storage Supply Depot, at Pittsburgh, Pa.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 10240. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.; and

H. R. 10407. An act authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 9814. An act amending the proviso of the act approved August 24, 1912, with reference to educational leave to employees of the Indian Service;

H. R. 9951. An act to amend section 28 of an act approved February 14, 1920, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; and

H. R. 10772. An act providing that relief extended to any incompetent or restricted Indian in furnishing food, clothing, fuel, or medical care, or necessary assistance to him or to his family shall be a charge against the said Indian or his estate; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar begin where we left off on yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the call of the calendar shall begin at the point at which the Senate left off yesterday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar at that point.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 2885) to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes, was announced as the first bill on the calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the bill which has just passed is the bill which was under consideration yesterday when the Senate proceeded to other business at 2 o'clock. At that time the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had expressed doubt as to the wisdom of one of the items in the bill. It just occurs to me now that in a sense I owe a certain obligation to the Senator from Wisconsin to give him an opportunity to express his opinion of the measure. While I do not at this time make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, I desire to say that I shall make an endeavor immediately to communicate with the Senator from Wisconsin, and, if he so desires, I shall then make such a motion.

JOHN H. GATTIS.

The bill (S. 2017) for the relief of John H. Gattis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

J. B. WATERMAN.

The bill (S. 1059) for the relief of J. B. Waterman was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. B. Waterman, of Belpre, Ohio, the sum of $483.25, being the amount paid the Government by him for that value of stamps and money taken from his custody as postmaster of Belpre, Ohio, by burglars on February 13, 1911.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, bills of this character are continually coming before the Senate. In my opinion there ought to be some legislation enacted requiring all men handling funds of the Government to give a bond. There is not a day on which the calendar is up for consideration when bills of this character are not considered. In fact, it seems the way we have been passing bills to reimburse postmasters under these circumstances has been only an invitation to them to handle money carelessly and allow it to be loosely cared for. It seems to make no difference to them whether it is stolen or not, and I think they become careless.

I am going to take steps to see if some legislation can not be passed requiring postmasters who handle money of the Government to give a bond to the United States, whether it be a bond against theft or a bond against other cause for loss on the part of the Government. It makes no difference what is the cause the Government ought to be protected against the stealing of so much money from postmasters.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1352) for the relief of Benjamin F. Spates, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1405) for the relief of William Collie Nabors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 403) for the relief of Louise Saint Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of Lapene & Ferré, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been considered as in Committee of the Whole and has been reported to the Senate. It is now in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 404) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and others, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

MONTHLY PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which has just been objected to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. If the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] should prevail and the bill for which he asks consideration be taken up, would it not mean that there would be no limitation upon debate, that the five-minute rule would not be applicable, and that we might discuss the bill during the remainder of the day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has stated the situation as the Chair understands it.

Mr. KING. So that we should then depart from the calendar for the purpose of considering the bill at great length, if we should decide to consider it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to qualify the statement he has just made by further stating that, of course, at 2 o'clock the bill for which the Senator from New Mexico moves consideration would cease to be before the Senate. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BURSUM. My understanding is that under Rule VIII debate is limited to five minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But that rule would not be applicable if the bill be taken up by motion. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida will state the inquiry.

Mr. FLETCHER. The inquiry is this: We are proceeding, not by unanimous consent, to consider only bills that are not objected to; but we are now proceeding regularly, as I understand, on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for unanimous consent was limited to designating the point at which the call of the calendar should begin.

Mr. FLETCHER. That I understood. The calendar is now under consideration; the bill of the Senator from New Mexico is reached on the calendar; a Senator has made objection to the consideration of the bill; and the Senator from New Mexico has moved that the bill be taken up. Has he the right to make that motion; and, in case the motion is agreed to, will the debate be limited to five minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the unanimous-consent agreement does not prevent the Senator from New Mexico making the motion which he has made. The Senator from New Mexico asks for the yeas and nays upon his motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and vote "yea."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I have a permanent pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who is not here. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico has not voted.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on official business.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. STANLEY. I inquire if the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Kentucky has not voted.

Mr. STANLEY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky, and for that reason withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

I also with to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—49.

Ashurst	Heflin	Newberry	Spencer
Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Kellogg	Norbeck	Sutherland
Capper	Kendrick	Norris	Swanson
Curtis	Keyes	Oddie	Townsend
Edge	Ladd	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	La Follette	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Lenroot	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Gerry	Lodge	Poindexter	Weller
Glass	McKinley	Pomerene	Willis
Gooding	McNary	Sheppard
Hale	Moses	Simmons
Harris	Nelson	Smoot

NAYS—4.

Culberson	Dial	King	Myers

NOT VOTING—43.

Ball	Ernst	McKellar	Shortridge
Borah	Fletcher	McLean	Smith
Brandegee	France	New	Stanfield
Calder	Frelinghuysen	Overman	Stanley
Cameron	Harreld	Owen	Trammell
Caraway	Harrison	Pittman	Underwood
Colt	Hitchcock	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Crow	Johnson	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed	Warren
Dillingham	McCormick	Robinson	Williams
du Pont	McCumber	Shields

So Mr. BURSUM's motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That payment of pensions shall be made monthly, on the 4th day of each month, beginning not later than September, 1921.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the original bill provided that the date of commencing monthly payments should be not later than September, 1921. On account of the delay in the consideration of the bill, this provision was changed by the committee to July, 1922. At this time it will be necessary to defer that date until September, 1922. I move, in lines 4 and 5, that the word "July" be stricken out and the word "September" inserted in lieu thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico to state the scope of this bill. As I read it and interpret it, it would mean that every person drawing a pension from the Government—not only military and naval pensions, but civil pensions—must be paid monthly; and, as I interpret the bill the payments are made not only to the soldiers of the Mexican and Civil Wars and the Spanish-American War but would embrace all private pension claims, which amount to thousands and perhaps tens of thousands, and would apply to all of the pensions that have been granted and may hereafter be granted by reason of services during the World War. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not the interpretation just suggested is correct?

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the object of the bill is to make payment of pensions to veterans of the Civil War monthly. The civil pensions mentioned by the Senator have not been taken into consideration. There are on the pension rolls at the present time approximately 560,000 veterans and widows of veterans. The law has been asked for and proposed in order to place veterans of the Civil War upon an equal footing and basis with those of the World War. The veterans of the World War are all paid monthly. It was also suggested in order to give the veterans the opportunity of having a cheaper rate of living. The time for long credits has passed. There is no doubt but that every veteran coming under this act will be saved from $5 to $15 per month in the amount of his necessary bills. There is no institution in the country nowadays that pays quarterly. There is no corporation in the land that is not required by law, in most of the States, including the railroads, to pay its employees twice a month. The Veterans' Bureau pays once a month. Every civil employee of the Government is paid twice a month.

The only person I know of who is compelled to wait three months is the soldier who served the country in the Civil War and in the Indian wars and in the Spanish-American War.

The cost involved is nothing outrageously excessive. The cost to the Government of providing this system of payments will not exceed 3 cents per month for each soldier in addition to the present cost. It will cost approximately $160,000 annually to make this change, and to start out with it will cost, in accordance with the estimates of the Secretary of the Interior, $44,000. That is necessary to install different machinery. The Secretary of the Interior, to my mind, strikes the essence of this proposition in the latter part of his recommendation to Congress on this bill:

> Assuming that the Congress did right in making the payment of compensation by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance monthly and that no change will be made in the law, there is no apparent reason why the Congress should not be asked to authorize monthly payments to pensioners paid by the Bureau of Pensions.
>
> Under the existing law it appears that there is a discrimination in favor of a comparatively youthful list of beneficiaries receiving compensation and against a large list of very aged beneficiaries receiving pension.
>
> The payment of pensions monthly would enable very many Civil War pensioners to receive one or two months' more pension than they get, for the reason that they are dying at the rate of about 4,000 a month and very many of them live until within a few days of the quarterly payment. If paid monthly they would receive pension up to the 4th day of the month of their death if they died after that date.

That is the concluding statement of the Secretary of the Interior in commenting upon this bill. It seems to me that there ought not to be any controversy on this subject; that this bill is so eminently fair and just, and so clearly the decent thing to do, that it ought to pass without any opposition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator? The Senator stated, as I understood him, that the additional cost figured by the Secretary of the Interior is $160,000.

Mr. BURSUM. That is my last estimate, since this report, coming directly from the Pension Bureau.

Mr. KING. I suppose the Senator means that the cost in the Interior Department will be $160,000?

Mr. BURSUM. The cost to the Pension Bureau; yes.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator knows that that is only, I was about to say, a small part of the cost incident to this change, if it shall be made. The Senator knows that, because of the very perfect system of bookkeeping employed by the Government, it will involve a large number of employees in other departments of the Government, particularly in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURSUM. That was all taken into account by the Pension Bureau. This is an estimate of the total additional cost.

Mr. KING. As I understood the Senator, the $160,000 additional cost related only to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BURSUM. No; the statement was made that it would cover the entire additional cost.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator there the statement of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BURSUM. I have here the statement of the Secretary of the Interior, yes; but in addition to this I have a verbal statement from the officials of the Pension Bureau. I made further inquiry about the cost of this measure for this reason: It was first contended that the cost would be only $44,000. It was later contended that it might be as much as $400,000. For those reasons I made special inquiry, and the answer I received was that it would probably cost $160,000 in addition to the present cost and in addition to the $44,000 required to make the immediate changes in the departments.

I take it, Mr. President, that these veterans who served this country in the greatest peril in its whole history, who were extremely lenient in their demands upon the Government for pensions, who for years and years and years were content to receive a very modest sum in aid of their existence in the shape of a pension, who for years and years received only six, seven, eight, nine, or ten dollars a month—these veterans, who are now living close to the sunset of their lives, ought to be given the same privileges that are given to those who served in the World War.

They are paid monthly. The world knows that the pensioner of necessity must be a poor man. He must be in need of the pension. He is not a man who has credit; and the time of long credits, of three months' credits by grocery men or hotels or merchandise houses or any other kind of business, has passed. To-day most business is done on a cash basis, and anyone who is willing to run the risk of trusting a pensioner will necessarily charge a much higher price than the cash price of the article, and especially so now that the hazard is still greater. The pensioner may die before the end of the three-month period, as has been suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and under those circumstances there will be no security for the payment of his bills. This monthly payment will save those poor veterans many a pension payment, and it will save them $5, $10, or $15 a month to help them in getting along. I submit that it is absolute justice, and that we ought not to quarrel or quibble about the few dollars extra that it will cost to give this service to which the veterans are entitled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that if soldiers and sailors of the World War obtain pensions monthly, there is no reason why pensions should not be paid monthly to the veterans of the Civil War and the Mexican War.

Mr. BURSUM. That is true.

Mr. KING. It is not a matter of quibbling, as the Senator knows, to inquire as to the cost. I do not think the Senator has come within two or three hundred per cent of the cost in the estimates which he has given, as will be demonstrated when this bill is put into operation.

The Senator states that this bill is to apply, as I understand him, only to soldiers of the Mexican War, the Civil War, the Indian wars, and the Spanish-American War.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; they are the only veterans who are drawing pensions.

Mr. KING. The point I had in mind was this: The Senator states that the purpose of this bill is not to interfere with existing pension laws, other than those applying to veterans of the wars I have just named, and particularly it is not intended to relate to the civil pensioners.

Mr. BURSUM. We did not have those in mind at all. They were not considered.

Mr. KING. I know that. I was wondering whether the Senator would consent to having the bill amended so as to make it clear that it is not intended that it shall apply to civil pensions.

Mr. BURSUM. I have no objection.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the words which I am about to suggest may not reach the situation, but I suggest to the Senator that at the conclusion of the sentence on line 5 there be added these words:

> Provided, That this act shall apply only to those obtaining military and naval pensions arising out of the Mexican War, the Civil War, Indian wars for which pensions have been allowed, and the Spanish-American War.

Mr. BURSUM. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps it would be better to insert, after the words "payment of pensions," the words "to veterans of wars, their widows, and dependents."

Mr. KING. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. BURSUM. That would include all wars.

Mr. KING. There was no disagreement between the Senator and myself. I wanted to limit it as he desired it to be limited.

Mr. BURSUM. That was intended to be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment just offered.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 3, after the word "pensions," insert the words "to veterans of wars, their widows, and dependents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BURSUM subsequently said:

Mr. President, in order to clarify an amendment adopted to House bill 2158 and to save, probably, a conference on the same, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the vote by which that bill was passed may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of reconsidering the vote by which House bill 2158 was passed. Is there objection to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to reconsidering the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and was passed? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURSUM. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment which I offered to the bill was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURSUM. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to civil pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 1948) for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 942) for the relief of James Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2967) to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The consideration of that would take more time than we have at our disposal this morning, and I suggest that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COLLECTION OF INDEBTEDNESS FROM GENERAL PRISONERS.

The bill (S. 3111) to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of the bill. Can the Senator from Montana explain it?

Mr. MYERS. I am not the author of the bill, nor did I report it, and I am not familiar with it.

Mr. KING. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] comes into the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said: Mr. President, during my absence at an important committee meeting Senate bill 3111 was passed over. I ask unanimous consent that we may return to it. I think in a moment of time I can explain the bill to the satisfaction of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I asked that it should go over until we could send for the Senator from New York, and I have no objection to its being considered now.

The Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3111) to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That if at the time of restoration to duty as an enlisted man, from the status of a general prisoner, such enlisted man is indebted to the United States or its instrumentalities, or to any Government agency, the amount of such indebtedness will be collected in monthly installments of not exceeding an amount equal to two-thirds of his monthly pay: Provided, That if such indebtedness of the enlisted man so charged against him at the time of his restoration be not fully liquidated before the date of expiration of his current enlistment or on such date thereafter to which he may be required to serve under the provisions of the one hundred and seventh article of war and his service subsequent to his restoration has been honest and faithful, then at the time of such enlisted man's discharge from his current enlistment the Secretary of War, if he deem such action to be in the interest of justice and for the best interest of the military service, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, may remit and cancel the portion of such indebtedness then remaining unpaid.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this bill is in the interest of generosity and humanity in the treatment of military prisoners. This is the situation: We will say that a soldier deserts from the Army, is apprehended, and brought back and tried. The penalty may be imprisonment for a stated time, plus a fine assessed against him to meet the cost of paying the reward to those who apprehended him as a deserter.

The soldier goes to a military prison. Under the existing statute, if his behavior is good he is returned to duty with his unit, under regulations prescribed by the War Department. The fine, however, still lies against him, and under existing law that money must be collected from his pay as fast as the pay is credited to him, with the result that a soldier who, on good behavior, has been returned to duty and is serving again with his unit, finds that for some months he draws no pay whatsoever. He is left in an impossible position. He can purchase nothing. He has not a penny in his clothes.

This bill will authorize the Secretary of War to withdraw from his pay in installments, from month to month, the amount of money which he owes the Government. It will leave in his pockets a portion of his pay.

Mr. KING. Under the bill can the Secretary fix the amount to be drawn each month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill provides for that. The language is:

The amount of such indebtedness will be collected in monthly installments of not exceeding an amount equal to two-thirds of his monthly pay.

It is in the interest of generous treatment of men who have shown on a second trial that they are good soldiers, and they certainly should not be placed in a position where there is not a penny left in their pockets.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BURSUM. This is a bill to increase the pensions of certain persons from $12 to $20. I think we ought to dispose of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks that it go over.

Mr. KING. I suggest that we take it up when we come to the other general pension bills. The calendar is being considered in the morning hour, and I think we ought to proceed with the consideration of unobjected bills.

Mr. BURSUM. I will be glad to do that if the Senator will not object to having the bill taken up to-morrow. This bill has gone over several times, but it can be postponed until to-morrow. We shall probably have another day on the calendar this week.

Mr. MYERS. This is the kind of a bill that will take a long time to consider, and I hope the Senator from New Mexico will not insist on having it taken up now.

Mr. BURSUM. There ought not be any debate on it. It is a most meritorious bill.

Mr. MYERS. It can be taken up by motion at any time.

Mr. BURSUM. But when can I get a chance to make the motion?

Mr. MYERS. I think the Senator will get a much better chance than if he tries to have it passed now.

Mr. BURSUM. I will yield for the present, reserving the right to make a motion later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutant generals of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been amended, read and passed, and a motion has been entertained to reconsider, made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1739) to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MAUDE H. MOSHER.

The bill (H. R. 1274) for the relief of Maude H. Mosher was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, with regard to this bill, it is for a small amount; it has been on the calendar a long time, and I do not believe there will be any question about it. It was carefully considered by the Claims Committees of both the Senate and the House.

Mr. KING. When we get through with the calendar we can take it up.

Mr. CAPPER. We might not get back to it on the calendar for a month. It involves a small appropriation, only $1,250.

Mr. KING. But there is a question of liability, and I ask the Senator to let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE VAN DERBURGH BROWN.

The bill (H. R. 3057) for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Senate bill covering this matter was passed yesterday. Is there any objection to passing the House bill, which is just like the Senate bill which went through yesterday?

Mr. KING. Is it proposed to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will die in the House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3057) for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George Van Derburgh Brown, of Brookline, Mass., who was severely injured, and whose wife was killed by being struck by a mail truck in use in the Boston postal district and operated by the Post Office Department, as a result of negligence on the part of the driver, on the night of Sunday, January 2, 1921, the sum of $5,000, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M. LEPLEY.

The bill (H. R. 4504) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CAPPER from the Committee on Claims March 7, 1922.

Mr. KING. I do not ask for any further reading. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 820) for the relief of the Hunter-Brown Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1651) for the relief of Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1026) for the relief of Albert E. Magoffin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2346) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over, so we may have an opportunity to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will go over.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

The bill (S. 3258) to provide for the renting of the old Government building in Birmingham, Ala., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to know what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I wish to assure the Senator from Utah that there is no money consideration of any consequence connected with the bill. The building is standing there empty, and it is the desire to use it for soldiers who are there; that is, the State troops. The matter was very carefully gone into by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. It is for the Alabama National Guard, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I said for the State troops. I think there will be no objection to its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Assistant Secretary suggests that he is under the impression we have already passed a House bill covering the matter. The Chair would suggest that the bill go over temporarily until that question can be investigated.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; if there is any question about it, let it go over temporarily. It is a bill introduced by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I was familiar with the case at one time, because it was considered by our committee, but if there is any idea that a similar bill has passed, although I think it has not, let it go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who has just entered the Chamber. We have just reached on the calendar the bill (S. 3258) to provide for the renting of the old Government building in Birmingham, Ala. The Assistant Secretary has suggested that a House bill was passed by the Senate involving the same matter. Can the junior Senator from Alabama enlighten the Chair?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I remember that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] discussed the matter on the floor, and I think it was passed in some form.

Mr. WARREN. I think it passed as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague had the matter in charge and I do not know what disposition was made of it. I understand that a bill of like character passed the House and that that bill was later passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Assistant Secretary's recollection.

Mr. WARREN. My recollection is a little different from that. I now recall that it was offered on the floor by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as an amendment to an appropriation bill and was not objected to, and I think we will find it in the appropriation act.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest that the bill on the calendar be passed over until we can look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said:

Mr. President, referring to the bill (S. 3258) to provide for the renting of the old Government building in Birmingham, Ala., I desire to say that I have looked up the appropriation act to which I referred a few moments ago, and I find that after the appropriation bill had been favorably reported by the Committee on Appropriations Senate bill 3258 was moved as an amendment on the floor of the Senate to the appropriation bill by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and was agreed to. So I move to strike from the calendar Senate bill 3258.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3258 will be indefinitely postponed.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE COLORADO RIVER, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River, near Leupp, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move to amend on line 3, after the word "hereby," by inserting the words "authorized to be," so that the line will read, "that there is hereby authorized to be appropriated," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Objection, of course, may be made at any time. I concede that. I should like to have the amendment considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 3, after the word "hereby," insert "authorized to be," so the line will read, "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the committee report be read.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I wonder if I could not save some time by giving in a sentence or two the substance of what the report contains? The report is a little long.

Mr. ASHURST. I will withhold the request for the moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well; the Senator from Utah wants the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SPENCER March 11, 1922, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River, near Leupp, Ariz., having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the following letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, under date of October 26, 1921, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 26, 1921.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I submit, in compliance with your request of the 9th instant, the following report on the construction of the bridge across the Little Colorado River near Leupp, Ariz., Indian Agency, to be considered in connection with Senate bill 2563, introduced by Senator ASHURST, and providing for the relief of the Allied Contractors (Inc.) by the payment of $17,471.25 as additional compensation for completing the bridge.

This bridge was constructed under contract with the Allied Contractors (Inc.), whose bid was $31,000 for the work installed in accordance with the drawings and specifications prepared by the construction section of the Indian Bureau from data submitted by Mr. Walter Dubree, former superintendent of construction in the Indian Service.

In making his original borings for the abutments of the bridge, Mr. Dubree found what he believed to be solid rock at a few feet below the surface, and this level was fixed by him and appeared both in elevation figures and profile sent out by the Indian Bureau with the advertised drawings and specifications. On excavating for the abutment the contractor found, at the level fixed by Mr. Dubree, only a thin layer of shale, upon which it would have been folly to place the weight of the abutment and that of the transmitted weight of the bridge; consequently a safe foundation bed had to be secured and excavations were therefore made to solid rock, which was found at a considerable depth below the level given on the contract drawings, this necessitating a considerable amount of extra concrete in the abutment below the water line. Further extra cost was incurred in lengthening walls of the original wing of the abutment, which wisdom advised, after considering the alluvial formation of the river banks and the liability of their being eroded at flood stages of the river and leaving the abutment exposed to danger of undermining.

Mr. William Donner, also former superintendent of construction in the Indian Service, was in charge of the construction of the abutment at the starting of the work, but left the construction section before the completion of the bridge, and the work was supervised by Mr. Janus, superintendent of the Leupp Indian school. Both of these representatives have recommended payment to the contractors for extra work under their contract and both have certified to the excellent construction of the bridge.

The first claim for final payment presented by the contractors included extra work in the amount of $21,045.92, which was considered excessive by the Indian Bureau, and accordingly a conference was arranged in June, 1921, between the contractors' representatives and those of that bureau, whereby the contractors' original claim was reduced to $17,471.25. It is believed, since an agreement was made to consider any claim by the contractors for additional payment, at a previous conference in April, 1920, by former Assistant Secretary Hopkins, Mr. Towle, representing the contractors, and representatives of the Indian Bureau, that proper justification is present for approving the payment to the contractors, as provided by the Senate bill.

Sincerely,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in order that we may have a full explanation, I shall object to the consideration of the bill. I hope the Senator from Arizona will move to take up the bill, and we shall not then be hampered by the five-minute rule.

Mr. ASHURST. The bridge is wholly on the Indian reservation. The Navajo Indian Reservation comprises about 30,000 square miles, and it lies in Arizona and in New Mexico. The bridge is across the Little Colorado River and at times that stream, which is a flashy, erratic stream, rises to such an extent as to make it impassable without the bridge. The Navajo Indians, who are flockmasters there, must get their wool to market. Until the bridge was built the Indians, who frequently brought their wool to the river bank, the railroad being some 15 miles south, would be required to wait on the northern bank of the river for days and even for weeks until the waters subsided. It is a substantial bridge and is of much value to the Indians.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator proposed some amendment to the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. I proposed an amendment in line 3, after the word "hereby" to insert "authorized to be," so that it will read, "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated," and so forth.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether this sum is to be charged against the funds of the Indians; and if not, why not?

Mr. ASHURST. The appropriation was made in 1916, and, unless my memory is defective, it is to be charged against the Indians.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, then, the cost is to be met by the Indians themselves from their funds?

Mr. ASHURST. That is my remembrance.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. The Navajos have no funds of their own.

Mr. KING. Why should the Government, for their particular advantage, pay for this bridge? I am inquiring for information.

Mr. MYERS. Because they have no money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the objection had better stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objects, and the bill will be passed over.

ALBERT E. MAGOFFIN.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 533, being the bill (S. 1026) for the relief of Albert E. Magoffin. I was called from the Chamber temporarily to answer the telephone, and during my absence that bill was reached on the calendar and passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I do not object to returning to the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to pay to Albert E. Magoffin $225, in full settlement of all pay, bounty, and allowance due by reason of his service in the Eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement concerning the bill. My attention was drawn to the bill, in the first place, through an examination of the papers in the case, and the finding amongst those papers of an affidavit from one of the most distinguished men who ever occupied a place in this Chamber. I refer to Hon. J. B. Foraker, of Ohio, who knew this claimant well. I particularly call the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to what former Senator Foraker said in his statement on page 2 of the report on the bill. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate that statement in my remarks at this point, without taking time to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The affidavit referred to is as follows:

Hon. J. B. Foraker, of Ohio, who says he was personally acquainted with claimant for 50 years and was with claimant on the raid or scouting expedition in the spring of 1863, and also says:

"While on the same the claimant was somehow badly injured in his left ankle, which injury finally culminated in an amputation of same. I saw claimant from time to time, almost daily, while he remained with the regiment. He was plucky and courageous in the performance of his duty and continued to discharge it for some time after he should have been relieved.

"He finally became unable to march and was compelled to go to the hospital, where he was discharged for disabilities; the ankle being, as I have always understood, the most serious of his ailments; it was so serious that in time it became necessary to amputate the same, as above stated."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the facts in this case were simply these: Albert E. Magoffin, while serving as a soldier in the Civil War, received a serious injury. As is stated in the beginning of the report, which is very carefully drawn:

On April 4, 1863, on a raid at Snow Hill, Tenn., in the line of duty and under orders, he injured his left leg below the knee, from which he never recovered, and which later, in 1893, resulted in the amputation of his limb.

Singularly enough, when this man was mustered out of the service no reference was made to that disability; he was mustered out because of other disabilities. It is to that singular omission that former Senator Foraker calls attention in his statement. There are various statements to the same effect by his comrades. It is one of those errors that will inevitably occur when large numbers of cases are being handled. He was, however, mustered out and has been drawing a pension for other causes, but this injury has never appeared as a matter of record. There can not be the slightest question as to the fact which Senator Foraker clearly sets forth.

I read further from the report of the committee:

The claimant is receiving a pension now of $72 per month, based on his disabilities mentioned in his discharge, which has never included the injury to his leg.

As a matter of fact, the man's leg is off. It is not proposed to grant him an additional pension at all, but to help the old soldier a little bit. He was at the time he enlisted promised a bounty of $100 a month; $25 were paid him but $75 remain unpaid. This bill proposes to pay him the $75 with accrued interest. The old man now lives in California, and I personally know he is very much in want. The committee thought this would be in the interest of justice and they accordingly recommend that he be paid $225, which is $75 with accrued interest. It is not a pension proposition at all. In view of the fact that his disability, through an error in the record, was never included, and he was never pensioned for it, it seems to me this is a case that has very exceptional merit, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not object. I do not believe he is going to do so.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he approves of civil claims which are presented 60 years after the maturing of the alleged claim? If this claimant was entitled to a bounty in the sixties, why did he not present his claim then when the facts were accessible to the Government?

Mr. WILLIS. I should say that if this man had not received this injury, and if the peculiar circumstances which I have described did not exist, I should not be in favor of recognizing any such claim.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know why former Senator Foraker did not get this bill through for the relief of this man. Senator Foraker was himself on the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know why Senator Foraker did not do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. What did Senator Foraker say about the claim?

Mr. WILLIS. Let me read what Senator Foraker said, though I have already incorporated it in my remarks.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know that Senator Foraker was on the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; and the Senator from North Carolina knew Senator Foraker well.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Here is exactly what Senator Foraker says about the matter, and frankly this is what attracted my attention to the claim, because I had great confidence in the judgment of Senator Foraker. Senator Foraker says, speaking of the expedition in which this man was injured:

While on the same the claimant was somehow badly injured in his left ankle, which injury finally culminated in an amputation of same. I saw claimant from time to time almost daily while he remained with the regiment. He was plucky and courageous in the performance of his duty and continued to discharge it for some time after he should have been relieved.

He finally became unable to march and was compelled to go to the hospital, where he was discharged for disabilities; the ankle being, as I have always understood, the most serious of his ailments; it was so serious that in time it became necessary to amputate the same, as above stated.

But through one of those singular errors which sometimes occur this injury was not one of the grounds of the soldier's discharge; the man was discharged for other causes and because of other disabilities, and he is drawing a pension for them. The proposition here is simply to grant him this little amount of $75, with accrued interest, with the idea that it will help him out.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether the Government at that time paid bounties?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. KING. I wish also to inquire whether this claimant was promised a bounty by the Government or by the State?

Mr. WILLIS. My understanding from the report is that he was promised a bounty by the Government.

Mr. KING. Many of the States paid bounties; and my understanding is that they redeemed their promises, and that all to whom bounties were promised obtained them.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand what the Senator from Utah is driving at; but it is my understanding from the report on the bill that only $25 of the bounty was paid.

Mr. KING. If this applicant was promised a bounty by the Government, it seems to me that he is a monument to which we should point with a great deal of pride, if for 60 years, with that amount due him, he never made application for it. I can not quite believe it.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no personal information upon that phase of the matter, but here is the statement which is contained in the committee report:

At the time claimant enlisted he was promised a bounty of $100. Twenty-five dollars was paid on the bounty in July, 1863, and the balance still remains unpaid.

Mr. WARREN. It has never been the practice of the Government to pay interest on claims against the United States previous to their adjudication.

Mr. WILLIS. For the sake of the argument, I am perfectly willing to admit that that is the case. The plain fact is, however, that, while this old soldier has been pensioned, he has not been pensioned on account of this particular disability. He lost his leg as the result of his military service, but through an error in the record he has never received any compensation for that injury. He might have had a pension bill introduced here on his behalf for that reason, but no such action was ever taken.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it proposed to pay interest on this claim?

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from North Carolina knows very much better about that than do I. I suppose the Committee on Pensions, however, thought the amount for which he asked was so small, anyway, being only $75, that they allowed him the interest.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the interest amounts to twice as much as the claim.

Mr. WILLIS. I know it does; the bill provides for the payment of $225 to an old soldier who has but one leg.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am willing to take care of the old soldiers.

Mr. WARREN. But the Government never pays interest on claims against it until they are adjudicated.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill if the provision for the payment of interest is stricken out. I do not think that interest should be allowed; it never has been allowed by Congress since I have been a Member of the Senate. I understand it has been the practice both of the House and the Senate not to provide for the payment of interest except in the case of such claims as have been adjudicated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator what is the amount of the principal?

Mr. WILLIS. The principal is $75. I do not desire to attempt to deceive the Senator and could not if I wished to do so. I read from the third page of the report, as follows:

The claimant asks for payment of $225, which is the balance on bounty of $75 and interest. This is equivalent to about 3½ per cent simple interest from date of discharge.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will not the Senator strike out the amount representing the interest and provide merely for the payment of $75? I shall object to the bill if it carries the payment of interest.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator from North Carolina desires to move such an amendment he may do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said, if we pass the bill in its present form it will constitute a precedent.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the practice of the Government has been as stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not care to make any motion in reference to the bill, but I shall object if it carries interest.

Mr. SMOOT. If the beneficiary of the bill had a claim for $225, I should not object to appropriating that amount, but I must object if the bill provides for the payment of any more than the original claim.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask the Senator to note what the bill provides. Of course, there has been discussion of it here which is now a matter of record, but the bill says nothing about the payment of any interest. It reads:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert E. Magoffin, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $225 in full settlement of all pay, bounty, and allowances due by reason of his service—

And so forth.

So far as the bill itself is concerned, it does not say anything about interest. Does the form of the bill satisfy the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. From the report of the committee, however, if it is ever looked up it will be found that the payment of interest was provided for, and that will constitute a precedent.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator to amend the bill by striking out $225 and inserting $75, so as to provide merely for the payment of the amount which is due.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well; I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 6, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$225" and insert "$75."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS OF MONTANA.

The bill (S. 249) for the relief of certain tribes and nations of Indians in the State of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 3, after the word "cause," to insert "nor more than $25,000 to be paid by any tribe or tribes occupying one reservation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Blackfeet, Blood, Piegan, Gros Ventre, River Crow, and Assiniboin Tribes or Nations of Indians residing upon the Blackfeet, Fort Belknap, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations east of the Rocky Mountains, and the Flathead Tribe of Indians west of the Rocky Mountains, in the State of Montana, may have against the United States may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of any party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, for the determination of the amounts, if any, due any of said tribes from the United States under the treaty of October 17, 1855, or any other treaty or law for the misappropriation of any funds and property due said tribes or any of them, or any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, try, and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Blackfeet, Blood, Piegan, Gros Ventre, River Crow, Assiniboin, and Flathead Tribes, or any of them, against the United States, and any legal or equitable defense, counterclaim, or set-off which the United States may have against said tribes, or any of them, and to enter judgment. The Court of Claims shall have the authority to adjudicate all rights, legal or equitable, of said tribes and the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time and the statutes of limitations, and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be in full settlement of all claims of said tribes against the United States. The suit or suits shall be commenced within one year by the filing of a petition or petitions, and verified by an attorney or attorneys employed by said tribes, or each tribe, upon information and belief as to the facts alleged. The attorney or attorneys shall be selected and employed by the said tribes with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the fees fixed by the Court of Claims, and said fees approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and said fees shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due any of said tribes: Provided, That in no case shall the fee or fees exceed more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in said cause, nor more than $25,000 to be paid by any tribe or tribes occupying one reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Montana explain the bill briefly, or else I should like to have a little time to read the report to ascertain whether there is any change in the practice respecting the Indians named in the bill, comparing the pending bill with other bills for similar purposes which have heretofore passed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There has been no change, except the committee has recommended the amendment touching attorneys' fees and providing that in no case shall they exceed $25,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The attorneys' fees are limited to 10 per cent, but in no case shall they exceed $25,000. Otherwise the bill is in the usual form.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill has not passed the Senate heretofore, has it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA.

The bill (S. 250) authorizing the Crow Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Montana, to submit claims to the Court of Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, which the Crow Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Montana, may have or claim to have against the United States, under any treaty or law of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any funds of the tribe, or the failure to pay any moneys when due, shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon.

The Court of Claims shall advance the case or cases upon its docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Crow Tribe and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by the Crow Tribe of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed in said claim by the Crow Tribe of Indians upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, and in no case in excess of $25,000, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Crow Tribe of Indians, who shall be a member or members of the bar in good standing of the highest court of the State, District, or Territory in which he or they reside, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said tribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPENCER subsequently said: Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber for a moment the Senate passed Senate bill 250, a bill authorizing the Crow Indians to have their rights adjudicated by the Court of Claims. The Indian Department were against the bill, but the committee was in favor of it. However, there is an amendment to which I am sure there will be no objection, which is generally put on those bills, providing that attorneys should act under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in accordance with existing law.

I move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, so that this amendment may be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is in favor of this amendment?

Mr. SPENCER. I went to see that Senator, but he had left the Chamber. I conferred with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], a member of the committee, and he tells me that he thinks there can be no objection to it, and I am sure there could not be.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to amend, on page 2, after line 10, by inserting after the word "Indians" the following:

Under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in accordance with existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 514) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I have been asked to request that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ALLOTMENTS ON CROW RESERVATION, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 10193) extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in section 1, page 2, line 9, after the word "Oklahoma," to insert "and to prosecute all appropriate proceedings to recover for such members any excess-income tax which may have been paid by or exacted of them, respectively," and in line 20, after the word "act," to insert "and that such contract shall obligate the firms or individuals with whom the same are made to prosecute to a final determination all claims included in such contract, unless the Secretary shall otherwise direct," so as to make the section read:

SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make or approve contracts with competent and experienced firms or individuals to prepare and submit, through the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, amended income-tax returns covering the years 1919, 1920, and 1921, for the restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and to prosecute all appropriate proceedings to recover for such members any excess-income tax which may have been paid by or exacted of them, respectively: Provided, That the compensation paid for the preparation and submission of such amended income-tax returns shall not exceed for any year 10 per cent of the actual net savings in taxes allowed such taxpaying Indians either by reason of deductions for depletion or other proper allowances actually secured in their behalf as a result of the work and efforts of the firms or individuals with whom such contract or contracts are made in pursuance of this act, and that such contract shall obligate the firms or individuals with whom the same are made to prosecute to a final determination all claims included in such contract, unless the Secretary shall otherwise direct: Provided further, That the Secretary shall make payment of such compensation out of the funds belonging to the several restricted Indians who shall be the beneficiaries of such contract.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I doubt the wisdom of the amendment on page 2, beginning in line 9, reading:

And to prosecute all appropriate proceedings to recover for such members any excess-income tax which may have been paid by or exacted of them.

I shall ask that the bill go over unless that amendment is rejected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have no interest in that feature of the bill at all, but the subject had very careful consideration by the committee, and it was deemed advisable to put that amendment in as well as the amendment which follows it. The members of the Five Civilized Tribes have become the owners of very valuable oil properties; they were called upon to make returns for taxation, and in many cases it is claimed that their returns called for a very much higher tax than they were obliged to pay.

This bill authorizes the employment of an attorney to prosecute before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a claim to recover the excess taxes paid. Of course, it is conceivable, and not at all improbable, that the commissioner will indorse the action that was taken. The ordinary individual then would have an opportunity to go before a court and sue to recover the excess tax, and we want to give the Indian exactly the same privilege that the white man has.

Mr. SMOOT. He has that right now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, he has it, Mr. President, but the trouble is that he has no opportunity to employ an attorney, having no funds at his command, and being practically prohibited from entering into any agreement with an attorney, and being unable to do so, as a matter of fact, being under guardianship; so we simply wanted to authorize him, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to employ an attorney to prosecute the claim for the recovery of the money which he claims to be due him. It is simply giving him an opportunity to go into court and establish his claim against the Government, which it seems to me we ought to be very glad to accord to all Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no limit whatever here. This amendment would authorize any attorney, at any time in the future, to proceed against the Government for the collection of "any excess income tax which may have been paid by or exacted of them," meaning the Indians. The Senator from Montana knows that these Indian cases in the past have been the means of many attorneys exacting from the Indians excessive attorney fees, and, in fact, many of them were originally worked up by the attorneys for the very purpose of getting large fees out of the Indians whom they defended. It seems to me that if we are going to give this right by law, it ought to be limited to some time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to say to the Senator that this is a matter in which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is particularly interested, and the amendment was made at his suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. It would not make a particle of difference in my view of the matter who suggested it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand. I merely make this statement so that the Senator will have my position with respect to the matter clear; but I think the Senator has not stated the case exactly. It will be observed that this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make or approve contracts with firms or individuals for the preparation for restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes of amended income-tax returns; that is, they made income-tax returns which they now insist were not correct, and this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to employ an attorney to make for them amended income-tax returns with a view to recovering from the commissioner, when the amended return is approved by him, the amount of the excess. It is altogether likely, however, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will not approve the amendment, and then the Indian is left helpless, and he can not recover the amount that is due him. He could, of course, go on himself and hire an attorney, as the Senator suggests; but we want to repose the power in the Secretary of the Interior to look after his interests. If the Secretary of the Interior feels that a suit ought to be begun, he is authorized under this bill to hire an attorney to prosecute the suit.

Mr. SMOOT. I should think if the Indian who had paid the tax was told by some attorney that he had overpaid the Government, and that there was really some money coming to him because of that overpayment, and he in turn went to the Secretary of the Interior and appealed to him to select some attorney or approve some attorney that might be selected by the Indian to enter into a suit for the recovery of this money from the Government of the United States, it would place the Secretary of the Interior in rather an embarrassing position to refuse it, and I doubt very much whether the Secretary of the Interior would do so. At least he would not do so until he had looked up the case himself, and decided in his own mind that there was no just claim on the part of the Indian.

The Senator knows that these Indians are exploited by attorneys from one end of this country to the other. He knows that men have been made wealthy by fees charged to and collected from the Indians for prosecuting their claims in the courts against the Government of the United States. I have no objection at all to this bill if the time is limited. The Government ought to have some time fixed in which suit can not be brought against it for the recovery of taxes paid.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the general limit is applicable to everybody.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No right is conferred here at all, and I want to say this much to the Senator: The bill as it stands, without this amendment, authorizes the Secretary to employ these attorneys.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no need of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; the simple question is, How far shall the attorneys go? Shall they quit when they have presented the matter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or shall they go on and prosecute the case in the courts if the Secretary of the Interior desires them to do so?

I appreciate what the Senator says, that these are often made speculative matters; but we are already authorizing the employment of these attorneys, and it is simply a question of how far their powers shall go.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly agree with the Senator that this gives them no rights in addition to those that they have under existing law. This amendment, if it should become a law, would be passed since the passage of the law which limited the time in which the suits could be brought. It seems to me that the construction which would be put upon it, that being the case, would be that this is giving the Indians a privilege and an advantage that is not given to any other taxpayer in the United States. All other taxpayers must conform to existing law. They must make their applications within the period limited by that law, but it seems to me that if this bill passes there will be no limitation at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This could not possibly be construed to extend the period of the statute of limitations.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that is the case, I do not see any necessity whatever for the amendment. If it gives them no additional right, if it grants no extension of time over that which is provided for in existing law, I can not see any reason why the amendment is offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that it go over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

FRED SUMPTER.

The bill (S. 3176) for the relief of Fred Sumpter was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a recent ruling of the department makes unnecessary this relief to the claimant, and I accordingly move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (S. 2014) to provide for the settlement of small holding claims on unsurveyed land in the State of New Mexico was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in township surveys hereafter to be made in the State of New Mexico, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the deputy surveyor making such survey that any person has, through himself, his ancestors, grantors, or their lawful successors in title or possession, been in the continuous adverse actual bona fide possession, residing thereon as his home, of any tract of land or in connection therewith of other lands, all together not exceeding 160 acres, in such township for 20 years next preceding the time of making such survey, the deputy surveyor shall recognize and establish the lines of such possession and make the subdivision of the adjoining lands in accordance therewith. Such possession shall be accurately defined in the field notes of the survey and delineated on the township plat, with the boundaries and area of the tract as a separate legal subdivision. The deputy surveyor shall return with his survey the name or names of all persons so found to be in possession, with a proper description of the tract in the possession of each as shown by the survey, and the proofs furnished to him of such possession.

Upon receipt of such survey and proofs the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall cause careful investigation to be made in such manner as he shall deem necessary for the ascertainment of the truth in respect of such claim and occupation, and if satisfied upon such investigation that the claimant comes within the provisions of this section, he shall cause patents to be issued to the parties so found to be in possession for the tracts respectively claimed by them: Provided, however, That no person shall be entitled to confirmation of, or to patent for, more than 160 acres in his own right by virtue of this section.

All claims arising under this act shall be filed with the surveyor general of New Mexico within two years next after the passage of this act, and no claim not so filed shall be valid. No tract of such land shall be subject to entry under the land laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (H. R. 9710) authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government-land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, North Dakota and South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead entryman or purchaser of Government lands within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations in North Dakota and South Dakota who is unable to make payment of purchase money due under his entry or contract of purchase as required by existing law or regulations, on application duly verified showing that he is unable to make payment as required, shall be granted an extension to the 1923 anniversary of the date of his entry or contract of purchase upon payment of interest in advance at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the amounts due from the maturity thereof to the said anniversary; and if at the expiration of the extended period the entryman or purchaser is still unable to make the payment he may, upon the same terms and conditions, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be granted such further extensions of time, not exceeding a period of three years, as the facts warrant.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLERKS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

The bill (H. R. 8342) to empower the Attorney General of the United States to fix the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is hereby authorized and empowered to increase or decrease the salary of any clerk of a United States district court within the limits prescribed by the act approved February 26, 1919, where upon investigation the Attorney General finds that there has been such material increase or decrease in the volume of business transacted in any such district when contrasted with the volume of business upon which the said salaries have been heretofore fixed as to justify such increase or decrease, but in all cases the said increase or decrease shall be based upon the amount of business transacted by the court and the fees and emoluments collected by the clerks and by them paid into the Treasury of the United States during the four years last preceding the time of such increase or decrease of salary to be made by the Attorney General under the power hereby conferred: Provided, That no change in the salary of any clerk having been hereafter fixed under power hereby conferred shall be made until after the lapse of four years from the date of such change.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUNICIPAL PARK, BUTTE, MONT.

The bill (H. R. 5762) providing for a municipal park for the city of Butte, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, in his discretion, upon application by the municipality of Butte, Mont., to designate and segregate for municipal recreational development any lands, not to exceed 3,600 acres, within the Deerlodge National Forest which, in his opinion, are available for such purpose, and he is hereby authorized to enter into such form of cooperation with the said municipal authorities as, in his opinion, will permit the fullest use of the lands for recreational purposes without interfering with the objects for which the national forest was established. Lands so designated and segregated under the provisions of this act shall not be subject to the mining laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2281) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Daniel S. Glover was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MILES SWIFT.

The bill (H. R. 7234) for the relief of Miles Swift was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the naval record of Miles Swift, who served in the United States Navy from November 12, 1861, until August 15, 1864, be corrected, and that in the administration of the pension laws he shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States: Provided, That no back pension, pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue or become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2130) changing the name of Vernon Street, in the county of Washington, D. C., to U Street was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask that that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1343) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 5588) to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916, was announced as next in order, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 442), be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who reported the bill is not present.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill was reported out of the committee at a time when I was not present. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter of Hon. E. C. Finney, Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated February 15, 1922. The letter gives a full explanation of what the bill is and why it is recommended for passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The reading clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 15, 1922.

Hon. NICHOLAS J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
United States House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I have your request of July 1, 1921, for a report on H. R. 5588, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, which is a bill to repeal section 5 of the organic act approved August 9, 1916, to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park, in the State of California, which places a limitation on future annual appropriations of said park to $5,000 unless previously authorized by law.

This park is located in northern California and contains, in addition to its chief scenic feature—the only active volcano in the United States proper—innumerable other attractions for the enjoyment and pleasure of the people. The small annual appropriations heretofore made have not permitted active development, administrative or protective work, nor has this been contemplated. The available funds have been expended in their entirety in road construction near the park boundaries. In the past two years great interest in the attractions of this park has been shown by the touring public, it being estimated that the visitors increased from 2,000 in 1920 to 10,000 in 1921. The time is obviously close at hand when active administration of the park must be undertaken in order to provide for the necessary protective and maintenance work, which will require more than the small amount of $5,000 permitted under existing laws.

I recommend that the bill providing for the repeal of this inhibitive clause be favorably reported by your committee.

Respectfully,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. One moment. I desire to inquire about that. At present there is a limit of $5,000 a year; and is the object of this bill to remove that, so that there will be no limit on what may be expended?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DANIEL S. GLOVER.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the bill (S. 2281) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Daniel S. Glover was passed over, and I want to make a little statement in reference to it. I am sure that any Senator who looks into it will not object to its consideration.

It is a case where a man was working in the navy yard here, drilling on some very dangerous work, and a piece of metal flew into his left eye, on January 28, 1913. At that time they did not think it was very serious, and he got compensation under the law at that time of only about $46. His eye got worse and worse from the little piece of metal which flew into it, and on November 8, 1916, which was only two months after the employers' liability act was passed, a very serious condition developed in regard to his eye, and he lost his left eye. He spent a little over $1,700 in getting treatment. He has lost his left eye entirely and has nearly lost the sight of his right eye. He is still kept at work there, because he is an expert. It is only a question of time when the sight of his right eye will be gone.

The chairman of the board of compensation has recommended that this be allowed, and the only difficulty was that the disability came in November, 1916, and the act was passed on September 7, 1916. The original injury was from a piece of metal getting into his eye in 1913. The record shows that he has spent $1,700 for medical treatment, and he and his family are entirely dependent. It is therefore a case in which the Government ought to make this allowance. If it were a private corporation, I do not believe there would be a moment's hesitation. I ask unanimous consent that we go back to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. Before I decide whether to give consent or not, I want to ask a question in regard to it.

Mr. SWANSON. There is a report on it from the board which has charge of it—compensation for injuries. They recommend it, and set out the facts which I have stated.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Secretary to read that report, because I do not find it in my file.

Mr. SWANSON. It was not in my file, but a report was made by the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The reading clerk read the report submitted by Mr. SHORTRIDGE May 14, 1922, as follows:

Report to accompany S. 2281.

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2281) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Daniel S. Glover, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

Mr. Glover while an employee of the Washington Navy Yard was injured during the performance of his duties on January 28, 1913. He would have been entitled to all the benefits of the act of September 7, 1916, if it had been effective at the time he was injured. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission has reported favorably on the bill in the following letter:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION,
Washington, March 1, 1922.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You have made inquiry in regard to the case of Daniel S. Glover, in whose behalf a bill has been introduced in the Senate (S. 2281) by Senator SWANSON to grant relief in the terms of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, on account of the results of an injury sustained January 28, 1913, while employed as a machinist at the Washington Navy Yard.

Mr. Glover, whose home is now at 1405 King Street, Alexandria, Va., called at the offices of the commission July 11, 1921, to make inquiry with reference to the possibility of receiving compensation under the terms of the present compensation act on account of the injury above mentioned. At the time of his call upon me he was employed at the naval torpedo station, Alexandria, Va.

Mr. Glover's injury in January, 1913, was a laceration of the left eyeball, due to flying particles of metal striking the eye. At that time he was disabled for work for 15 days and was paid compensation, under the compensation law of May 30, 1908, for 13 working days to the amount of $45.76. Unfortunately, however, one of the particles of metal penetrated the eyeball, so that on November 23, 1916, he was again disabled and was under treatment by an eye specialist until June 1, 1917. It was impossible, however, to save the sight of the left eye, and since this time Mr. Glover has been blind in this eye. At the time of his call upon me in July the sight of the right eye had been failing for some time, so that his vision in this eye at that time was limited to 20/200, even with properly fitted glasses. He had continued to do his work at the naval torpedo station because long experience and skill acquired and a very sensitive touch supplemented the little remaining vision. Mr. Glover was convinced that it would be impossible for him to continue this work for more than a very limited time.

When Mr. Glover, at the time of his disability and medical treatment between November 23, 1916, and June 1, 1917, made claim for further compensation, it was necessary to disallow the claim because the law of May 30, 1908, limited the payment of compensation to one year from the beginning of disability. The total benefits received by him on account of his injury therefore amount to $45.76. The costs to him of the results of the injury are in excess of $1,700, this including very heavy medical and hospital bills.

Mr. Glover is not entitled to any benefits under the present compensation law, because it applies only to results of injuries occurring after September 7, 1916. The case is one in which, if the accident had occurred after September 7, 1916, total disability compensation would now be payable at the rate of $66.67 per month. In addition to this, all of the medical treatment which has been at Mr. Glover's personal expense would have been furnished without charge to him. The compensation payments would continue for life, and any medical or hospital treatment needed would be furnished without expense to Mr. Glover. The case is one which illustrates in a very striking manner the utter inadequacy of the provisions of the act of September 30, 1908, under which Mr. Glover was compensated.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. H. VERRILL, Commissioner.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I do not want to have it pointed to in the future as a precedent under which every person who received the slightest injury before September 7, 1916, while in the Government service, can come later and claim by special act the privilege of being put under the employers' liability law.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator is entirely correct in his position. This development did not come until November, 60 days after September 7. He lost the sight of his eye then, and it might have been considered almost a new injury. It is disallowed mostly on a technical ground.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a rather serious case, and perhaps we can pass this special bill in this man's behalf, but I hope it will not be pointed to as indicating that the practice of Congress hereafter will be to take care of all such cases, no matter whether the claimant has a scratch upon his hand or on his foot, or whether he is just laid up for a few days from some temporary illness.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Daniel S. Glover, on account of the results of an injury sustained January 28, 1913, while in the performance of duty as an employee of the navy yard at Washington, D. C., the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3310) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3309) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3296) to authorize the merger of certain street railway corporations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. That bill will take considerable time, and I think we had better let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3326) to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1282) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FISH-RESCUE STATION.

The bill (H. R. 2393) to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I understand that this is as important as the bill which was introduced in the House of Representatives many years ago by Private John Allen, about the unborn generations in Tupelo. So I think perhaps it is quite important, and it ought to go through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, line 1, to strike out "$75,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$60,000"; and, beginning with line 5, to strike out section 2 and to insert in lieu thereof a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established on the Mississippi River, at a point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce, a station for the rescue of fishes and the propagation of mussels in connection with fish-rescue operations throughout the Mississippi Valley, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce, and for this purpose there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $60,000 for the construction of buildings and the purchase of equipment, boats, and such other accessories as may be deemed necessary for the successful operation of such station.

SEC. 2. That in connection with the establishment of such fish-rescue station there is authorized the following personnel, namely: One district supervisor, at $2,500 per annum, to have general charge of fish-rescue and fish-cultural operations in the Mississippi Valley; a superintendent, at $1,500 per annum; 2 field foremen, at $1,200 each per annum; 4 fish-culturists at large, at $960 each per annum; 1 engineer at large, at $1,200 per annum; 1 clerk, at $1,200 per annum; 2 coxswains at large, at $720 each per annum; and 2 apprentice fish-culturists, at $600 each per annum.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SPRINGFIELD ARMORY MILITARY RESERVATION, MASS.

The bill (S. 3307) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Springfield, Mass., for public street purposes, and for no other purpose, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all or any part of certain strips or parcels of land within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., now used as streets, and known as Byers Street, Pearl Street, Federal Street, Lincoln Street, and Mill Street, the areas to be so conveyed being particularly described as follows:

BYERS STREET.

Parcel No. 1: Beginning at a point in the north line of Frost Street, located 3 feet westerly from a stone bound that marks the present limit of that part of Byers Street that is public; thence north 49 degrees 30 minutes 30 seconds west, 851.89 feet to the southerly line of Pearl Street; thence north 42 degrees 13 minutes 20 seconds east, about 54 feet to the easterly curb of Byers Street; thence on a curve of 65 feet radius about 32 feet; thence on a curve of 20.14 feet radius, 5.95 feet; thence south 49 degrees 30 minutes 30 seconds east, 818.42 feet to that part of Byers Street now public; thence westerly across Byers Street 36 feet to the point of beginning.

Parcel No. 2: Also a second parcel, located adjacent to the parcel above described and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the southerly line of Pearl Street, located north 42 degrees 13 minutes 20 seconds east, 241.39 feet from Spring Street; thence north 42 degrees 13 minutes 20 seconds east, 9.25 feet; thence south 49 degrees 30 minutes 30 seconds east, 558.23 feet; thence south 40 degrees 29 minutes 30 seconds west, 9.25 feet; thence north 49 degrees 30 minutes 30 seconds west, 558.51 feet to the point of beginning.

It is intended by the description of the two above parcels to describe all the land located between the easterly curb line and the private property on the westerly side of that portion of Byers Street now owned by the United States of America. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Byers Street, Bk. 276, pp. 45, 46, Dec., 1921."

PEARL STREET.

Beginning at a point in the northerly line of Pearl Street, located 243.82 feet easterly from Spring Street, said point being at the easterly end of that part of Pearl Street now public; thence north 41 degrees 11 minutes east, 814.93 feet; thence north 59 degrees 25 seconds east, 1,293.46 feet to Federal Street; thence by Federal Street 48.78 feet to the southerly curb line of Pearl Street; thence on the southerly curb line of Pearl Street by a curve of 50 feet radius, 32.6 feet; thence south 59 degrees 25 seconds west, 1,235.46 feet; thence on a curve of 127.54 feet radius, 39.69 feet; thence south 41 degrees 11 minutes west, 706.84 feet; thence on a curve of 20 feet radius, 13.24 feet; thence on a curve of 65 feet radius, about 11 feet; thence south 42 degrees 13 minutes 20 seconds west, about 63 feet to the part of Pearl Street now public; thence across Pearl Street, 48.5 feet to the point of beginning; intending to describe all of the land between the southerly curb line and the private property on the northerly side of Pearl Street between that part of Pearl Street now public and Federal Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and Engineering, Pearl Street, Bk. 276, pp. 45 and 46, Dec., 1921."

FEDERAL STREET.

Beginning at a point in the easterly line of Federal Street, located 570.96 feet southerly from Worthington Street, said point being at the southerly end of that part of Federal Street which is public; thence south 29 degrees 5 minutes 15 seconds east, 215.33 feet to the westerly line of Armory Street extended; thence north 9 degrees 53 minutes east, 16.54 feet; thence south 29 degrees 5 minutes 15 seconds east, 154.67 feet to the line of the southerly curb of Lincoln Street extended; thence westerly by the line of the southerly curb of Lincoln Street extended 15 feet; thence north 71 degrees 34 minutes 45 seconds west, 58.38 feet to the westerly curb line of Federal Street; thence north 29 degrees 5 minutes 15 seconds west, by the westerly curb line of Federal Street, 345.76 feet to that part of Federal Street now public; thence across Federal Street by the line of the southerly end of that part of Federal Street now public, 54.82 feet to the point of beginning; intending to describe all of the land located between the westerly curb line and the private property on the easterly side of Federal Street from the present end of that part of Federal Street that is public near Pearl Street to lines near the trolley track at Lincoln Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Federal Street, Pearl to Lincoln St., Bk. 276, pp. 47, 48, Dec., 1921."

LINCOLN STREET.

Beginning at the intersection of the easterly line of Federal Street and the northerly line of Lincoln Street; thence north 64 degrees 50 minutes 45 seconds east, 864.58 feet to the intersection of the northerly line of Lincoln Street with the easterly line of Magazine Street; thence 34.38 feet across Lincoln Street on the easterly line of Magazine Street to the southerly curb line of Lincoln Street extended; thence south 64 degrees 50 minutes 45 seconds west, 867.29 feet by the line of the southerly curb of Lincoln Street to the easterly line of Federal Street; thence northerly by the easterly line of Federal Street 34.08 feet to the point of beginning; intending to describe all of the land between the southerly curb line and the private property on the northerly side of Lincoln Street between Federal Street and the easterly line of Magazine Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Lincoln Street, Bk. 276, pp. 48–50, Dec., 1921."

MILL STREET.

Beginning at the intersection of the easterly line of Dickinson Street and the southerly line of Mill Street; thence 34.31 feet to the fence on the northerly side of Mill Street; thence by said fence about 575 feet to Hancock Street; thence across Hancock Street about 51 feet to the intersection of the easterly line of Hancock Street and the northerly line of Mill Street; thence on a curve of 295.24 feet; 109.17 feet; thence on a curve of 442.24 feet radius, 77.2 feet to the intersection of the westerly line of Chester Street and the northerly line of Mill Street; thence north 85° 47′ 20″ east, 53.34 feet to the intersection of the easterly line of Chester Street and the northerly line of Mill Street; thence north 85° 47′ 20″ east, 48 feet; thence on a curve of 144.24 feet radius, 75.88 feet; thence on a curve of 848 feet radius, 334.02 feet; thence on a curve of 1,086.89 feet radius; 377.75 feet; thence north 12° 49′ 55″ east, 161.12 feet to the southerly line of Central Street; thence north 76° 35′ 5″ west by the southerly line of Central Street 46.14 feet; thence north 20° 40′ 5″ east, 234.7 feet; thence north 48° 51′ 35″ east, 56.49 feet; thence south 27° 35′ 20″ east, 59.17 feet to the line of the southerly curb of Mill Street; thence on a curve of 49.86 feet radius, 43.14 feet; thence south 12° 49′ 55″ west, 145.42 feet to the easterly line of the proposed Central Street extension; thence still south 12° 49′ 55″ west, 50.73 feet to the westerly line of the proposed Central Street extension; thence still south 12° 49′ 55″ west, 160.71 feet; thence on a curve of 1,108.89 feet radius, 391.89 feet; thence on a curve of 888 feet radius, 349.77 feet; thence on a curve of 184.24 feet radius, 96.92 feet; thence south 85° 47′ 20″ west, 382.32 feet; thence south 42° 13′ 50″ west, 491.92 feet to the point of beginning at Dickinson Street; intending to describe all of the land in Mill Street from Dickinson Street to a point north of the northerly side of Mill River and from that point all of the land located between the private property on the northerly side and the edge of the sidewalk on the southerly side of Mill Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Department of streets and engineering, Springfield, Mass. Plan showing proposed layout of Mill Street from Orange Street to watershops; also proposed extension of Central Street from Mill Street to Allen Street, October, 1921."

Provided, That the conveyance herein authorized shall be upon condition that the city of Springfield, Mass., shall improve and maintain each and all of said streets as public streets: Provided further, That there shall be reserved in the conveyance herein authorized the right to construct and maintain over, under, and across said streets water, gas, and sewer mains, electric light and telephone wires and cables, and any other utility which the operation and use by the Government of said armory may require: And provided further, That the said city of Springfield shall not sell or convey the said described premises, nor devote the same to any other purpose than street purposes; and in the event said premises shall be used for any other purpose or shall not be cared for and maintained as are other public streets of said city, the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, further authorized, in his discretion and under such conditions, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe, to permit the extension of Central Street by said city of Springfield to connect with Allen and Oakland Streets at the junction of the latter streets in said city, and to permit the said city to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mill River Canal at the point where such extension of Central Street crosses said canal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERBERT LANGLEY.

The bill (H. R. 7415) to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PAGE. Did some one ask that that go over?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; it is 2 o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. If it goes over because the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, I have nothing to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It went over because it was objected to when it was reached on the calendar.

KETCHIKAN POST, AMERICAN LEGION, ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 8460) to authorize the occupation and use of certain lands in Alaska by Ketchikan Post No. 3, American Legion, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Ketchikan Post No. 3, American Legion, to erect a building upon and use and occupy, for post purposes, so much of that certain tract of land adjacent to Tongass Narrows, Alaska, described as follows: Beginning at corner No. 1, within the corporate limits of the town or city of Ketchikan, Alaska, from which a stone marking the intersection of Mission and Stedman Streets bears north 16 degrees 16 minutes east 22 feet distant, and United States locating monument No. 4 bears south 37 degrees 15 minutes east 1,289.27 feet distant; thence south 49 degrees 7 minutes east 100 feet along the southwest side of Stedman Street to corner No. 2; thence south 81 degrees 39 minutes west 165.30 feet to corner No. 3; thence north 8 degrees 21 minutes west 75.74 feet to corner No. 4, on the south side of Stedman Street; thence north 81 degrees 39 minutes east 100 feet along the southerly side of Stedman Street to corner No. 1, the place of beginning; containing 10,046.90 square feet: Provided, That the permit hereby authorized may not be assigned, shall be subject to such terms and conditions as to occupancy and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be revocable by the Secretary of the Interior, after due notice to the permittee, when, in his opinion, the public interests so require: Provided further, That the title to all buildings erected on said lands by the permittees shall remain in them at all times, and said permittees may remove said buildings at any time; and if the permit be lawfully revoked, a period not exceeding one year shall be allowed for removal of buildings or improvements.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to know the status of House bill 7415. The Senator from North Carolina objected to its consideration, because the hour of 2 o'clock had arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It went over on objection. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. CALDER obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Lodge	Poindexter
Borah	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Broussard	Harreld	Moses	Smoot
Bursum	Harris	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Harrison	Newberry	Stanley
Capper	Heflin	Nicholson	Sterling
Caraway	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Sutherland
Culberson	Johnson	Norris	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Dial	Kendrick	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
du Pont	Keyes	Owen	Warren
Edge	King	Page	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Ladd	Pepper	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	La Follette	Phipps	Williams
Glass	Lenroot	Pittman	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY.

PROBLEMS OF TRANSPORTATION AND THEIR RELATION TO THE FARMER.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, problems of transportation challenge attention in increasing measure. The figures involved startle those not yet accustomed to think in terms of billions. But the immensity of our transportation problems is not their only claim upon our interest. Their immensity is only equaled by their diversity. A stranger, perusing our public prints, would inevitably be led to the conclusion that we had but recently discovered our railroads, our rivers, and our canals and were engaged in our initial effort to forge them into a workable, efficient, national system.

In one respect such a conclusion would state the fact. Our railroads, our rivers, and our man-made inland waterways are not new, but neither have they been forged into an efficient, practical transportation system. We are still a land of transportation units that await the design of the master organizer.

The transportation facilities of our Nation were not projected as links in a national system. The early settlements were planted at the mouths of rivers. Colonists pushed their way up the rivers into the wilderness. From widely separated communities the tide of migration pushed its way to the Alleghenies, crossed the mountain barriers, and swept into the lands beyond. A few national highways, the Erie Canal, and some timid railroad ventures represented our first large-scale transportation endeavors. The problem was always to meet present necessities. There were few who even dreamed what the future held for them. Pioneers pushed their way westward, westward, westward, building as they went, but building for their own needs and for their own time. Each district met its own transportation problems and solved them as best they could. And there were always new districts to be developed. We have now reached the point where we are touching shoulders clear across the continent. It has become necessary for us to link our isolated transportation units, designed primarily to meet sectional needs, into a transportation system that will be truly national in its scope.

Therefore, if we are to solve our transportation problems, and solve them we must, we can not permit ourselves to forget the needs of the system as a result of our enthusiastic devotion to some one of the particular units that ultimately will compose that system.

In this particular I believe we can, all of us, subscribe to a very excellent doctrine that has come out of the West and which was recently enunciated by Congressman A. P. NELSON, who said:

> We should not have a competition between the railroads and our inland waterways, but sympathetic cooperation. Indeed, we must supplant destructive competition between railways and waterways by a program of constructive cooperation. There is plenty of room for growth and expansion of railways in legitimate territory void of inland waterways. The whole country, the producers and the consumer, should have the benefit of the full and complete development of both railways and waterways through cooperative harmony.

SOME ARGUMENTS PROVE TOO MUCH.

That is sound in theory, and, so far as it has been exemplified in action, sound in practice. But programs of constructive cooperation involve more than extravagant emphasis upon some detail in the general plan. Deeply concerned as I am regarding our transportation problems, I am becoming more and more suspicious of arguments regarding them that prove too much. Doubtless the pooling of railroad equipment, the joint use of terminals, the consolidation of existing lines into logical systems will prove steps that will be of very material assistance in meeting our transportation difficulties. But I do not believe we can afford to go all the way with those who assert any one of these particular steps will insure our transportation salvation.

We are, relatively speaking, a young Nation, but we nevertheless have some history back of us. There was a time when national turnpikes were relied upon to serve all our transportation needs. We had our day, too, when we gazed upon the possibilities of artificial inland waterways through a mist of glory. Those were the times when enthusiasts not only proclaimed the canal as the ultimate highway but contended for the doctrine that through public works taxation, as a State or even governmental institution, would forever be annihilated. Public works were to make possible the complete development of the inexhaustible resources. They were relied upon not only to maintain State governments but as a source of possible revenue to the individual citizen, who was to receive a dividend from the public works his State controlled.

BUBBLES EXPLODED.

That vision vanished when the bubbles of Van Buren's day exploded. Then railroads came into being one by one. They were to be our salvation. Later it was the Interstate Commerce Commission that was to make it possible for the roads to meet our every transportation problem. Plan after plan, theory after theory, flashed across the screen.

The St. Lawrence waterways project has been presented as the answer—final, complete, conclusive—to a transportation problem. To that extent it is a masquerader. It is at best, in view of its existing conditions, an attempt to answer a price problem. The St. Lawrence project is vital to-day, because it represents a dream. Farmers, laboring under the glare of hot prairie suns, in years when prices were low, paused to wipe their brows, count their costs, tabulate their gains, and, gazing through the prairie haze, conjured up the vision of a cooling ocean beating upon the confines of their prairie homes. Well, the prairies are peopled by men and women whose forefathers lived by the sea.

SHADOW ACROSS NATION.

The St. Lawrence waterways project casts its shadow across the Nation because farmers worked long hours under the hot sun raising wheat that sold in the world market for a price they considered far too low.

The transportation problems of our people can not be solved except upon the basis of an all-American transportation system—a system that will link the railroad, the auto truck, the canal, the river, the ocean into one great union intelligently planned and executed in conformity with the plan devised to meet our national needs.

If we are to avoid the evils that inevitably follow patchwork effort, if we are to build symmetrically, each major transportation problem must be met upon a national rather than upon a sectional basis. We can not logroll ourselves to a state of maximum efficiency.

I have called your attention to the fact that the St. Lawrence project is, under present conditions, an answer to a price problem rather than a solution of a transportation difficulty.

SURPLUS OF FREIGHT CARS.

There was during the year of 1921 on an average transportation day a surplus of railway freight cars sufficient to entirely fill 23 tracks reaching all the way from New York City to Philadelphia, 90 miles distant, with enough cars left over to reach from Philadelphia to the seat of Princeton University. Or, in terms of tonnage, on any average day there were sufficient freight cars idle to move 13,431,520 tons of freight.

Idle freight cars in the United States during the past year ranged from 507,479 during the week of greatest surplusage to 80,203 during the week of least surplusage, and these figures do not include the idle cars owned by others beside the railway companies. On any average day there were 316,036 idle cars.

It could be urged, and perhaps with some measure of justice, that figures from 1921 are not thoroughly representative of our national experience. But neither are the figures of 1919, and it is upon the basis of the 1919 showing that the wheat farmer contends his crops rot upon the farm because the avenues of transportation are clogged with traffic. The answer to that claim is the daily average of 316,036 idle freight cars. This idle equipment is worth approximately $2,000,000,000. Figuring the investment on this idle equipment at 5 per cent, we have an annual interest loss of $100,000,000, a loss not alone to the railroads but to the country at large, which ultimately pays it.

MORE CENTS PER BUSHEL NEEDED.

No; it is not a transportation burr under the saddle that is causing the Middle West to gallop so madly. Price is the impelling motive. More cents per bushel and more bushels is the slogan of the wheat belt. From the wheat growers' standpoint, therefore, the St. Lawrence waterway must be judged upon the basis of its effect upon a bushel of wheat laid down in Liverpool.

Mr. Charles P. Craig can be presumed to speak with authority concerning the St. Lawrence project. He lays down two axioms in connection therewith.

First, he says the price of wheat at home is determined by the price paid for the surplus abroad. Very well, let us accept that. Then, says Mr. Craig:

> The Canadian Northwest can double its acreage, multiply it fourfold, eightfold even, before its land is utilized to the last acre.

That is the vision—a Canadian acreage multiplied eightfold—with which Craig would comfort the American wheat grower. Let us pause to consider the economic significance of these figures.

The peak wheat acreage in the United States was 75,694,000 acres, reached in 1919, an increase of 35 per cent over the acreage in 1910. Canada's peak was 19,125,968 acres in the same year, an increase of 115 per cent over the 1910 figure. Canada's wheat production increased from 132,000,000 bushels in 1910 to 263,000,000 bushels in 1920, an increase of 100 per cent. The production in the United States increased from 635,000,000 in 1910 to 833,000,000 in 1920, an increase of approximately 33 per cent. While production in the United States increased 33 per cent during the 1910 period, the value of the wheat crop increased 100 per cent, the 1910 value being $560,000,000, the 1920 figure being $1,197,000,000. During this same period the value of Canada's wheat crop increased 400 per cent, being $99,530,000 in 1910 and $427,356,000 in 1920.

The average price per acre of the land devoted to wheat in 1920 was $92. The average price of Canadian land now devoted to the production of wheat is $43.

Mr. President, I have here two tables, showing the increase in the value of wheat lands in Canada and in the principal wheat States in the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the tables may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to follow.

The following tables show the relative increase in Canadian and American wheat-growing lands:

Average value farms per acre in Canadian wheat Provinces.

Provinces.	1910	1920	Per cent increase.
Manitoba	$29	$39	34
Saskatchewan	22	32	45
Alberta	24	32	33
Ontario	48	70	45

Average value farms per acre in United States wheat States.

States.	1910	1920	Per cent increase.
Indiana	$74	$125	66
Illinois	108	187	80
Michigan	47	75	50
Wisconsin	57	98	100
Minnesota	45	109	100
Iowa	96	227	125
North Dakota	28	41	45
South Dakota	38	71	100
Nebraska	46	87	100
Montana	18	22	20
Wyoming	11	19	75
Idaho	46	69	50

CANADA JUST ENTERED LISTS.

Mr. CALDER. But this is only part of the picture. Canada has but entered the lists. Its wheat growers have not even begun to fight. There are in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta 120,894,000 acres under private ownership. The total number of acres surveyed up to January, 1920, was 199,757,000. Of this total, approximately 25,000,000 acres are now available for homestead entry. In addition to the surveyed areas there are large tracts in these Provinces which have been only partly surveyed. The partly surveyed tracts contain more than 250,000,000 acres.

A quarter section of land may be obtained as a homestead in these Provinces on the payment of an entry fee of $10. In northern Ontario a quarter section can be obtained for 50 cents an acre, one-quarter in cash.

Now here is the question: Granted equal transportation facilities, what will be the result of a contest in which 250,000,000 acres of land, valued at from 50 cents to $43 an acre, is pitted against 75,000,000 acres of land with an average value of $92 an acre?

Bear in mind that this proposed canal is ostensibly being built primarily to carry wheat. Divorce the project from its aggressive agrarian support and it collapses. I concede that perhaps this canal, if built, may carry wheat, but whose wheat, I ask you? The answer is unescapable—Canada's.

I will not venture an attempt to prophesy regarding the future of the United States as a wheat-exporting Nation. Herbert Hoover has given it as his opinion that within 10 years we will have become a wheat-importing people. I neither reject nor accept that conclusion. But I know of no one better qualified to speak upon this subject than our very able Secretary of Commerce.

MAY IMPORT WHEAT.

Before the war the United States imported wheat from Argentina. Europe's average demand for wheat in normal times was half a billion bushels. Canada supplied 200,000,000 bushels in good years and 100,000,000 bushels in poor years. Asiatic Russia, India, Argentina, and the United States supplied the remainder of the deficit. There is nothing in our past experience indicating that we can base our commercial future upon wheat exports. Indeed, there is no reason even for the hope we will have unlimited quantities of wheat to export. If you want to figure approximately how far the biggest wheat crop will go, allow 6 bushels of wheat per head for our population of 110,000,000 people; then set aside 100,000,000 bushels for seed. The rest of the crop we can export. Our normal production is well under 900,000,000 bushels. Our normal export figure is less than 100,000,000 bushels.

With these figures that I have submitted to you in mind, it is very easy indeed to understand why our Canadian brethren should be willing, even anxious, for us to construct a highway to the sea that will bring Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta a few days nearer to Liverpool. And it is easy to understand why Great Britain, the master wheat merchant of the world, should look with favor upon any plan we undertake that will make the resources of her own rich Provinces in any way more accessible to her.

CANADA NOT DEPENDENT ON OUR BOUNTY.

The time has come, I believe, when we should cease to regard either Canada or Great Britain as in any way dependent upon our bounty. It is quite possible for us to be a worthy cousin without attempting the rôles of father, mother, kindly uncle, and maiden aunt. We can, I believe, rest assured that our English and Canadian cousins are intelligently alive to their own interests.

If, after reading the glowing literature distributed in ton lots by the proponents of the St. Lawrence project, Canada does not proceed immediately to build the proposed St. Lawrence waterway, it can only be because her people do not believe the testimony so far offered.

Just what do the proponents of the St. Lawrence project assert they have proven?

First, that the proposed waterway will, in the amount of commerce that it carries, exceed the Panama Canal, rival the Suez Canal, and render the Nile a Mississippi River bayou in comparison. The St. Lawrence Canal is to be the mightiest artery of commerce on earth. Mr. Craig says so.

Montreal is to become a combined London, Liverpool, New York, Hamburg, and Hongkong.

Four hundred million tons of commerce a year—200,000,000 out, 200,000,000 in. These are the figures some St. Lawrence waterways proponents use. When they fairly hit their stride six hundred million tons a year become a vivid possibility.

ST. LAWRENCE ADVOCATES OVERENTHUSIASTIC.

Four hundred million tons of commerce a year carried by 3,000 ships! Allowing three weeks for the round trip from Montreal to Duluth and conceding that the St. Lawrence will be free from ice and fog at least seven months of every year, approximately 14 ships would pass a given point every day, going one way or the other.

This would indeed be quite a procession, particularly in view of the fact that the import and export tonnage of the United States was only 100,384,206 tons in 1920—a banner year.

In order in any way to give credence to the figures proclaimed by the St. Lawrence waterway enthusiasts, it is necessary to conclude that their expectations are based not upon the tonnage that is going out but upon the tonnage that is coming in. The proponents of the plan may have visioned the St. Lawrence Canal as the answer to the riddle of how Europe intends paying its debt with imports. Regarding this aspect I can only venture the sheerest surmise. What will the St. Lawrence deliver at the door of the Middle West?

Cargoes of crockery, perhaps at cut-rate prices to solace and sustain the crockery interests of Ohio.

Steel bars and plates delivered at the nearest Lake port—a contribution to Pittsburgh.

Shiploads of furniture for Grand Rapids.

And for the farmer, what? If the canal works as well as the enthusiasts say it will, it will deliver for the use of the middle western farmer shiploads of wheat and shiploads of beef from the Argentine. Yes; and mutton from Australia.

These are the possibilities if this proposed waterway works out one-half as well as its proponents would have us believe.

But there is more to the plan than commerce. There is the water power. Do not forget the water power. One million five hundred thousand horsepower! Four million five hundred thousand horsepower! That depends upon who is telling the story.

Indeed, when the case is stated by its most enthusiastic friends the proposed waterway stands forth, looms up as the greatest opportunity for private investors that has appeared upon the financial horizon in 10 generations. There is some support for this suggestion. One of New York's leading financial journals, in the course of a recent editorial, said:

INVESTIGATION DISCLOSES WEAKNESS.

Private interests have spent several hundred thousand dollars within the past few years investigating the whole question from end to end. As a result of the reports of their engineers they are now ready to place high funds of their own in the development of power along the river. All they ask and all they should ask is that they be given the opportunity of undertaking these enterprises under reasonable terms and conditions (including proper Government supervision) at their own expense and risk. At far less expense than would be the case under the commission plan, the Governments of Canada and the United States could obtain better navigation facilities by combining their plans with those of private capital and bearing only that part of the expense which is properly chargeable to navigation. If the canal is to be justified on any basis, it is one of this sort.

The proper course for the authorities, both in Washington and Albany, and of course in Canada, to pursue is clear enough. Water-power rights should be leased on equitable terms (under arrangements such as those outlined in the Federal water power act) to the highest responsible bidder, and along with the developments undertaken by private capital the Governments of the two countries—if prospective traffic justifies it—should erect proper canal facilities.

All of this suggests that when the wheat chaff enveloping this project has been blown, some hydroelectric grain will be found.

There are other reasons why Canada should be interested in the canal. She is a growing country. Her own commerce is increasing by leaps and bounds. She is particularly concerned with the fuel problem, being, as her editors and statesmen are accustomed to remark, now dependent upon the United States for coal. The Canadian Deep Waterway and Power Association makes out a very convincing case—for Canada. It says:

During 1919 Canada imported 13,000,000 tons of bituminous coal from the United States at a cost of $130,000,000.

In Alberta and in the maritime Provinces, Canada has a plentiful supply of bituminous coal, but the high rail freight rates prevent its distribution.

Open the St. Lawrence locks to large freighters and Canadian bituminous coal will supply the Canadian market.

EXCELLENT PROPOSAL FOR CANADA.

Very excellent reasons why the canal should be constructed—by Canada. The power situation is equally interesting. Concerning this the Canadian Association says:

The power contained in the rapids of the St. Lawrence River can be developed to yield 4,200,000 horsepower of electrical energy, of which amount 3,200,000 horsepower will belong to Canada.

Three million two hundred thousand electrical horsepower is equivalent to 64,000,000 tons of bituminous coal annually.

The St. Lawrence power can be developed and a deep waterway through the rapids can be constructed for an estimated cost of $200,000,000, only 50 per cent more than one year's bill for Canada's importation of American bituminous coal.

By this showing Canada's interest in the proposed waterway outruns that of Uncle Sam's by the ratio of 3 to 1. Then, too, Canada looks to the canal to save it 5 cents a bushel on its wheat. It is seeking an outlet for its millions upon millions of undeveloped land. This is the story the Canadian Deep Waterway and Power Association tells:

During the year ending March 31, 1920, Canada imported goods valued at $1,064,516,169.

The Provinces west from and including Ontario consumed over two-thirds of all imports, representing a value in round figures of $709,000,000.

This left only one-third of the value of $354,000,000 for distribution in the Provinces served directly by the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, and St. John.

Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta paid high freight rates for a long rail haul from one of the eastern seaports.

Open the St. Lawrence to ocean steamers and have your imports carried at a cheap water rate to your nearest lake port.

I cite these facts for the purpose of calling your attention not only to Canada's interest in the proposed waterway but to its preponderance of interest.

Its wheat farmers have a greater stake in the proposed canal than our own.

CANADA HAS WATER-POWER INTEREST.

Its manufacturing interests have a greater stake in the water power it is proposed to develop and for Canadians generally the proposed waterway is potentially far more important than it is to the people of our own country.

If these facts prove anything, and they are Canadian facts, they prove that if our Canadian and English cousins are smart traders they will build this canal on their own territory. And I, for one, am willing to concede they are smart traders.

Our Canadian cousins, when they are discussing matters among themselves, point out that it is important that Canada should look to itself. Both the United States and Canada, they say, should as far as transportation facilities are concerned "develop along sound economic lines." These are words of wisdom. Sound economic development for us calls for the projection of the all-American transportation system in which inland and coastal waterways must be given their proper place. The Middle West has two highways to the sea.

The Mississippi River, the Illinois River, and the drainage canal present the possibilities of a through route from New Orleans to Chicago and the Great Lakes—the New York Barge Canal, a route to New York. The proper development of either one, the proper utilization of either one, would in time inevitably compel the construction of the St. Lawrence waterways project by the Canadians themselves if the plan possesses the merits its proponents claim for it.

A sane program providing for water transportation requires the development of our intercoastal system, the improvement of our inland rivers, and the construction of essential inland canals.

WILL COST OVER A BILLION.

Estimates of the ultimate cost of the St. Lawrence waterways plan, completed in all its details, run from $1,100,000,000, the figure quoted by the New York State Commission, to $1,450,000,000, which is the estimate of Hugh L. Cooper. The cost of finishing division four of the proposed waterway is conceded to be in excess of $250,000,000 by the friends of the project. Estimates that are based upon facts rather than upon hope and enthusiasm all tend to show that $500,000,000 is a minimum figure.

The average annual expenditures of the United States for improvement of rivers and harbors during the last 20 years has been $30,000,000. The actual expenditure for the maintenance and improvement of rivers and harbors in 1921 was $40,811,000.

FUNDAMENTALLY UNJUST.

With these figures in mind, the fundamental injustice of stepping across the border to spend $500,000,000 for waterways improvements is apparent. For the amount of money that it will be necessary for us to invest in the St. Lawrence scheme, under the plan as now projected, it would be possible to finish the intercoastal ocean highway along the Atlantic, construct a canal across Florida, provide the necessary intracoastal development from Florida to Galveston, make necessary improvements on the Mississippi system from New Orleans to St. Louis, canalize the Illinois River, and convert the Chicago drainage canal into a practical transportation link. This series of improvements would provide practical waterways from New York to Chicago by way of the Gulf, every mile of the route being one that could be traversed by craft built to navigate an inland system.

And when the New York to Chicago waterway had been constructed there would still be money enough available to go far toward connecting Pittsburgh to the Lakes and with the Mississippi by means of practical inland waterways.

New York is ready to unite with all her sisters in this mighty galaxy of independent Commonwealths in creating this great scheme of intersecting national waterways. We do not want any money from you to help finance our inland waterways. We are not asking for a single dollar to pay for the upkeep of the barge canal. We gladly defray these expenses out of our own resources, and we would with equal gladness pay our share of any expense involved in the more complete development of the waterways, which can be made so useful to commerce, industry, and agriculture in this country.

Somehow there is an impression in Congress and in the country that those who ask for money to improve indispensable harbors and useful rivers are seeking a share of the contents of a national "pork barrel." This is a very unfortunate position to take in relation to such vital improvements. Every plan is treated on its merits. If what is proposed is impracticable or is evidently a mere attempt to raid the Treasury in the interests of some locality, then it should be instantly and finally rejected.

But there are many legitimate projects proposed or in contemplation, and they are all within American territory. Somebody in authority in Illinois recently said that navigation for comparatively deep-draft ships would be open from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico in a very few years. If this is so, then I can only say that I congratulate the people and the States through which the Mississippi River runs. It is an all-American project, and if sound should have the support of every section.

New York will not stand aside and sulk if the ports of New Orleans, Galveston, Charleston, Boston, San Francisco, Seattle, and Portland enjoy more than usual prosperity by bringing them through the development of inland waterways in closer touch with the great producing sections of the Nation. We will do our best to help you. We will not grumble if some of the trade, or a large part of it, is diverted from our great port. If other ports can be made rich and prosperous through the building of canals, through the larger use of navigable rivers, and through the improvement of inland shipping conditions generally, the Empire State will not be impoverished. On the contrary, the benefits obtained through such a policy of inland waterway expansion will be reflected in the increased volume of trade between the Atlantic seaboard and the inland States.

Let the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and other rivers be improved. If it can be shown that money spent on them is going to be productive of increased national wealth and improved transportation facilities, New York will joyfully join in a concerted drive to complete these enterprises.

And I submit to you that this series of improvements is more essential to our agricultural and industrial welfare than any possible canal in Canada, which the Canadians must inevitably construct themselves without calling for our assistance, if the project is feasible.

The country has recently been deluged with statistics tending to prove that New York is the "neck of the bottle" for the entire Nation.

How untrue these statements are is shown by the following comparative figures giving the exports from southern ports in millions of dollars during the year 1920 as compared with the year 1890.

Here are the figures:

Ports.	1890	1920
Baltimore	74	339
Norfolk and Newport News	21	226
Wilmington, N. C.	7	35
Charleston	14	32
Savannah	31	261
Jacksonville		12
Pensacola	3	11
Mobile	3	88
New Orleans	108	589
Galveston	24	598

New York is not even the neck of the bottle as far as wheat exports are concerned, as the following table shows:

Custom district.	Bushels.
	1917	1920
Maryland	27,539,000	27,798,000
Virginia	115,000	17,684,000
Florida	34,000	21,000
Galveston	21,822,000	46,561,000
Mobile
New Orleans	25,270,000	48,696,000
San Antonio		77,000

NEW YORK PLAYING BIG RÔLE.

But even though New York were the "neck of the bottle" it by no means is playing a minor rôle in our transportation drama. Its offering to the Nation, its helping hand extended to the Middle West, holds half a billion dollars for port improvements and $167,000,000 already expended upon the barge canal.

This $667,000,000 is contributed unconditionally. It will strengthen the position of New York, that is true; but it will likewise strengthen the position of the Middle West. This contribution to the Nation's transportation facilities does not come from the Federal Treasury. It is New York's contribution. Therefore let those who are without sectional rancor answer this question:

Given equal facilities in either direction would the Middle West prefer to route its commerce through Canada or through American ports? When half a billion more expended upon the port of New York is added to the $167,000,000 investment in the barge canal, the West's outlet to the sea will be all or more than is sought through the proposed St. Lawrence route.

MIDDLE WEST LOOKS TO EUROPE.

The eyes of the Middle West are now turned toward Europe, war-stricken Europe, as the means of our economic salvation. The tides of American commerce, if our Nation is to play its part in the world, can not all make Liverpool their ultimate goal. They must flow to the south—to Mexico, Cuba, the West Indies, South America, and through our own Panama Canal—on to the Far East. It is not the old lands—the war-wrecked lands—that will be the theaters in which the contest for commercial supremacy is decided. The new lands, the undeveloped territories, are the lands of opportunity.

The path of the Middle West to the Far East does not lie by way of Labrador.

In recent literature issued by the Great Lakes Tidewater Association statements are made concerning the savings upon the following commodities if commerce moved by way of the St. Lawrence:

Millions of feet of mahogany from South America.
Millions of feet of cedar from Yucatan.
Trainloads of pineapples from Cuba.
Thousands of tons of sugar from Cuba.
Scores of tons of chicle from Yucatan.
One hundred and fourteen thousand two hundred and four tons of coffee from Brazil.
Fruits, nuts, and vegetable oils in almost unlimited quantities.

All of these products come from the south. On the basis of its own figures the magical highway for which the West is searching extends from the Gulf to the Great Lakes, and here is the evidence.

In the fiscal year of 1921 exports to South America and the Far East were as follows:

Cuba	$420,399,940
Japan	253,210,035
Argentina	124,299,424
Uruguay	17,564,731
Mexico	154,993,154
Brazil	147,520,940
Chile	113,193,507

Not all our commercial future lies in Europe. Our argosies must sail south and to the Far East as well.

Much has been said concerning the economic misfortunes that have been visited upon agriculture. No one realizes more keenly than I the tragedy of unrequited toil or the blight that touches a nation when the sower and the tiller, faithful to his task, finds in the harvest no adequate reward. From this center of industrialism we can extend to the Middle West the hand of comradeship and tell them that we understand. We, too, have suffered; and we know, moreover, that whatever misfortunes he may have experienced, the farmer has at least not been forced to eat out his heart in idleness.

It is not within reason to expect that when millions of our artisans lack employment agriculture will be uniformly prosperous. The fortunes of the consumer and producer are linked in an eternal bond. Prosperity can not be fenced in any narrow district nor can economic misfortune be confined to a single class or locality.

But the economic skies are brightening. There are better days ahead. Even so, we can not solve our problems solely upon the basis of a localized water cure. We must beware of the arguments that prove too much, of the remedies that are cures for every ill.

Pictures of the Leviathan docking at Chicago—a steamship drawing 42 feet of water arriving at its destination through a 23-foot channel—may represent a pleasantry inspired by enthusiasm. Tales of a canal that will straightway convert Chicago into a city of 10,000,000 souls may be a permissible form of propaganda. But such enthusiasm entails certain penalties, and under its smile there are hidden many cruelties.

NOT A HEALTHY CONDITION.

It is not a healthy condition when every little hamlet bordering upon our inland lakes sees for itself a metropolitan future. These dreams are pictured in terms of the docks that will one day grace the village water front, and keen-witted real estate men proceed diligently to capitalize local credulity. It is not a healthy sign when villages 60 miles from the Great Lakes proceed to plan futures that will be made possible solely through the improvement of the St. Lawrence as a waterway. Prosperity does not come this way. It is not dumped upon us suddenly in bucketfuls. We can only assure our commercial future by diligent work and careful planning and we can not achieve our destiny upon the basis of sectional appeals, rivalries, or animosities.

I would not in any way hamper the commercial development of Canada, neither would I rob our own rivers and harbors in order to secure funds with which to conduct an experiment in which Canada has a preponderant interest. If we build to meet our needs and Canada builds to meet her needs, both will develop along sound economic lines. And upon such development we can confidently face our future friendship and mutual prosperity.

COST TEN TIMES GREATER THAN SUEZ.

No great waterway is local in its effects. All the nations of the earth derive benefits from the canals at Panama and at Suez. They are benefited by an open Bosporus and by an unobstructed Danube. Yet while all great waterways benefit all nations, none of the links in the systems that we have dug are under international control. The final cost of the proposed St. Lawrence Canal would be ten times that of the Suez Canal and four times that of the Panama Canal. Great Britain controls the Suez. The Panama Canal is ours. The flag has followed our investments. Somehow I feel that when we finance a scheme we should also control it, and control it absolutely.

This was the view of that great American citizen, the late Theodore Roosevelt. In digging the Panama Canal he might have gone into partnership with France, Great Britain, Colombia, or other Latin-American Nations. It was suggested at that time by many men whose advice could not lightly be disregarded that international partnership in the construction of the great waterway would be a wise policy to adopt. There might be little fear of international complications following such an agreement. But the then President determined that if America was to finance any part of the effort she would finance the whole of it. Then he determined that the canal would be wholly in American territory.

Complete control of the canal or the abandonment by America of any part in it was the wise policy of Mr. Roosevelt. Events have justified that course. The President acquired for America what is known as the Canal Zone. No question of sovereignty has arisen, and the world recognizes the right of the American flag to float there and respects fully the authority of this country.

If England and France had united with America in building the canal and had created a tripartite authority over it Germany might very well have bottled it up during the early stages of the World War. Mr. Roosevelt insisted that America should not enter into partnership with other powers in the construction of canals or any other means or facilities for transportation. It would not now be wise to depart from that policy.

Notwithstanding our investments there and our undisputed ownership our ships still pay toll and enjoy no privileges not accorded the vessels of other nations. We have been invited to double the investment we made at Panama for the purpose of constructing a waterway we will not control, and our ships will enjoy no rights upon the St. Lawrence not extended to our keenest competitors.

While we must play our part as a builder, I believe I am echoing the sentiments of every patriotic citizen when I say that where we build with the Nation's funds there our flag should float as the symbol and token not only of our ownership but of our control.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interfere with the regular order of business, in which I know the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is deeply interested, but I had not anticipated such an address as we have listened to from the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. It was pertinent to nothing before the Senate. I can not, however, allow that speech to go unchallenged. At this time I shall make no extended speech on the St. Lawrence waterway project, but I must make a brief statement in order that the RECORD may not show my assent to what the Senator has said.

It is a most remarkable thing that Senators and others who advocate general waterway improvement can see benefits only when such improvement lies within the borders of their own States. It does not come with good grace from representatives of New York State to deprecate the expenditure of public money in the development of a proposition which would result in such great general good not only to the Northwest, and especially to the Middle Northwest, but to the entire country in general. We have spent more money upon the port of New York, many times over, than the wildest estimator would ever figure this particular development would cost.

The Senator has quoted figures as to the cost of the project, ignoring absolutely the report of the engineers who were appointed by Canada and the United States not only to determine the feasibility of the project but to investigate and report its probable cost. The cost of the development, as reported by the International Joint Commission, would be $252,000,000. But suppose it costs twice that much, which no one informed believes it would cost unless we develop a larger amount of electrical power, which of itself would be self-supporting, the project reported upon would justify the expenditure. The work we are contending for would cost $252,000,000, approximately about half the cost of the Panama Canal and but a fraction of the Federal money spent on New York harbor. That cost was estimated at the time of the high prices which existed during the last two or three years, and we all know that those prices are now coming down. It is a well-known fact, sir, that if there were nothing but water power developed, if no other practical thing were achieved, the cost of the enterprise would be warranted by that particular item alone.

The Senator from New York said that the project is to be conducted to some extent in Canadian waters. Of course, that is true. The St. Lawrence River is the one great outlet from the Middle West through the Great Lakes to the ocean which in some of its course is an international boundary and in some of the balance of its course is within the borders of Canada. But we get the full benefit of whatever improvement is made.

The Senator from New York said he can see that it is for the advantage of Canada in her wheat-producing sections to have the waterway completed. Why, sir, Canada could not under any circumstances profit as much by the waterway as will the United States. Canada is not excited over the proposition; she is not overenthusiastic over it, because her railroads to-day afford her practically ample facilities for getting her products to market. That is not the case in the United States. We are short of railroad transportation facilities. We must have more and better transportation. If there was any one thing fully demonstrated in the late war it was that the port of New York and the other Atlantic seaboard ports were congested to an extent which prevented the early termination of that war. It meant the loss of American boys, it meant the loss of foreign sons, because we could not get our products to the seaboard and onto the ships.

The Senator has said that New York furnishes ample facilities for the admission of imported products into the Middle West. Why, sir, the Great Lakes region is within an hour's ride of the center, not only of the population of the United States but of production. The Senator asked what will go into the Middle West from abroad. The products that now come from abroad through New York and some of the other Atlantic ports will go through this new facility from point of origin to point of consumption. Why should the great Middle West pay tribute to New York? Oh, it may be an idle dream to think of extending the seaboard into the Great Lakes region—a thousand miles farther into the interior of the country. We are not suggesting, and no one has suggested, that ships with 42 feet would pass through this waterway. It is a well-known fact, however, that about 80 per cent of all the ships which sail the seas between the United States and Europe to-day draw less than 25 feet of water, and that is the depth which it is proposed the canal shall have.

Mr. President, the project can not be defeated by the opposition of New York. And that is practically the only State from which organized opposition comes to-day. Yet it is the State of New York which has received more from the Federal Treasury in the development of her great water ports than any other State in the Union. I do not object to that. I do not hesitate to vote for the appropriation of money that is necessary to improve a harbor which from the national viewpoint should be improved, but I shall look with a great deal of complacency upon the proposition of carrying population a little farther into the West in order not to congest it at the seaboard. It will make for a better country. It will make for greater economy.

When the Senator confines his argument largely to wheat and other grain, and admits at the same time that Canada would save perhaps 5 cents a bushel on her wheat for the Canadian farmers by this improved waterway, and then scoffs at the proposition that the American farmer would receive any benefit, I would remind him that it has been figured out conclusively that all kinds of grain that are shipped from the Middle West to the seaboard contribute to the State of New York, either at Buffalo or New York City, from 6 to 8 cents a bushel simply in the handling and rehandling of the grain from the trains to the elevator and from the elevator onto the boats and back again to the elevator.

No; we can not get away from the proposition, sir, that this improvement spells economy. It is going to succeed, the selfish opposition of any particular section to the contrary notwithstanding. This is a great natural outlet. If Senators will look at the map, they will find that the St. Lawrence River is the most direct line to Liverpool from the Middle West. Not only that, sir, but it is not true that the benefits of the proposed waterway will be confined simply to exports and imports. Much of the stuff that is raised in the Northwest or Middle Northwest and consumed on the Atlantic seaboard can be carried there directly by the ships with one loading and one unloading. I repeat, sir, that the proposed waterway is going to be accomplished. It is with no enmity to New York, and it is with no enmity to any part of the country that I say this. It is simply a realization of a natural demand which the country is bound to recognize.

I repeat, Mr. President, that I had not known the matter was to come up at this time for discussion. It is a live question. No ridicule and no misstatements of fact will prevail against it. I know that the Senator from New York did not wish to misstate facts—he did nothing of the kind intentionally—but he is not acquainted with the facts. If he had been he would have made a different speech from the one which he so carefully prepared and presented here to-day.

I have said this much, Mr. President, and I beg the pardon of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], who I know is anxious to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business, because I did not feel that the Senator should go unchallenged and I by my silence, perhaps, be understood as acquiescing in his statements. Nothing is further from my mind or the minds of those who are interested in the project than agreeing to the alleged arguments of the Senator from New York this afternoon.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, it is not my intention to speak on the pending unfinished business further than to call attention to the pending motion, which is that the joint resolution shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield in order that I may make the point of no quorum?

Mr. EDGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Harris	Newberry	Spencer
Bursum	Heflin	Nicholson	Stanley
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Norris	Sutherland
Caraway	Kendrick	Oddie	Swanson
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Townsend
Dial	King	Page	Wadsworth
Edge	Ladd	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	La Follette	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
Gerry	Lodge	Reed	Watson, Ga.
Gooding	McNary	Sheppard	Willis

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] are absent on official business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I propose to take but five minutes of the time of the Senate this afternoon merely to draw attention to the parliamentary situation as I understand it. The pending motion is to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill which I introduced at the same time I introduced the joint resolution has already, by unanimous consent, been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which I believe is the perfectly proper committee to consider the merits of the bill. I hope they will give public hearings and consider those merits. The joint resolution now before the Senate, however, is quite a different proposition. It is not in any way confined to legal questions, but quite the contrary. I can not conceive that the Committee on the Judiciary, composed as it is entirely of lawyers, would want to assume the responsibility which is imposed by the joint resolution. The joint resolution was referred in the ordinary way to the Committee on Commerce, because in its text it included an investigation of foreign and domestic commerce. It was reported by the Committee on Commerce to the Senate, then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and was by that committee reported to the Senate. So that a motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary would seem to me to be entirely out of place.

I should like to have as expeditiously as possible all the debate which is desired on the joint resolution and then secure a direct vote on it, but the reference of the resolution in this way to a committee would seem to me to be entirely inconsistent. Section 2 of the joint resolution reads:

> SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States and the markets of foreign countries, in so far as the same directly affect industry and commerce of the United States, including questions as to production, distribution, labor, and business methods, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation, if any, as it may deem best upon these subjects, with a special reference to the most effective ways and means to revive industry and to stimulate foreign and domestic trade, to stabilize business conditions as to the future, to minimize the danger and distress of recurring periods of business depression with their resultant cycles of general unemployment, and to define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Certainly the text of the joint resolution itself furnishes plain evidence that the Committee on the Judiciary would hardly, in the ordinary way, be concerned with a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate business situations throughout the United States and the possibility of obtaining foreign markets. Almost all of the debate on yesterday centered upon the one thought which is carried out in the bill which is now before the Committee on the Judiciary, the one thought of ascertaining if it were legal to delegate to a governmental tribunal the power to furnish those applying for it information as to what they could or could not do under the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act or other acts of a similar character. The discussion was mostly between the lawyer Members of the Senate. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] took the position that Congress undoubtedly had that power and could delegate certain administrative functions to the Federal Trade Commission or any other tribunal they might elect. Other Senators took the counter view; but so far as that question is concerned it can, and in my judgment should, be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and they now have before them a bill which will enable them to give that matter consideration.

The joint resolution before the Senate is quite a different matter. It relates entirely and exclusively to an investigation upon the part of a congressional joint committee to hear from business men their suggestions, and so forth, as to how, if any congressional action can assist, the present depression in industrial circles can be to some extent improved. They are asking for nothing but an official congressional body to whom they can come and tell their story and their troubles, and it seems to me that a debate on the possibility of amending or repealing the Sherman Act is entirely apart from any contemplated action so far as this joint resolution is concerned.

This joint resolution establishes no policy. It simply delegates to a committee of Congress the power to investigate and report if they find it is possible to suggest any remedial legislation, and that is the only question before the Senate to-day. I appreciate that any question in regard to the Sherman Act, its amendment or its operation, would necessarily involve the Senate in an endless debate. When this committee, if it is authorized, comes back to the Senate and to the House with recommendations, whatever they are, then, of course, the Senate and the House will consider those recommendations. It seems to me it is a reflection upon the Senate or upon the House to anticipate in advance that those recommendations can not be satisfactorily considered and disposed of when that committee makes its report.

In conclusion, I simply want to emphasize the point that I believe it is the duty of Congress to provide an opportunity for the business interests of this country, large and small, to be able to tell of their troubles in a way that may develop proper legislative cooperation. This joint resolution has been introduced in the House by Representative MCARTHUR, of Oregon. It is not sectional in its viewpoint. We can not get farther apart than from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Every State in the Union is interested in trying in some way to overcome the present industrial depression. It involves exchange; it involves the use of our merchant marine; it involves all those matters that industry and commerce must necessarily deal with; and this committee, just as the agricultural inquiry committee listened to the difficulties and troubles that the agriculturists of the country were undergoing, will listen, I assume, to the difficulties and troubles of the industrial world, the millions of men and women who are involved to-day from the standpoint of their employment or nonemployment. Will Congress refuse the business men of this country an opportunity to have that type of a committee to whom they can appeal?

Mr. KING and Mr. OVERMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if the paramount object of this joint resolution is not to enable business organizations and corporations to organize in such a way that they may secure the benefits of combination and yet avoid the penalties of the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. EDGE. Not at all. It is one of the suggested subjects that the committee would investigate or look into, so specified in the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. The Senator has used several times the expression "remedial legislation." Is not the only remedial legislation which the Senator seeks to have an act passed by Congress that will legalize trade combinations such as the Eddy combinations of which we have been hearing so much, particularly in the Hardwood Lumber case?

Mr. EDGE. Absolutely not. I tried to make that just as plain and clear as I could in my argument yesterday. If the Senator wishes me to repeat what I said, the possibility of delegating to a Federal bureau certain interpretive administrative powers certainly should be given consideration. If such powers can be delegated—and lawyer Members of the Senate say that they can—I am sure that the Senate of the United States would be glad to see business men kept out of the courts, if by conference with representatives of the Federal Trade Commission they were given such advice as would keep them out of the courts; but so far as going any farther than that is concerned, and as to whether or not that is possible, that is a matter for the committee to report back to Congress. I contend that this continued suggestion, anticipating that an effort is to be made to build up combinations in restraint of trade, is not justified by the facts; and, after all is said and done, when the committee come back and reports, if they should say, "The Sherman Act should be repealed," or whatever they might report, it would be entirely up to Congress to give it every consideration, as they do any recommendation that comes to this body.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator knows that in practically every business in the United States to-day—manufacturing business as well as the agencies organized for the purpose of disposing of the products of manufacture—there are organizations, and those organizations meet together, from the Standard Oil Co. down, and directly or indirectly they fix prices, and they contribute by their action to the maintenance of a monopoly, more or less, or to the stifling of competition. It seems to me that in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States many of these combinations which I believe are illegal are considerably frightened, and they want Congress to legalize their organizations or to point the way by which they can organize and maintain organization in order to bring about combinations or to restrict competition.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah implies very plainly that a large majority of the business men of this country are not honest; in other words, that they want to be given immunity from existing laws, or words to that effect. I can not think that any Senator of the United States believes that a majority of the business men of this country are not good citizens or are dishonest. As a matter of fact, speaking of the Standard Oil Co. and other large corporations, as I think I pointed out yesterday, the large companies are not members of these trade associations. None of them are members of these trade associations. It is not necessary for them to be. They have all the information in their own organizations. The members of these trade associations are the smaller business interests scattered all over the country.

Suppose for a moment—and then I am through—that the trade associations were practically legislated out of business. Does not the Senator realize that that would naturally compel large monopolies? If these small concerns in Texas and Louisiana and other States did not have the benefit of these organizations to be given information and standardization and various things that help most naturally in cooperation, they would naturally be more or less consolidated and amalgamated. The very existence of trade associations, instead of making for monopoly, prevents monopoly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EDGE. I yield the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator know that a few years ago an investigation by an industrial commission, such as the Senator asks for, was held at a cost of $800,000, and now there are 80 volumes that can be had that will give the Senator all the information he wants?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; I know something of that; but I am sure the Senator realizes that since then we have gone through a great war. Business has been entirely put out of gear and joint. The situation between this country and other countries abroad is entirely changed. Anything that we did 8 or 10 or 15 years ago, so far as economic and business life is concerned, is practically worthless to-day. We can not live 15 years ago. We have to live in the present period and under present conditions, and bring our knowledge and our investigations down to date.

Mr. OVERMAN. After we get the report, will we not be in the same position that we will with the other reports? Nobody will ever read them. They will be put up here in the top of the Capitol and sold as waste paper.

Mr. EDGE. We did not do that with the agricultural inquiry committee, did we?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one question?

Mr. EDGE. Gladly.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator from New Jersey, I think, misapprehends the statement of the Senator from Utah. Because a man or a concern is not prepared to obey to the letter a given law, it does not necessarily follow that he is dishonest. For instance, there are great numbers of people in this country who do not obey the Volstead law, but I do not think they are all crooks.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I had intended to ask the Senator to lay aside this measure in order that I might take up the appropriation bill; but I have been informed that one of the Senators desires to study the appropriation bill further, and I shall therefore wait until to-morrow to take it up. I think I shall give notice to the Senator, however, that if his joint resolution is not disposed of by to-morrow I shall move to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, there is much more in this apparently innocuous joint resolution than appears on its face. Were I speaking to-day not in behalf of the honest enforcement of the law prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade or monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the business of these United States; had I a brief only for big business; did I speak only in the interest of great incorporated concerns, I should be just as much opposed to this pernicious proposition as I am to-day.

I distinctly recall that 10 or 12 years ago the chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, appearing before a committee of which I was chairman, earnestly insisted upon the naming of a commission authorized to fix prices for that concern; and I advised him most respectfully then that he was a socialist, and did not know it. It was my great pleasure the other day to review a little volume, "The State against the Man," a compend of the essays of Herbert Spencer, and I read a very able introduction to one of those essays by Judge Elbert H. Gary, the chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, in which, adopting the aphorism of Jefferson that "they are best governed who are least governed," he made the most complete and conclusive answer I have ever read to the argument he had made 10 years ago before the committee investigating the affairs of his great corporation.

